I present resolutions of the executive committee of the Chamber of Commerce of Dayton, Ohio, relative to the enactment of legislation inimical to the railroad interests of the country. Inasmuch as the memorial is very important and is brief, I ask that it be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

There being no objection, the memorial was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Committee on Interstate Commerce and ordered to be printed in the Record, as follows:

Whereas under normal conditions the railroads of the United States employ approximately 2,000,000 men, to whom they pay wages approximating the enormous sum of $1,500,000,000; and

Whereas for many months past the railroads have been and are now confronted with a condition which makes necessary great reductions in working forces and curtailment in the purchase of supplies needful in the operation and maintenance of their properties, as well as in the purchase of new equipment and extension of lines, it being estimated that at the present time there is idle equipment representing the enormous sum of $225,000,000, exclusive of locomotives; and

Whereas all industrial and commercial interests, together with the interests of wage-earners and all other classes of citizens, are affected, either directly or indirectly, correspondingly with the prosperity or adversity of the railroads, which apparently are greatly annoyed and seriously handicapped in their management by drastic, unwise, and injurious legislative restrictions, involving in many instances heavy and unnecessary expenses: Therefore be it

Resolved, by the executive committee of the Chamber of Commerce of Dayton, Ohio, in session this 6th day of January, 1909, That while we do not advocate relaxation of the exercise of reasonable and proper governmental authority over the railroads, we do advocate more conservative consideration of their rights and interests, and we respectfully arge upon all Members of Congress, all members of legislatures of this and other States, and of all railroad commissions, as well as the general public, to encourage the return of railroad business to normal conditions by ceasing and discountenancing hasty and ill-considered criticism and unjust censure of this great and most important factor of our Industrial and commercial life, and by the enactment of such new railroad legislation only as after the most rigid investigation shall determine clear

Resolved, That the secretary be, and he hereby is, instructed to send copies of the foregoing to each member of the legislature of this State, to the Members of the United States Senate from Ohlo, to the Representative in Congress from this district, and to the Dayton daily papers.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan presented a concurrent resolution of the legislature of the State of Michigan, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed in

the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed in the Record, as follows:

Whereas it has been the policy of this country from the beginning to maintain a small Regular Army, and in times of war to rely upon the patriotism of the people to rally as volunteers in defense of the national flag; and
Whereas it is a recognized fact that the civil war, 1861–1865, forms the most sanguinary chapter in the history of the world; that the Regular Army during the struggle was maintained at about 25,000 men, while the volunteers numbered more than 2,500,000 of officers and enlisted men; and
Whereas it is a recognized fact that the Union of these States was preserved and the national authority maintained by the patriotism, fortitude, and valor of the volunteers, to whom this great united people now enjoying the inestimable blessings of a preserved Union owe a debt of gratitude that can never be paid: Therefore Resolved by the house of representatives (the senate concurring). That we request the Senators and Representatives of the Sixtieth Congress from the State of Michigan to aid in the prompt enactment of a law in effect creating a volunteer retired list, upon which may be placed with retired pay upon application the surviving officers of the Army, Navy, and marines of the United States who served with credit during the civil war; such survivors now constituting a small remnant of that body of gallant men who led the Union forces to final victory;
Resolved further, That in our opinion the precedents of the congressional legislation fully justify the enactment of this law, namely, the acts of 1828 and 1832, granting retired pay during life to the surviving officers and enlisted men of the Army, Navy, and marines of the Revolution; the act of 1905 providing for the retirement of two officers of volunteers, namely, Gen. Joseph R. Hawley and P. J. Osterhaus, with the rank and retired pay to the officers of the Regular Army and Navy, based solely on the ground that they had "served with credit during the civil war;

Olerk of the House of Representatives.

I, Elbert V. Chilson, secretary of the senate, hereby certify that the foregoing is a true copy of the resolution adopted by the senate January 12, 1909.

E. V. CHILSON, Secretary of the Senate.

Mr. SCOTT submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $9,000 to grade and improve M street NE. from Bladens-burg road to Twenty-eighth street, intended to be proposed by him to the District of Columbia appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia and ordered to be printed. Mr. WETMORE submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $225,000 for the construction and equipping of a steam revenue cutter for service in Narragansett Bay, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $25,000 for establishing a fish-cultural station at some suitable point in the State of Rhode Island, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Fisheries and ordered to be printed.

AMENDMENT OF INTERSTATE-COMMERCE LAW

Mr. FULTON. I submit two amendments intended to be proposed by me to the bill (8. 423) to amend section 6 of an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, and acts amendatory thereof, which I ask may be printed and lie on the table. I wish to make an explanation connected with them.

The first amendment that I propose is to strike out certain matter and in lieu thereof to insert the following:

Upon the filing of such protest the commission may, in its discretion, make an order that the proposed change in the rate or rates, fare or fares, charge or charges, so protested against, or any specified item or items thereof, shall not go into effect until the reasonableness of the proposed increase shall have been determined by the commission, or until it shall have further ordered. The making of such order shall operate to continue in force the then existing rate or rates, fare or fares, charge or charges, proposed to be changed and included within the terms of the order until the further order of the commission.

That changes the present reading of the measure so as to leave it to the discretion of the commission whether or not they will suspend a rate from going into effect until a hearing has been had.

I propose then the following additional amendment in the shape of a proviso:

shape of a proviso:

Add after the word "party," in line 22, page 5, the following: "Provided, That upon the presentation to the commission of the petition of two or more carriers subject to the provisions of this act, operating competing lines, asking permission to enter into an agreement relative to rates, fares, or charges to be made or practices to be observed in operating such lines while engaged in commerce to which the regulative power of Congress extends, the commission is authorized, in its discretion, to allow such agreement to be entered into, and thereupon it shall be lawful for such carriers to enter into the same. The petition shall have attached to and made a part of it a true and complete copy of the proposed agreement. The order of the commission permitting the agreement to be entered into shall not be deemed or held to be an approval of any rate, fare, charge, or practice proposed therein to be put in force or established, nor will it relieve any party thereto from the necessity of giving notice as in this act provided of any change in rates, fares, or charges contemplated or proposed in or by such agreement."

This amendment simply authorizes agreements among com-

This amendment simply authorizes agreements among competing carriers as to schedules or rates upon petition to the commission and with the consent of the commission. It leaves it in the discretion of the commission whether or not the privilege to enter into the combination shall be made or granted. The granting of the permission does not have the effect of an approval of the rates, but leaves that to be determined otherwise; that is all; it does not establish their reasonableness nor does it have the effect to waive the requirements that before the rate shall be advanced notice shall be given.

I ask that the bill may be reprinted with the proposed amendments in small capitals. The bill as it stands to-day is printed with the first proposed amendment in italics, the original matter being in roman. I ask that these proposed amendments may be printed in roman.

Mr. KEAN. To what bill is this an amendment?

Mr. FULTON. It is Senate bill 423, proposing to amend section 6 of the interstate-commerce act, which was reported some time ago by the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. KEAN. The Senator merely wants to have the amendments printed, I understand.

Mr. FULTON. I simply want to have them printed for the information of the Senate, so that the Senate may see what I

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection it is so ordered.
Mr. HEYBURN. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Oregon to what committee the bill as proposed to be amended went?

Mr. FULTON. The amendments did not go to any committee. The bill (S. 423) to which I propose the amendments which I was attempting to explain has been reported and is now on the calendar.

It was reported adversely.

Mr. FULTON. Yes; by a bare majority it was reported adversely, but it is on the calendar. I simply asked for a reprint of the bill with the amendments I now propose,

Mr. HEYBURN. I understand the Senator sent to the desk the bill as it would appear amended. What disposition was made of that? Is it on the table? Mr. FULTON. I simply sent the form to the desk for the convenience of the Secretary.

COMPILATION OF TREATIES.

Mr. CULLOM submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 252), which was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to:

Resolved, That there be prepared, under the direction of the Committee on Foreign Relations, a compilation of treaties, to include all treaties, conventions, important protocols, and international acts to which the United States may have been a party from 1778 to March 4, 1909, and such other material pertaining to treaties as may be recommended for insertion therein by the Secretary of State.

MATILDA J. BLAKE.

Mr. CARTER submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 255), which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to pay to Matilda J. Blake, widow of John C. Blake, late a messenger of the United States Senate, a sum equal to six months' salary at the rate he was receiving by law at the time of his death, said sum to be considered as including funeral expenses and all other allowances.

CLAIM FOR COTTON FROM ADAMS COUNTY, MISS. Mr. FULTON. From the Committee on Claims I report the following resolution and ask for its present consideration. The resolution (S. Res. 253) was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the bill (S. 8318) entitled "A bill for the relief of the legal representative of the owner of certain cotton taken by the United States military authorities in Adams County, Miss., in 1863," now pending in the Senate, together with all the accompanying papers, be, and the same is hereby, referred to the Court of Claims in pursuance of the provisions of an act entitled "An act to provide for the bringing of suits against the Government of the United States," approved March 3, 1887. And the said court shall proceed with the same in accordance with the provisions of such act and report to the Senate in accordance therewith.

Mr. FULTON. I should explain my reason for offering the resolution at the present time in advance of what we call the omnibus bill," carrying bills to the Court of Claims.

A bill was sent to the Court of Claims at the last session for the relief of several persons named therein. When the matter came on for a hearing before the court, it was ascertained that the name of one party interested had been omitted. The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. McLaurin] introduced a bill in the name of the party so omitted, and the object of the resolution is to send the bill to the court so that these persons may be heard with the others.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to.

IMPROVEMENT OF SAMAMISH RIVER, WASHINGTON.

Mr. PILES submitted the following concurrent resolution (S. C. Res. 71), which was referred to the Committee on Commerce: Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to cause a survey and estimate to be made of the Samamish River, Washington, with a view of clearing and restoring said river to navigation.

IMPROVEMENT OF SWINOMISH SLOUGH, WASHINGTON.

Mr. PILES submitted the following concurrent resolution (S. C. Res. 72), which was referred to the Committee on Com-

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to cause a survey and estimate to be made of the Swinomish Slough, Washington, with a view to such extensions and modifications of the project for the improvement of the same as may be necessary in the interests of navigation.

IMPROVEMENT OF COLUMBIA RIVER, WASHINGTON.

Mr. PILES submitted the following concurrent resolution (S. C. Res. 73), which was referred to the Committee on Commerce: Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to cause a survey and estimate to be made of the Columbia River between Wenatchee and the mouth of the Snake River in the State of Washington, with a view of making such improvements as may be deemed necessary, in order to provide for navigation between the upper and lower river.

IMPROVEMENT OF EAST BOOTHBAY HARBOR, MAINE.

Mr. FRYE submitted the following concurrent resolution (S. C. Res. 70), which was referred to the Committee on Commerce: Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring). That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause to be made an examination and survey of East Boothbay Harbor, Maine, with a view to extending the improvement contemplated in the report submitted in House Document No. 944, Sixtieth Congress, first session, to Hodgdon's wharf.

CHOCTAW AND CHICKASAW LANDS.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, I desire to call attention to the fact that on the 29th of April, 1908, the Senate upon my motion adopted resolution No. 171, directing the Secretary of the Interior to give information regarding the lands of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Indians.

I desire also to call attention to the fact that the Secretary of the Interior has not responded to the resolution. Just what power the Senate has to compel a response I do not know, but I wish to state that unless the Secretary does respond to the resolution I shall invoke whatever power the Senate may possess to compel a response.

PANAMA CANAL PURCHASE.

Mr. RAYNER. I submit a resolution. I ask that it be read, and I ask for its immediate consideration.

The resolution (S. Res. 254) was read, as follows:

The resolution (S. Res. 254) was read, as follows:

Whereas it is currently reported that the Attorney-General of the United States, at the instance and under the direction of the President, has ordered the district attorneys in several of the federal districts to institute an investigation in connection with various publications lately appearing in the press in relation to the purchase of the Panama Canal; and

Mr. RAYNER. Mr. President, I shall ask the Senate for the

Mr. RAYNER. Mr. President, I shall ask the Senate for the present consideration of the resolution, and I will give my reasons for so asking. I shall be brief about it. I want to read the resolution over again so that the Senate may understand the purpose of it:

Whereas it is currently reported that the Attorney-General of the United States, at the instance and under the direction of the President, has ordered the district attorneys in several of the federal districts to institute an investigation in connection with various publications lately appearing in the press in relation to the purchase of the Panama Canal; and

It will be observed, Mr. President, that all I ask for in the resolution is information from the Attorney-General whether this investigation has been ordered by the President, and if it has been ordered by the President under what statute of the United States it has been ordered, and if a proceeding of this sort has been instituted by what right and authority the process of the courts is being employed in the premises.

So far as the form of the resolution is concerned, it is substantially similar to the resolution the Senate passed a few days ago at the instance of the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. Cul-

BERSON], which reads in this way:

Resolved, That the Attorney-General be, and he is hereby, directed to inform the Senate—

1. Whether legal proceedings under the act of July 2, 1890, have been instituted by him or by his authority against the United States Steel Corporation on account of the absorption by it in the year 1907 of the Tennessee Coal and Iron Company, and if no such proceedings have been instituted state the reason for such nonaction.

2. Whether an opinion was rendered by him or under his authority as to the legality of such absorption, and if so, attach a copy if in writing, and if verbal state the substance of it.

I ask for no opinion of the Attorney-General. That is a

I ask for no opinion of the Attorney-General. That is a matter of no concern to me in the subject that I am now engaged on. I simply ask for facts. I ask as to these proceedings, with which we are all familiar from the reports that have come to us in the last few days, in the first place, whether they have been ordered by the President; in the second place, if they have been ordered by the President, under what statute of the United States they have been ordered; and in the third place, by what power and authority the courts are now being used to summon witnesses for the purpose of pursuing the investigation.

Mr. President, so far as the form of the resolution goes, I see no objection to it, because it does not direct the Attorney-General to do anything whatever except to give us his opinion, not as to what the testimony will be, not as to what he expects these witnesses to testify to, but simply under what law of the United States he is proceeding.

I apprehend, Mr. President, that there is no difference of opinion in this body upon the proposition I now state, that there is no law of the United States which permits a prosecution of anyone for libeling the Government of the United States, that no presentment can be had, and no indictment will lie in any federal court of the United States upon such a matter. will speak presently of the supreme court of the District of Columbia, but I am confining what I say now to the federal districts and circuits outside of the District of Columbia. I say that no presentment can be made and no indictment can be framed against anyone for libeling the Government of the United States.

I understand that a number of these witnesses have been summoned either to the district or the circuit court for one of the districts of New York to testify in relation to this subject.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. RAYNER. I do. Mr. FULTON. I will ask the Senator from Maryland, even if it be true that there is no law, as he contends, for such a proceeding, whether that is not entirely a matter for the court to determine? Ought we not to leave that to the court to determine? If it be found that there is no law for it, the court will say so. That is the proper tribunal, it seems to me, to determine a question of that character.

Mr. RAYNER. I propose to answer the question of the Senator from Oregon as I go along. I do not think I will take over a few minutes, and I trust that I shall completely answer that question. I say now that the machinery of the federal courts is being abused, and I want to know from the Attorney-General of the United States whether it is being done under the direction of the President of the United States, and if it is being done, under what law of the United States it is being done.

I will say to the Senator from Oregon before I fully answer him that we have the right to know whether these contemplated prosecutions are undertaken under a statute of the United States, because if there is upon the statute book of the United States any statute that authorizes them we want to have the opportunity to repeal that statute, because it is in violation of the first amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which prohibits Congress from abridging the freedom of the

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Maryland yield further to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. RAYNER. I do. Mr. FULTON. If the Senator will permit me, I will state the reason why I made my suggestion to him, and upon it I would be glad to have an expression of his views. Is it not a very bad precedent for either branch of Congress to seek to interfere with a matter that has been brought before or is pending in the courts until the courts have finally disposed of it? If in the courts there shall be developed a condition which Congress thinks should be remedied, the time will have then arrived to apply the remedy. But it seems to me that this sort of a proceeding would rather indicate a disposition on the part of the Senate to usurp the functions of the courts. The court is the tribunal to determine whether or not this proceeding was properly instituted or whether its processes are being improperly employed.

Mr. RAYNER. The Senator from Oregon has evidently not heard the resolution, because the resolution avoids any such inquiry. I am perfectly aware of the fact that Congress has no right to invade judicial functions. I would have no right here to ask the Attorney-General to produce the testimony he proposes to submit to the grand jury so as to have it before Con-

Mr. FULTON. Mr. President—
Mr. RAYNER. The Senator will let me answer him. His questions are very pertinent, but he must permit me to answer them.

Mr. FULTON. Certainly.
Mr. RAYNER. If the Senator will just wait for a moment I think I will answer the whole of them, but I will be very glad if he will allow me to do so.

Mr. FULTON. I do not wish to disturb the Senator in his line of thought, and if I am doing so I beg his pardon.

Mr. RAYNER. Your line of thought is just exactly upon a par with my line of thought on the subject.

Mr. FULTON. I ask the Senator to allow me to make only one further suggestion.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Maryland yield further to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. RAYNER. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. FULTON. Suppose the Attorney-General shall report that there is no section of a statute under which he is proceeding; that there is no statute covering the case; but that, in his judgment, the common law affords a remedy; would we, or could we, interfere? I do not say, of course, that the common law does afford a remedy.

Mr. RAYNER. I do not propose to answer that in full now. I will most assuredly before I close. The Senator from Oregon has put three questions now, entirely distinct from each other. I propose to show that there is no common law in the premises.

If the Attorney-General answers that he is proceeding under no statute, then the President is violating the laws of the country; and if he answers that he is proceeding under a statute, then we want to know what statute he is proceeding under, so that we can have an opportunty to repeal it. So that, if the Senator will just allow me to proceed for five or ten minutes, I shall be glad, if I have not then answered, to answer any interrogatory which he may put to me.

Mr. President, I was going on to say, when the Senator from Oregon asked me the questions that he has, that there is no law-and I repeat it-there is no law authorizing an indictment for libeling the United States Government in any of the federal districts of the United States. Mr. LODGE. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. RAYNER. I do. Mr. LODGE. The Senator says, then, as I understand him, that these actions that he hears reported are for libeling the Government of the United States. Does he know that to be the fact?

Mr. RAYNER. If I knew it to be the fact, I would not make this inquiry. I want to find out what the Attorney-General is doing. That is the object of the inquiry. If I knew is as a fact, there would be no necessity for the inquiry.

Mr. LODGE. It seems to me that it is rather an important point whether these actions are for libeling the Government, on which the Senator is proceeding with his argument, or whether they are informations for criminal libel filed by the Attorney-General on the request of individuals.

Mr. RAYNER. Mr. President, that is a very important inquiry; and I propose to show that the circuit or district courts of the United States have no jurisdiction in either case—no possible jurisdiction in either case outside of the District of Columbia. It is an absurdity to suppose that the circuit or district courts of the United States have any jurisdiction in either case outside of the District of Columbia, whether it be a libel against the Government of the United States or a libel against the President of the United States or against anyone.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. RAYNER. I do.

Mr. KNOX. I do not wish, Mr. President, to bear down on the Senator from Maryland by following up these interruptions, but I should like to ask him a question which, it seems to me, goes to the root of this whole matter.

Assuming that every legal position which the Senator has outlined to be a sound one, are those not matters of defense available to the defendants in this particular case? How are we to know whether or not they are good defenses until the courts pass upon them, unless we are to assume that the Senate has the right to take up the case of every individual defendant who is charged by the Government with having committed an offense, and try it in the United States Senate before it is tried in the courts?

Mr. RAYNER. The proposition, stated in the way in which the Senator from Pennsylvania states it, is unanswerable. We have no such right. That is not the purpose of this inquiry. The purpose of this inquiry is to find out whether or not the President of the United States, in conjunction with the Attorney-General, is not abusing the process of the courts for an unlawful purpose. That is the way to put it. If the Attorney-General, under the direction—I do not say that he is doing it; I do not want to be understood in this body as making any such imputations either against the President of the United States or the Attorney-General-but if the Attorney-General of the United States is abusing the machinery of the federal courts for the purpose of accomplishing an ulterior object, it is the right of the Senate and the right of Congress to know that he is doing that, and then to take some steps either to stop him or, if he is proceeding under the law, to give us an opportunity to repeal the statute under which he is proceeding. I shall more fully answer, in the course of this brief argument, the question which the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. Knox] has just addressed to me. I am glad to see that the Senator from Pennsylvania inferentially agrees with me upon the legal proposition that I have stated—that there is no jurisdiction whatever in any of the courts of the United States, in any federal district, to find a presentment for libeling the Government of the United States.

Now, we get to the second proposition, for it is assumed that every one of us will admit the first proposition. Is there any jurisdiction in the federal courts outside of the District of Columbia to bring an indictment for criminal libel against anybody? If there is any answer to that, I shall be pleased to hear it. Have the federal courts outside of the District of Columbia the right through their grand juries to present any-body for libel against any person, the President or anyone else?

There is no answer. I assume, Mr. President, therefore, in the proposition that I am correctly stating the second proposition of law on this point, that the federal courts outside of the District of Columbia have no jurisdiction whatever in cases of libel. Therefore, if these witnesses, whoever they may be—and I know nothing at all about the facts in the case, I want to say to Senators: I am only discussing a proposition of constitutional law-if these witnesses, as I understand, representatives upon the staff of the New York World, the New York Sun, the Indianapolis News, and the Press Publishing Company, and I believe other witnesses, have been summoned to any federal circuit beyond the District of Columbia for the purpose of testifying in any case affecting a libel against the Government of the United States, or against the President as President or individually, the district attorney, who, under the direction of the Attorney-General, is summoning these witnesses, is abusing the process of his court for the purpose of accomplishing some ulterior object with which the public is not yet familiar.

That is my first proposition. If I am right-and I assume that I am right, because there is no answer from any Senator upon the floor-it excludes the entire jurisdiction of the federal districts outside of the Districts of Columbia on any question whatever of libeling the Government or libeling the President. The President has no greater right in any court than the humblest citizen in the land, and the Government has no greater

The sedition laws have been repealed, and I venture to say they will never make their appearance again upon any statute book of the United States. This is a revival of the sedition laws, or an attempted revival of laws, that have happily gone out of existence long ago, under which great controversy took place and indictments and convictions were had. There were a number of persons convicted under the sedition laws. One of them was a Member of Congress. He was fined and imprisoned. We know the history of those days, and we know that these laws are out of existence. There is no sedition law at present, I am glad to say, so far as I have been able to discover, upon the statute books of the United States.

Now, we get to the District of Coumbia. The law is equally clear as to the District of Columbia. I will send to the desk, Mr. President, to be read an article from the Washington Post of this morning. It is very brief. The author's name is not given, but he is evidently a highly capable lawyer, who has given an opinion, which I ask to have read. The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested. The Secretary read as follows:

OPINION OF LAW OFFICER.

OPINION OF LAW OFFICER.

One of the most prominent law officers of the Government under the McKinley and Roosevelt administrations, in discussing the case, said to a reporter for the Post:

"The United States Government can not sue any person for libel. Any individual who feels aggrieved may sue, whether he is an officer of the Government or not. Some years ago the Turkish minister in Washington called the attention of this Government to certain publications in American newspapers containing libelous language relating to the Turkish Government. Acting under instructions from the Sultan, the minister demanded the punishment of these publishers for circulating matter that was palpably libelous. He was informed that the Constitution prohibited any abridgment of the liberty of the press in this country, and that there was no redress except through the courts in a suit brought by any person who may have been libeled.

TREATY OF NO AVAIL.

"These cases are not uncommon. The Government can not undertake, even by treaty, to protect foreign governments or their officers from libels circulated by American newspapers, in the absence of a statute; and Congress would not consider the enactment of any law tending to abridge the liberty of the press.

"This Government is as powerless in silencing the press on its own account as it is in behalf of foreign governments. The one experiment in that line was the alien and sedition act, passed in 1798, which practically wrecked the Federalist party before it was repealed. There is no federal statute which makes it a crime to libel the Government, and in the absence of a statute the federal courts are powerless to act lawfully, even to the extent of a grand jury inquisition.

"Under the common law it may be a crime to libel the Government, just as international law forbids a libel upon another government, but there is no redress in either case. The federal courts exercise jurisdiction only in matters covered by the statutes. Their jurisdiction is very clearly defined. If any person should bring suit for criminal libel against another person living in another State, the defendant could have the case tried in a federal court, but the court would be bound by the libel laws of the State in which the crime was alleged to have been committed. been committed.

BASED ON COMMON LAW.

"The criminal libel laws of the District of Columbia are based upon the common law, but so far as the Government and the federal courts are concerned, there is no more latitude here than elsewhere for the prosecution of persons alleged to have been guilty of libeling the Government. The courts here must deal with the statutes, and there is no statute covering this matter.

"It is not conceivable that the inquisition by the grand jury, apparently about to be undertaken against certain publishers, has been inspired by the United States Government—that is, by officers acting in behalf of the Government itself. There is no authority whatever for such an undertaking. It would be nothing else than an unwarranted attempt to use the machinery of the court for a drag-net inquisition for purposes of intimidation.

"Any indictment and prosecution based upon such a proceeding would give the injured party the best of grounds for securing heavy damages for malicious prosecution. Since these facts are well known to the officers of the Government in this District. I take it for granted that they are not about to attempt to exceed their powers. If they should attempt to do so, however, the matter can be taken quickly to the United States Supreme Court."

Mr. RAYNER. Mr. President, we now come to what the law of the District of Columbia is. If we have ousted the jurisdiction of the federal courts outside of the District of Columbiaand I think that is too plain a proposition of law to discuss any further—let us look at what the law of the District of Columbia is. I will give it to the Senate in a few words. This is a very serious proposition that I am discussing and, in my judgment, it requires urgent action. The Attorney-General has not given any information. I want to read what he says in an interview this morning, which is as follows:

"I am going to take the oyster for my motto"

That is a queer motto for the Attorney-General-

That is a queer motto for the Attorney-General—said Attorney-General Charles J. Bonaparte to-day, when asked if he would make a statement concerning the suit for libel that it is reported President Roosevelt and "the United States" will bring against the New York World in connection with publications alleged to reflect upon certain persons in the Panama Canal deal.

A number of newspaper correspondents have been summoned to appear before the federal grand jury in New York and Washington this week, it is supposed for the purpose of testifying regarding their knowledge of incidents connected with the Panama Canal purchase. Mr. Bonaparte, who is spending Sunday at his home, corner of Park avenue and Center street, was asked if he would explain why the newspaper people were summoned, and if he had seen their names published in the morning papers.

"Yes, I saw them," he replied. "I am going to take the oyster for my motto. The oyster thinks, but does not talk."

An oyster does about as much thinking as some people I know. [Laughter]. At any rate, we have no information from that quarter. The Attorney-General may be proceeding under a statute-I am not for one moment attempting to charge him with doing anything that he ought not to do-he may be proceeding under some statute of the United States.

Now, let us get to the District of Columbia. Here is a law of the District of Columbia:

the District of Columbia:

The District of Columbia is now governed by a code which became effective on January 1, 1902. The necessity for this code was manifest for many years on account of the conflict of laws. However, section 1 of the code is the basis, it is believed, of the present proceeding. This section provides:

"The common law, all British statutes in force in Maryland on the 27th day of February, 1801, the principles of equity and admiralty, all general acts of Congress not locally in application in the District of Columbia, and all acts of Congress by their terms applicable to the District of Columbia and other places under the jurisdiction of the United States, in force at the date of the passage of this act, shall remain in force except in so far as the same are inconsistent or replaced by some provision of this code."

What law is in force in the District of Columbia and What law is in force in the District of Columbia? The common law? I state here, without having thoroughly examined the question, but simply upon my recollection—and if I am wrong, I stand ready to be corrected—that there is no common law which makes the libeling of the Government a crime. It is not the common law of England; it is the statutory law of England that makes it a crime. There has been one statute after another passed in Great Britain with reference to this very subject, but it is largely crime by statute and not altogether by the common law.

We all recollect the great speech that McIntosh made when speech that Erskine listened to and said it was the greatest speech that erisking instelled to and said it was the greatest speech he had ever heard before any judicial tribunal. Without having read it or seen it for years, my recollection is that the case against Pelletier was upon a British statute. But it makes very little difference in the way of looking at the case whether it is the common law of England or whether it is by force of statutes that the libeling of the British Government becomes a crime. There is one thing sure, and that I know—the District of Columbia adopted the statutes of Maryland, and there is no such statute in force in the State of Maryland. can not present anyone for libeling the Government of the United States or the President of the United States as such in any tribunal in Maryland; and the District of Columbia, under its code having adopted the laws of Maryland, it necessarily follows that you can not do in the District of Columbia what you can not do in Maryland.

Let me see whether I am right about that-and I will ask the attention of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. Fulton] upon that point, because it answers one of the questions that he addressed to me. Here is the law of Maryland. Article 5 of our constitution says:

That the inhabitants of Maryland are entitled to the common law of England and the trial by jury, according to the course of that law—and to the benefit of such of the English statutes as existed on the 4th day of July, 1776—

The Code of the District of Columbia brings them down to 1801. Now, what is the qualification-and which, by experience, have been found applicable to their local and other circumstances, and have been introduced, used, and practiced by the courts of law or equity.

Would any sane person suppose that a law for libel against the Government of the United States has been found applicable to the local usages and circumstances of the State of Maryland?

Therefore, Mr. President, we have in Maryland no law upon this subject at all. If this paper had been published in Maryland, or if its circulation there justified an indictment for libel in that State—a proposition about which there is a conflict of opinion, in the different appellate tribunals of the different States-one thing is sure, we have no law in Maryland whatever that holds a person criminally liable for libeling of the Government of the United States or libeling the President of the United States as such. Therefore if Maryland has no such legislation, the District of Columbia, under whose code Maryland legislation is made applicable to the District of Columbia, only carrying it up to 1801, has no law upon which any such prosecution can proceed.

Now, I come to the last point-Mr. FULTON. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. RAYNER. I do. Mr. FULTON. Mr. President, I trust the Senator did not understand me to intimate that I thought the common law is in force within the federal jurisdiction. I do not contend, of course, and do not suppose anyone contends, that common-law crimes are cognizable in the federal courts. I simply said, Suppose the Attorney-General should answer, "there is no statthe for this proceeding, but, in my judgment, it is within the common law," we would probably think that rather absurd, but what could we do but leave it to the courts? I do not assume that he would so answer; but I say, suppose he did? There would be nothing we could do. It is not within our province to enjoin him from the proceeding. It is purely a matter of defense in the courts, a matter as to which the court must determine whether or not the proceeding is well founded. Cases are instituted every day without any basis either in law or in fact. Ultimately they are thrown out of court. It is possible that this proceeding will be, but that is for the court to determine.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. WARREN. I thought the Senator from Maryland had concluded.

Mr. RAYNER. I have not; but I will conclude in less than ten minutes

Mr. WARREN. I will, of course, not interrupt the Senator; but I hope this discussion may not lead to general debate at this time, for I am anxious that the Senate shall proceed to the consideration of the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill.

Mr. RAYNER. I think I will conclude in ten minutes if I am not interrupted.

Mr. WARREN. I shall wait until the Senator concludes.

The District of Columbia is entitled to the common law, but, Mr. President, the proposed proceedings are not in accordance with the common law of England. The libeling of the Government, as I understand and recollect it, is a crime under acts of Parliament. But let me admit now-for I may be mistaken upon this point—that it forms and comprises a crime under the common law. That is not what we mean by common law under the District Code. There are hundreds upon hundreds of crimes committed under the common law that no one for a moment would contend are punishable in the District of Columbia. We have not adopted in whole the common law The wager of battle existed at common law! Would anyone argue with me that the courts here have the process of wager of battle? Punishment by death at the common law follows a number of crimes. Would anyone suppose that those crimes could be punished by death here in the District of Columbia? That is not what this provision of the Code of the District of Columbia means. This provision relates to the common and equity jurisprudence of the common law, and the crimes that are cognizable in the District of Columbia are the crimes that Congress has made cognizable under the Constitution of the United States, because the District of Columbia courts have no jurisdiction except the jurisdiction that is reposed in them by the Congress of the United States.

Therefore I say, Mr. President, that there is no law in any of the circuits outside of the District of Columbia covering this subject, and I say that there can be no law in the District of Columbia covering the subject. Let me be careful about that point—I mean covering the subject of libeling the Government or libeling the President, who conserves himself to be the Government, as President of the United States and not as an individual.

Now, let me get to the final proposition. I admit that the court has jurisdiction if the President goes before it as an individual. If the President as an individual, either personally or in the performance of his duty, conceives that he has been criminally libeled, he can go to the supreme court of the District of Columbia and ask for investigation before the grand jury just in the same way that any other individual can. Anyone can do so if he is falsely charged with crime or corruption, in or out of office. His office alone gives him no special standing in court, and he has not by reason of his office alone the right to invoke the jurisdiction of the courts.

Mr. MONEY. Through the Department of Justice?

Mr. RAYNER. I was coming to that. The Department of Justice has nothing to do with it. He could go to the district attorney of the District of Columbia and represent to him that he has been libeled and proceed as an individual.

I say, therefore, Mr. President, that if the President is using any of the federal, circuit, or district courts, if he is using the court in the District of Columbia for the purpose of framing a proceeding against anyone for libeling either the Government of the United States or libeling him as President of the United States, he is violating the laws of his country.

I refer the Senate now to the first amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which provides, among other things, that Congress shall make no law abridging the freedom of the press. The President has no greater right to interfere with that constitutional provision than any other citizen of the land.

He has no more right to abridge the freedom of the press in regard to his own actions than any other citizen of the land would have the right to abridge the freedom of the press. He is as much subject to that constitutional provision as is anyone in the land. He has no greater right before any tribunal in this land, Federal or State, than has anyone else; and it is a mistaken idea, I submit to the Senate, if the facts sustain the publications that have been made in regard to this proceeding, for the Attorney-General or for the district attorney of this District, or for any district attorney of the United States, to issue blank subpœnas and blank summonses, ordering witnesses to come into court and testify what they know in reference to a case, the case not being designated upon the face of the summons. It is a search warrant for witnesses forbidden by the organic law of the land.

All I want in this resolution—I may be wrong upon the facts, but I respectfully submit that I am right upon the law—all I want is this: I do not want to know what the facts are; I do not want to know for what purpose these witnesses have been summoned; I can not know and I do not ask what testimony they will give before the grand jury; I have no right to do that, because that would be, as has been so well said by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. Fulton], an invasion by Congress of the judicial functions, but I do ask that the Attorney-General of the United States be directed to inform the Senate whether this investigation has been ordered by the President, and, if it has been ordered, under what statute of the United States. He may have some statute. Perhaps some one has informed him as to some law as to which we are ignorant. There may be some obsolete provision, for you can not tell among the thousands of conflicting laws upon the federal code what laws exist and which have been repealed expressly or by implication. If there be a statute, let him give us the statute, If there be no statute, let us know by what right and authority he is at this moment abusing the processes of the court and summoning witnesses from all over the land upon summons that do not indicate, even to the witness, for what purpose he is summoned.

In conclusion, I desire to say, and this answers the questions the Senator from Oregon has put to me, if there be such a law, let him give it to us, for I find the old sedition laws went out of existence, and they never will be in existence again, I apprehend, upon any civilized code. If there be such a statute, then, Mr. President, we want to have the opportunity to sweep it from the books and to obliterate it from the federal code.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. RAYNER. Mr. President—

Mr. KEAN. Let it go over.

Mr. LODGE. Before the Senate embark upon judicial functions in the trial of causes I think we ought to have the opinion of the Judiciary Committee; and I move that the resolution be referred to that committee.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Massachusetts moves that the resolution be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. RAYNER. One moment. I object to the reference. We will have to take a vote on that.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Massachusetts moves that the resolution be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. RAYNER. I want to say this to the Senator from Massachusetts: As the Senator from Texas said the other day—and I think a number of gentlemen on the other side of the Chamber changed their minds upon the proposition when they heard him—a resolution like that does not ask for any action, and if the Attorney-General should answer by saying, as the President answered the resolution of the Senator from Texas by saying that he did not propose to permit the Attorney-General to give any reasons for his opinion—if the Attorney-General should say, "I decline to inform the Senate whether the investigation has been ordered by the President, and I decline to inform them under what statute I am proceeding," then we will have to take action afterwards.

This resolution calls for no action at all. It simply asks for information. If it goes to the Judiciary Committee we will never have the information in time. The indictments will be found before we get the information, because in one of these interviews which I have mislaid the Attorney-General says that within four days he will make everything public. I suppose it will be made public when the people are arrested whom the grand jury proposes to indict. It is between this time and that period that I want the Attorney-General to show under what law he is proceeding, so that if he is proceeding upon some law we can quickly anticipate him and repeal it in the Congress of the United States.

I ask Senators upon the other side of the Chamber to give us an opportunity to obtain this information from the Attorney-General. I am fully aware of the fact that if he declines to give it it would take so long a time to compel him to give it that we would be almost powerless in the premises. But give this resolution the same support that was given to the resolution of the Senator from Texas the other day.

He asked that the Attorney-General give information as to one corporation absorbing another corporation. The reply came in very quickly from the President that he declined to give the Attorney-General the right to furnish the reasons why he had permitted that consolidation. In view of that, I have not asked for the reasons influencing the Attorney-General. I care not for his motives. I want the law. I want to know whether there is any such law upon the statute book of the United States. If there is no such law, then I want the Attorney-General to say so. If there is such a law, then I want him to point to the statute, so that we can repeal it. But if the resolution is referred to the Judiciary Committee, you lose the opportunity of acquiring from the Attorney-General the information I think the Senate is entitled to have from him.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President—

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President—— Mr. LODGE. Let the resolution go over. The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will lie over.

Mr. CULBERSON. We want to make an issue in the Senate as to whether the resolution should be referred or adopted by the Senate. The suggestion of the Senator from Massachusetts is unanswerable, of course, because a single objection carries the resolution over until to-morrow.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Massachusetts withdraws the motion to refer, and asks that the resolution lie

Mr. LODGE. I do not withdraw the motion to refer. that the resolution go over with the motion to refer pending.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will go over at the request of the Senator from Massachusetts, with the motion to refer pending.

LEGALIZING AND RECORDING OF CITIZENSHIP.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 388) to confirm and legalize prior admissions to citizenship of the United States where the judge or clerk of the court administering the oath to the applicant, or his witnesses, has failed to sign or seal the record oath or the judgment of admission, and to establish a proper record of such citizenship, which was to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That Benjamin Bennett and George Bennett, of West Branch, Ogemaw County, Mich., may be naturalized without making the declaration required by section 4 of the act entitled "An act to establish a Bureau of Immigration and Naturalization, and to provide for a uniform rule for the naturalization of aliens throughout the United States," approved June 29, 1906, and without waiting the two years required by that section.

Mr. HEYBURN. I move that the Senate nonconcur in the amendment of the House of presentatives and request a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, the conferees on the part of the Senate to be appointed by the Chair.

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice-President appointed

Mr. HEYBURN, Mr. DILLINGHAM, and Mr. McLaurin.

THEODORE F. NORTHROP.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2253) for the relief of Theodore F. Northrop, which was to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That Theodore F. Northrop, late first lieutenant, Second Regiment New York Cavalry Volunteers, and who commanded a body of mounted military scouts in the army of General Sherman from January 3, 1865, to March 31, 1865, shall be held and considered to have been an officer of the Volunteer Army during that time, for the purpose of an application for a medal of honor: Provided, That no pay, bounty, or other allowance shall become due or payable by virtue of this act.

Mr. DEPEW. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

DAVISON CHEMICAL COMPANY, OF BALTIMORE, MD.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 4632) for the relief of the Davison Chemical Company, of Baltimore, Md., which were, in line 7, after the word "in," to insert "full;" and in line 7, after the word "for," to insert "all."

Mr. RAYNER. I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

CHICAGO AND NORTHWESTERN RAILWAY COMPANY.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 8143) granting to the Chicago and Northwestern Railway Company a right to change the location of its right of way across the Niobrara Military Reservation, which was, on page 2, after line 17, to insert:

SEC. 2. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

Mr. BURKETT. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

PATENTING CERTAIN LANDS TO BOISE, IDAHO.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 6136) authorizing the Secretary of War to issue patent to certain lands to Boise, Idaho, which were, on page 1, line 4, to strike out "and directed to issue patent in fee" and insert "make a license, revocable at his discretion, for the use for park purposes by;" and to amend the title so as to read: "An act authorizing the Secretary of War to grant a revocable license to certain lands to Boise, Idaho."

Mr. WARREN. I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVAL

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. M. C. Latta, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had on the 15th instant approved and signed the following act:

S. 4856. An act authorizing the Secretary of Commerce and Labor to lease San Clemente Island, California, and for other purposes.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WARREN. I move that the Senate resume the consideration of the legislative appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 23464) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1910, and for other purposes.

Mr. WARREN. There are yet some amendments which the committee has to offer. I now submit the amendment I send to the desk.

The Secretary. On page 5, line 24, strike out all after the word "Census" down to and including the word "Forestry," in line 2, on page 6, and insert, after the word "Grounds," on page 5, line 22, the words "Public Lands, to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the amendment?

Mr. CLAY. Is it a committee amendment?

It is a committee amendment. Mr. WARREN.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is an amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. WARREN. It is to correct the text.

Mr. CLAY. Let the amendment be again reported. I did not catch it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will again state the amendment.

The Secretary. On page 5 strike out all after the word "Census" in line 24 down to and including the word "Forestry" on page 6, line 2, and insert after the word "Grounds" on page 5, line 22, the following words:

Public Lands, to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary. On page 6, line 18, change the total so that it will read "$143,480."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WARREN. I offer an amendment, which is merely to add the letter "s" to a word.

The Secretary. On page 10, line 6, strike out the word "room" and insert "rooms."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WARREN. I submit the amendment I send to the desk. The Secretary. On page 79, lines 10 and 11, strike out the words "night watchman, $720," and insert in lieu thereof "two night watchmen, at $720 each."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WARREN. I offer another amendment.

The Secretary. In lines 12 and 13, on the same page, strike out "thirty-nine thousand eight hundred and twenty" and insert "forty thousand five hundred and forty."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WARREN. At the time of adjournment Friday we were discussing the matter of the salary of the Speaker, if I mistake not, the point of order having been made against the amendment.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. President, at the hour of adjournment on Friday we were discussing the question on the point of order made by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. Borah] to the provision in the bill, beginning on page 14, namely:

Provided, That the salary of the Speaker of the House of Representatives after March 3, 1909, shall be $20,000 per annum.

I had submitted some observations at that time, expressing my views on the point of order, but in view of what has been said subsequently, and for some other reasons, I wish to express my views somewhat further.

It has been intimated that the sole purpose of urging this point of order is to defeat all of a certain class of proposed amendments, known as the "salary increases." So far as I am personally concerned, I am not actuated by any such purpose in taking the position I have touching the true construction of this rule. I have no hesitancy whatever in meeting squarely the question whether or not these salaries shall be raised to the amounts proposed or raised at all. I am ready to vote on that proposition whenever it comes up. I am frank to say that I think the increases proposed are too great, considering the present state of the Treasury and the revenues of the Government. The idea of increasing salaries to the extent that it is proposed to increase these seems to me is, to say the least, unbusinesslike.

I have seen it stated elsewhere that there can be no river and harbor bill at the present session, or, at least, no general river and harbor bill, because of the depleted condition of the Treasury and its failing revenue. If that is true and if one of the most important interests of the Nation must be abandoned or action in regard to it suspended because of a want of income, it occurs to me that it is hardly the time to enter upon a great scheme of salary advance. But that is not the controlling question with me in endeavoring to reach what seems to me to be the true construction of this rule.

Now, sir, bear in mind that the proposition to which the point of order was directed is not the increase of an item of appropria-It is not adding a new item of appropriation. enacting a statute for the future, enacting a general law.

Let us see what this rule is. In subdivision 1 of Rule XVI it is provided:

And no amendments shall be received to any general appropriation bill the effect of which will be to increase an appropriation already contained in the bill or to add a new item of appropriation.

These are the two inhibitions, namely, that no amendment shall be received which proposes to increase an item of approitem could be inserted; but there are qualifying and excepting clauses following. The first clause is:

That is, no item in an appropriation bill shall be increased and no new item of appropriation shall be addedunless it be made to carry out the provisions of some existing law-

The pending proposition is not to carry out the provision of existing law-or treaty stipulation-

This is not a treaty stipulation-or act or resolution previously passed by the Senate during that session.

This does not come within that exception. It is proposed to pass the act now, in the appropriation bill itself. If this very item to which the point of order goes, namely, increasing the salary of the Speaker hereafter, by permanent, continuing statute, had passed prior to the time that the appropriation bill had come to the Senate or been reported here, then it would come within that clause. It does not. The further exception is:

Or unless the same be moved by direction of a standing or select committee of the Senate, or proposed in pursuance of an estimate of the head of some one of the departments.

It may be said that this amendment is moved by a standing committee of the Senate. But what do all these clauses, exceptions, and qualifications go to? They relate back to the two main propositions, the subject of this clause, and that is: a new item of appropriation.

And no amendments shall be received to any general appropriation bill the effect of which will be to increase an item of appropriation already contained in the bill or to add a new item—

Now, this is not adding a new item of appropriation. This is adding a general provision, a general law, increasing after a certain date the salary of an officer, changing an existing law, and is general legislation. Therefore it does not come within any of the provisions of clause 1 of Rule XVI, but it is obnoxious to clause 3, namely, because it is there stated that-

No amendment which proposes general legislation shall be received to any general appropriation bill, nor shall any amendment not ger-mane or relevant to the subject-matter contained in the bill be re-ceived.

I want to say right here that when you take into consideration these two clauses which I have read, they show that the contention of the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCumber] in his remarks here on Friday last is not well taken.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. FULTON. Certainly. Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I should like to ask the Senator whether he believes the limitation in the Senate rule as to general legislation upon an appropriation bill" is as strong and as full of meaning and as definite as the limitation in the rules of the House of Representatives that "there shall be no change in existing law upon a general appropriation bill?"

Mr. FULTON. I do. I have often thought of that. I think it is practically as strong.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I do not understand how the Senator can take that view, because to change existing law is a definite and distinct agreement upon the part of the legislative and executive branches of the Government. It assumes a dignity which a general description such as the Senate has placed in its rule does not equal.

Mr. FULTON. "General legislation" is broader of course than "legislation changing existing law." Legislation changing existing law is confined to legislation affecting existing law. General legislation may be on a new subject entirely or it may be directed to existing law.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Now, if the Senator will permit

Mr. FULTON. Certainly; with pleasure.
Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I can not rid myself of the idea that if such a limitation is to be placed upon this rule and the construction of the Senator from Oregon is to prevail, the Senate is absolutely debarred from participating in the prepara-tion of a general appropriation bill, and, instead of working under the general descriptive limitation in the Senate rule, we are actually working upon the narrower rule which is applied in the House of Representatives. I can not believe that is true.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. President, whether or not that be true—
Mr. SMITH of Michigan. As the Senator from Maine [Mr. Hale] suggests to me, if the Senate had intended to make this priation already in the bill or to add a new item of appropriation. If that were followed by no other language, then no item in an appropriation bill could be increased and no additional limitation as sweeping and as positive as that sought to be applied by the Senator from Oregon, it might have incorporated in the Senate rules the House rule.

Mr. FULTON. I can answer the Senator along the same line of logic by saying that if the Senate had intended to place the limitations on this clause that the Senator from Michigan seems to maintain that a proper construction would place upon it, the Senate would have done that when it was framing the rule.

Now, then, according to the Senator's contention and the contention of others claiming the same construction, the clause should read in this wise:

No amendment which proposes general legislation shall be received to any general appropriation bill unless it be germane to some pro-vision of the bill.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. The purpose of that is very clear. Mr. FULTON. If the Senator will allow me, does he believe that is the true construction of the clause?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I think the Senate committee in framing these rules were very wise to exclude general legisla-tion from appropriation bills. Otherwise there would be no chronological order in the statutes of the United States. statute of importance would be hidden away somewhere in the tail end of a general appropriation bill.

Mr. FULTON. I am not speaking of wisdom. I ask if he thinks that is the true construction of the clause. If not, what is the true construction of the provision that no amendment proposing general legislation shall be received?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I think the true construction is The difficulty sought to be avoided was the ridersgermane, not appropriate, not proper-upon an appropriation

Mr. FULTON. Then the Senator must contend, as I suggest

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Let me go one step further. Suppose the Constitution provided that no law should embrace more than one object, which should be expressed in its title. That is the constitutional provision in many of the States. It is the constitutional provision in my own State. Suppose we were working under such a limitation. Can the Senator from Oregon for one moment contend that these two provisions are not harmonious and appropriate in the legislation we are now considering

Mr. FULTON. I think the two provisions are entirely harmonious.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Entirely harmonious.

Mr. FULTON. I do not think they are conflicting in the least. I think the Senator's contention, however, would make them very inharmonious and very conflicting.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. No; it would not. My contention would make it simply this: That no general legislation shall be permitted upon a general appropriation bill; but appropriations are always appropriate upon a general appropriation bill. This is an appropriation.

Mr. FULTON. Does the Senator contend that this is an ap-

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I do, for the current year.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. FULTON. In just a second. This clause reads:

Provided, That the salary of the Speaker of the House of Representatives after March 3, 1909, shall be $20,000 per annum.

The present law being $12,000 per annum, does the Senator contend that that is an appropriation?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I do. It is just as much of an appropriation as to raise the salaries of Senators and Representatives by a similar enactment.

Mr. FULTON. But that is the law fixing the salary. The appropriation must follow in some other clause. The law must first fix the salary. The appropriation is made afterwards, Suppose we were to pass through the Senate an independent bill in just that language, does the Senator contend that it would carry with it the appropriation for the salary?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I think it would. Mr. FULTON. I beg to differ with the Senator. Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I think it would.

Mr. FULTON. That is an entirely new doctrine.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I do not mean that it would for the entire period.

Mr. FULITON. Or for any period. Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Not for the entire period that the legislation might become effective, but for the year covered by the appropriation bill.

Mr. FULTON. That is, if we were to pass that which I read as an independent bill, there would be no necessity of an appropriation being made. From the mere fact that Congress says the salary of an officer shall be $20,000 per annum hereafter, there is no necessity of making any additional appropriation, and that is all this is, according to the Senator, an appropriation. Such a proposition is certainly new and novel.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Yes; but— Mr. FLINT. I should like to ask the Senator on what page he is reading?

Mr. FULTON. Page 15.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Why is the proposition so involved that the legislative mind can not be taken upon it? For instance, if there is any objection to the provision, it may be voted up or voted down; it is not otherwise binding upon the Senate. But to invoke a rule so general in its character as the one provided in the Senate rules as an excuse for getting this out of the bill seems to me to shackle our own hands,

Mr. FULITON. Oh, no; the rules provide for that. They provide against all shackling. Rule XL provides that any rule may be suspended on a vote of the majority of the Senate. If the Senate does not believe that this rule should apply in this case, let us suspend the rule. I will vote to suspend it.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. No.

Mr. FULTON. But I prefer to suspend it rather than to violate it.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. It is a mere technicality, to say the least, and, I think, a strained and forced construction of the rule, regardless of the merits of the amendment.

Mr. FULTON. It is the rule. It is not a technicality. The provision is a wise one, but if found objectionable in a particular case, suspend, but do not violate, it.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. It is a mere technicality and would, if sustained, force us to deal with every increase by unanimous consent, if at all. Why not take a vote upon the merits of the proposition and not forge a chain that we shall find most inconvenient in the future in the facilitation of the public business? I do not believe that is the intention of the rule. I know that during by own experience in Congress, covering a period of nearly fifteen years, I have seen much legislation excluded from appropriation bills properly.

Mr. FULTON. The Senator is not asking a question. I yielded for a question.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Let me finish the sentence. Mr. FULTON. I am glad, of course, to yield; but I can not allow the Senator to interrupt me by making an entire argu-

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. There is no limitation as to time.

Mr. FULTON. There is to mine.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Of course, if the Senator does not wish me to interrupt him-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oregon yield further to the Senator from Michigan? Mr. FULTON. I will yield to the Senator for a question, or if he is about to conclude what he would like to say.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I was about to conclude that sentence, namely, that I have seen a great deal of legislation excluded appropriately under the rule. If this was legislation which sought to apportion Representatives in the various States, foreign entirely to this bill, the Senator's objection would be tenable; but this is an appropriation, and the objection is not well taken.

Mr. DEPEW. Mr. President—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. FULTON. Certainly.
Mr. DEPEW. I should like to ask the Senator from Oregon, who I understand is now addressing himself to the verbiage of the bill, if the amendment offered by the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. Aldrich], which reads instead of the verbiage of the bill-

Provided, That of the amount herein appropriated $20,000 may be used to pay the salary of the Speaker of the House of Representatives—would present a different proposition?

Mr. FULTON. I think it would present a different proposition, because that would not be changing the law at all in regard to the amount of the salary per annum that he is to receive.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I ask the Senator from Oregon whether it would not be a fact, if the law were changed as suggested by the Senator from Rhode Island, that the Speaker could draw only $12,000?

Mr. FULTON. Certainly, that is what I say, because that does not suggest a change of the law which fixes the amount of the annual salary. Mr. HEYBURN. I should like to ask a question.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. FULTON. Certainly. Mr. HEYBURN. Do I understand that the Senator from Oregon is addressing his remarks to the proviso commencing at the bottom of page 14 or to the substitute offered by the Senator from Rhode Island?

Mr. FULTON. I am addressing my remarks to the point of order made by the junior Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] to the proviso which begins on page 14 and ends at the top of page 15.

Mr. HEYBURN. I understand that that has been withdrawn; that is, that the provision to which the point of order was raised is not now under consideration, the amendment having been accepted by the committee.

Mr. FULTON. The Senator is mistaken; it has not been withdrawn

Mr. HEYBURN. Did not the Senator in charge of the bill state that he would accept the amendment?

Mr. WARREN. As I understand the situation, the language is precisely the same as it appears in the bill. I think I did indicate a willingness on my part to accept the amendment, but it was not formally offered and acted upon.

Mr. HEYBURN. I understood the Senator to say, on behalf of the committee, that he would accept it.

Mr. FULTON. If it were withdrawn and the language employed as I understood the Senator from New York, I do not think the point of order would be well taken to it.

Mr. HEYBURN. If I may ask a question—I do not intend to participate at any length in the debate—

Mr. FULTON. All right.
Mr. HEYBURN. As I read the language, the words in italics do not constitute an appropriation.

Mr. FULTON. No; that is what I have said. Mr. HEYBURN. It is legislation for the future. Mr. FULTON. Certainly.

Mr. HEYBURN. But the general language provides for an appropriation.

Mr. FULTON. That is exactly what I have been contending. There can be no doubt about that proposition. It is not an appropriation, and under clause 1 of Rule XVI, to which many Senators have directed their remarks, provision is made only for items of appropriation, and all of the qualifications in that clause refer back to items of "appropriation." This is not an item of appropriation. This is general legislation.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. FULTON. With pleasure. Mr. HEMENWAY. What does the Senator do with this item beginning on line 22, page 14?

For compensation of Members of the House of Representatives, Delegates from Territories, the Resident Commissioner from Porto Rico, and the Resident Commissioners from the Philippine Islands, $2,989,500: Provided, That the salary of the Speaker of the House of Representatives after March 3, 1909, shall be $20,000 per annum.

Mr. FULTON. What do I do with the language that is not in italics?

Mr. HEMENWAY. With this appropriation.

Mr. FULTON. I do not propose to do anything with it.

Mr. HEMENWAY. You are losing sight of the argument; that is all.

Mr. FULITON. I am not losing sight of it; I beg the Senator's pardon. It has nothing whatever to do with that which follows. The first provision that the Senator read would stand independent and alone of that which follows. That which follows does not require a proviso, and inserting the proviso there does not give it any more the character of an appropriation than it has without it.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I will ask the Senator-

Mr. FULTON. In just a second.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I simply want to ask the Senator if the sole object of the proviso is not to raise the salary from $12,000 to $20,000, if the item there does not carry the appropriation for the salary of $12,000 with the proviso left out, and it does carry the appropriation of $20,000 if the proviso is put in.

Mr. FULTON. There is no doubt but it has the effect, I suppose, that he would be paid at the rate of $20,000 a year hereafter, but I mean to say-

Mr. HEMENWAY. If the proviso goes in, the salary is $20,000; if the proviso does not go in, it is $12,000 out of that appropriation. So the appropriation is there, is it not?

Mr. FULTON. No; the appropriation is before that. That is not an item of appropriation. It is changing the existing law.

Mr. HEMENWAY. The Senator is very technical in his ar-

Mr. FULTON. I think it will have to be determined by somebody else other than the Senator from Indiana, as to whether he is technical.

Now, I will proceed to read subdivision 3, which I was reading before I was interrupted:

No amendment which proposes general legislation shall be received to any general appropriation bill.

The idea was that an appropriation bill should be confined entirely to making appropriations for items that were required or provided for by law. It was supposed that Congress would provide by law for all the various institutions, and all the various matters pertaining to government that would require appropriations, and that the appropriation bill would simply carry the necessary items of appropriation for those matters that is, to enable the Government to be administered.

The Senators will also notice that this is followed immediately by this clause:

Nor shall any amendment not germane or relevant to the subject-matter contained in the bill be received.

This shows that even though an amendment which was general legislation might be germane, it was not to be incorporated in an appropriation bill because it says, in the first place, broadly, that no amendment proposing general legislation shall be received. That is one proposition. Then it is followed by the further exception that no amendment not germane to the bill can be received.

Therefore, an item of appropriation that is entirely foreign to the purposes of this bill would not be germane to it and would not be admissible. For instance, suppose it were proposed to insert an item here for the improvement of a river or a harbor. It would not be germane to a legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, and it would not be admissible. So all those things are provided against.

Consequently it will not do to say that the thought in providing for excluding general legislation from the bill was to exclude only all general legislation that is not germane to the bill. It will not do, in view of the fact that there is an independent clause which prohibits the introduction of any proposition that is not germane.

If language is to be interpreted according to its ordinary and usual acceptation, if we are to read this rule as we read any other writing, no one can escape the conviction that it means just what it says-that an appropriation bill shall be confined to items of appropriations and the necessary language, of course, requisite to direct the manner of the expenditure of the appropriation, but that general legislation of any class or character shall not be incorporated therein.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President

Mr. FULTON. In just a minute. I called the attention of the Senate last Friday to the fact that we have in existing law a general statute fixing the annual salary of the Speaker and the Vice-President and various other officers. It is all in one statute. That statute itself is a general law. This is amendatory of it, and it is necessarily general legislation.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. FULTON. I do.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I should like to ask the Senator a question. If there was a provision in the bill reported by the Committee on Appropriations providing an item of $100,000 or $500,000 for the coinage of all the silver bullion in the Treasury at a fixed ratio, I should like to ask the Senator whether that amendment would be germane or whether it would be general legislation?

Mr. FULTON. I have not examined the bill sufficiently to see how far the executive departments are provided for in the bill, or how far they are designed to be provided for. It may be that under the Treasury Department it would be germane.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. But the Senator has said that the provision with reference to general legislation and the provision with reference to the germaneness of an amendment were practically synonymous.

Mr. FULTON. No; the Senator is mistaken. Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I so understood the Senator.

Mr. FULTON. If I made such a statement as that I was totally unable to express the thought that was in my mind.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I certainly understood the Senator to say that.

Mr. FULTON. I said they are entirely different. They may include the same matter, but the amendment which prohibits general legislation is one propositon; the amendment which says that no matter that is not germane to the bill is another, and covers an entirely different matter, and properly.

Mr. President, I think that is all that I care to submit on this proposition.

Mr. DEPEW. Mr. President, I listened with great interest to the discussion when this bill was last before the Senate, not only upon the point of order made by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. Borah], but also upon the general issues presented. I am in hearty accord with the idea that there should not be general legislation upon appropriation bills. It is a most dangerous way of enacting laws. There is no time or opportunity for the proper consideration of the measures. If general legislation, it is attached to a bill which must necessarily pass because of the necessities of the Government. I have seen during my service here many things which ought never to become laws, and which were not germane to the measures, pass in appropriation bills. I remember several instances where general legislation was attempted in the Indian appropriation bills affecting the title to lands in the Indian Territory and repealing the restrictions placed by law upon Indian alienations. same danger constantly arises in the agricultural appropriation bill, where the broadest general legislation is attempted and sometimes succeeds. But after studying the rules I am convinced that in the present instance the point of order will not lie. The exceptions to the rule prohibiting general legislation are in broad terms where the amendment is germane to the bill and has been reported favorably by a standing or select committee. The increase of salaries of the President, Vice-President, and Speaker above that which was in the bill when it came from the House was reported favorably by the Finance Committee, and again reported favorably by the Committee on Appropriations. The increase in the salaries of the federal judges was reported favorably from the Judiciary Committee, and again reported favorably from the Committee on Appropriations. That meets the requirements as to the necessity of a favorable report from a standing or select committee. The salaries of government officials are practically fixed every year in the appropriation bills. The House has sent to the Senate a bill making appropriations for the salaries of the President, the Vice-President, the Speaker of the House, and the federal judiciary

All that we are trying to do is to add to those salaries a sum which is, in the judgment of the committees, and if it passes will be in the judgment of the Senate, a proper compensation. To say that in matters like this the Senate rules prohibit action would be to declare that the Senate is simply a rubber stamp upon the proceedings of the House. We would be deprived of all legislative power by that narrow construction upon appropriation bills and compelled, like the Executive, to either accept or veto them. Such has never been the theory or practice in the Senate. If we admit that we can now legis-late in this bill, as I trust the ruling may be, upon this subject, the time, in my judgment, has arrived when action should be taken for proper remuneration of these high officials.

It has been suggested in this debate that we can not afford at the present time to increase these salaries because, on account of the condition of the Treasury and the revenues, it was doubtful if a river and harbor bill could be passed this session. A river and harbor bill usually carries $80,000,000, while this increase will be only $404,500, and the increase for the navy about $20,000,000. The proposition is to give the President of the United States $100,000 per annum. This is an increase of $25,000 only, because he is now allowed $50,000 as salary and $25,000 for traveling expenses. The Vice-President and the Speaker of the House are to receive $20,000 instead of $12,000, as at present; the judges of the circuit court of appeals $10,-000 each instead of $7,000, and the judges of the district courts $8,000 each instead of $6,000.

The progress of our country in every field of endeavor and its development in resources, in wealth, and in opportunity for the last half century is the wonder of the world. In material advance we have outstripped every other nation, but we are behind them all in making the compensation of public officials accord with the varying conditions of the times. Jeffersonian simplicity is not an absolute but a relative idea. The simplicity of the Garden of Eden would hardly do for this period of blizzards and our modern notions of propriety. The simplicity of the stone age, when our ancestors lived in caves and ate their beef and fish raw and an animal's skin for the loins was their only garment and in full accord with the taste of the times. would not at present be adopted by the most democratic Member of this body. Jefferson received a salary of $25,000 a year, and even with his notions of the simple life he sought to maintain the dignity of his office. He gave entertainments and made expenditures which took the whole of it. In every-thing which relates to the cost of living and to what the people expect of a President, $25,000 in 1800 would go further than a hundred thousand in 1909.

I know no better illustration of the radical and rapid changes which have taken place in aspiration, fortunes, and conditions of living than this recollection from my early life. Sixty-odd years ago I was a student in the preparatory course at the academy in the village where I was born. The boys were from all over the United States. The discussions among them then were more for political and literary honors than great fortunes, and, unhappily, now they are more for great fortunes than political or literary honors. But the limit then for the most ambitious in the way of accumulation was a hundred thousand dollars. There was not at that time a dozen men in the populous and wealthy county of Westchester who possessed that amount. Commodore Vanderbilt and John Jacob Astor were the only ones in the United States who were worth over a million. The families in the village, and it was a characteristic of the villages of the State, who owned their houses and had $2,000 a year could keep a carriage and horses and entertain as liberally in the simple and inexpensive methods of those times as the social requirements of the place demanded; and even on a thousand a year, owning their own houses, people managed to get all the comforts and many of the luxuries of life.

Mr. HALE. At the time the presidential salary was fixed at $25,000, how many incomes in the entire country does the Senator believe exceeded that sum?

Mr. DEPEW. I do not think at the time that salary was fixed there was a single income in the country that reached $25,000.

Mr. HALE. Certainly very few.
Mr. DEPEW. I do not think there were any. Washington was the richest man in the country, but his wealth was in lands, and the income from those lands never yielded him any such amount.

Mr. HALE. The inventory could not have amounted to half a million dollars.

Mr. DEPEW. No. He was supposed to have been wealthy; but the estimates which were made later of the property which he held at that time made the amount about $750,000.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. DEPEW. Certainly.

Mr. BORAH. I should like to ask the Senator from New York if he has any figures upon the cost of the necessaries of life and of living at that time to the ordinary workingman.

Mr. DEPEW. I think there was not a mechanic or a workingman in the United States at that time who earned over a dollar a day.

Mr. BORAH. And his dollar could buy at that time twice as much of the necessaries of life as it will now.

Mr. DEPEW. I have not in my mind the price of material at that time, but I do know in the village of Peekskill, where I was born and where I lived, a house could be built for $2,000 which can not be built now for less than $10,000. seventy-five years ago. The wages of those days for the artisans were one-third what they are now, and yet those wages at that period secured for them quite as much as the increased earnings do to-day. We can not reckon the present by the past, but we must reckon the present by its own standards and neces-

We have been fortunate in our Presidents in their abilities, their characters, and their high appreciation and fulfillment of the duties of the chief magistracy of this Republic, but no American takes pride in the conditions which most of them had to meet after their retirement from office. Washington was the richest man in the United States, and his old age was passed upon his estates in the useful and pleasurable occupation of cultivating them and in dispensing a large and liberal hospitality. The picture of his declining years is wholly in sympathy and touch with the occurrences of his active life. Jefferson's wonderful position not only with his countrymen, but with statesmen and men of letters of foreign countries, made his home at Monticello a mecca for the prilgrimages of his admirers. The American people were proud and glad that the author of the Declaration of Independence could so live as to illustrate the best traits of an American gentleman, but the misery of those later years of the great statesman is the shame of his genera-He could not close his doors nor deny a seat at his table tion. to those who had come so far to do him honor. His guests, who were really the guests of the nation, ate him out of house and home. His private fortune was exhausted. A lottery was suggested to relieve him from debt. A popular subscription gave temporary relief. The sale of his library, and the loss thereby of his best loved companions, was a little help, but he died in anguish and in debt. His case presents the strongest possible argument that I know for pensioning our ex-

He, too, lost everything in the effort to maintain in a simple way the dignity of his great place, and died in New York in poverty. Several of the Presidents who had private fortunes, though not large, were enabled to pass their declining days in a very modest way.

Harrison retired from the presidency possessed of very limited property. He was the greatest lawyer who ever occupied the presidential office and one of the ablest this country ever produced. He had to return immediately to the practice of his The only largely remunerative employment for a lawyer of his rank is in the service of corporations. In the eight years of his life, by the hardest kind of work and the simplest living he gained a limited competence for his family. But there was unpleasant criticism and a distinct feeling of annoyance in the press, and a feeling of annoyance among the people, coming home to him that he should be devoting his great talents to these, the only activities where he could use them, to take care of those who were dependent upon him.

Mr. Cleveland, another great President-great in his ability, his equipment, and his courage-returned to the bar. While welcomed by the judges and lawyers, the situation was not satis-He accepted a position as chairman of the board of presidents of certain great corporations. The place was highly honorable and remunerative, but the country would have been better served and better satisfied if, upon a liberal pension, he could, with ease of mind, have devoted his great abilities and experiences in the many ways open for such a man to serve the public outside the holding of office and have left a noble monument of contributions to constitutional interpretations and political literature for succeeding generations.

President Hayes said to me:

There is no place in the United States for an ex-President. If I could go into any of the great business enterprises of the country, I would be hardly fit, and the country would not think it proper, so I am devoting my life to delivering lectures before schools, academies, and colleges.

As he passed me one day in New York, carrying his own grip, I called the attention of a street vender of fruits to the fact that he was Rutherford B. Hayes, ex-President of the United States, and the opportunity was rare to see a man who had occupied such a high place. "Oh!" he answered, "I don't care to see him. He is down and out, and of no account.'

It will be many years, probably, before there will be pensions for retiring Presidents, but I think as long as we isolate so completely from material affairs the man who is big enough to fill this high position, and about whom public opinion places so many limitations when he returns to private life, that we should give him a salary out of which, after meeting, as the people want and require him to meet, the expensive obligations of his place, he should be enabled to save something for dignified retirement in his old age. The American people are not niggardly. They are far from it when propositions for expenditures are properly presented and understood. A hundred and sixty millions a year for pensions forty-five years after the close of the war is their answer to that.

The remark was made in debate that we pay our public officials, like the President, the Vice-President, and the Speaker for their services only, and that if they entertain it is their own affair, and an incident in which neither Congress nor the people are interested. I can not agree with that proposition. I have been at capitals abroad where the American minister could not be found in his residence because he lived so cheaply in comparison with his colleagues from other nations that he was ashamed to disclose his social condition, and yet in the mere matter of communication with the foreign office was an efficient public servant. But every American who came to that capital blushed for his country. A furnished house in Washington large enough and comfortably enough equipped to enable a Vice-President or a Speaker to receive the representatives of other countries, Senators and Representatives in Congress, and Cabinet ministers can not be had for a rental of less than $6,000 a year. Yet the American people expect the Vice-President and the Speaker to be something more than mere presiding officers of the Both are in line for the Presidency, both are conspicuous in the eyes of their countrymen and examples in their personality and living of our American public life to the representatives here of foreign governments.

I knew of a Congressman in years gone by who fitted up a few rooms on one of the floors of a house on a back street, found places in the government service for his children, whose wife did the housekeeping, and who saved his salary. There never was any criticism upon the service he rendered the Government in the House or on committees. After two terms he purchased a farm and became a landed aristocrat in his own State, but when his constituents found out how he had lived here they never returned him. Their idea of a simple life was not the simple life of the crossroads, but the life of a Representative in the Congress of the United States who was not only performing the duties for which he was paid, but was sustaining to the extent of his ability the dignity of the high office to which they had promoted him and the honor in that office of the district which had elected him

A cabinet officer in Europe receives, I think, about $40,000 a year and a house, with all its appointments furnished by the State. The Speaker of the House of Commons is grandly located in the parliament palace, and if I am not mistaken, receives about $40,000 a year and a retiring pension. The same is true of the President of the Chamber of Deputies in France. The President of the French Republic has a salary of $125,000 a year, has the Elysee in Paris, which is the French White House, a fine country seat at Rambouillet, shooting in the great forest of Fontainebleau, and a fund for entertainment. In addition, all his traveling expenses, and they are many, especially in visiting foreign courts, are paid by the State.

It seems to me that the poorest paid of all our public servants, when we consider what we require of the man in ability, acquirement, and equipment, are the judiciary. Judges of equivalent rank to our Supreme Court, though there is no court in the world which has such supereme power, in England receive $40,000 a year and a retiring pension of $20,000. The judges of all their courts are proportionately liberally paid.

I'think that the proposition is correct that the Chief Justice of the United States Supreme Court should have, as has always been the case, a salary as high as that of the Vice-President or the Speaker of the House. The question of judicial salaries is impressive because of differing conditions in different parts of the country. All of them must be treated alike, and yet those who reside where the cost of living is greater should not be famished because their brethren are more happily located.

We all know of districts where a judge can save money on $6,000 a year. There are districts where the judge can live relatively as well and his family hold as reputable a social position on $4,000 a year as his brother can on twelve thousand in New York. All will admit that relations with the judge ought not to be confined to the court room. He should be in touch for his own information and education with the social life of his district. He should live so that he need not be ashamed to receive visiting judges or lawyers who practice in his court and other citizens. The rule which economists have given is that a man's rent should be one-sixth of his expenditures. A furnished house in New York fit for a judge to live in and properly located could not be had for less than $5,000 a year, nor a furnished apartment for less than $3,000. We pay our state supreme court judges in the city of New York $17,500 a year, and they can save nothing. When Governor Hughes be-came our chief magistrate and reorganized our public-service commission, he suggested, and the legislature adopted the suggestion, two commissions of five each—one for the city of New York and the other for the country. The governor and legislature thought that properly equipped men for that place could not be had for less than $15,000 a year, and that is what they are paid. But the district judges of the United States court and the circuit judge living in the same place with one of these commissioners and charged with duties requiring greater equipment, and passing upon questions of far greater moment, are paid, the one $6,000 and the other $7,000 a year.

It is a tribute to the lawyers of the United States that so many who could earn in their private practice ten or twenty times as much as the salary of a judge will, for the honor, accept these positions. But as the expenses of living increase, as they are rapidly increasing, and the privations of those who must maintain large and conspicuous positions upon inadequate means become more acute, the time may come when judicial positions can only go to men who have accumulated a competence or to failures at the bar. The one crying necessity of our public life is to so compensate men who hold high and responsible positions, both at home and abroad, that these offices shall not be confined by limitations of salaries to wealth or incompetence.

During the delivery of Mr. Depew's speech, The VICE-PRESIDENT. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated by the Secretary.

The Secretary. A bill (S. 6484) to establish postal savings banks for depositing savings at interest, with the security of the Government for repayment thereof, and for other purposes. Mr. CARTER. I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Montana asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside. Without objection, it is so ordered, and the Senator from New York will proceed.

After the conclusion of Mr. Depew's speech,

Mr. ELKINS. Mr. President, on the point of order I wish to say that I do not think this is such general legislation or changing existing law as forbids the adoption of this amendment, and I hope that will be the ruling of the Chair.

Mr. President, I agree heartily with the remarks made by the Senator from New York [Mr. DEPEW], and that I favor the increase of salaries to the judges of our federal courts, the Vice-President, and Speaker of the House of Representatives provided for in the amendments to the bill before the Senate.

It seems to me the time has arrived in our history when we can afford to be not only fair and just to these officials, but it is in the public interest that they be better compensated for their I favor increasing the salary of the President, making no allowance for expenses as proposed, for obvious and abundant reasons.

The Vice-President is elected by the people, who decide and declare he is not only qualified to discharge the duties laid upon him by law, but those of the President. He is next to the President. He is expected, during his term of office, to reside at the capital and live and entertain as becomes the second highest officer in the land.

As to the Speaker of the House, he is one of the hardestworked men in Congress; his duties are arduous, responsible, and great; he stands next to the President in molding and perfecting legislation, and by his rulings saves millions of dollars every year of the people's money, besides discharging a multi-tude of difficult and trying duties.

We vote promptly millions of dollars for public buildings here and there; we vote for enormous battle ships to defend our coast against foreign foes. I hear the last proposition is to build two battle ships the estimated cost of which is $13,000,000 each, besides a million annually for maintenance. These battle ships may never be used and may become obsolete before they are put to the test of warfare on the sea.

It seems as if one day our battles might be fought in the skies, where our battle ships will have to navigate in a fluid lighter than water. While providing at enormous cost for battle ships to fight battles on the sea, which may never be fought, and prevent foreign invasion, which may never be attempted, we should take more account of some of our affairs on land and the things that make for the preservation of the Constitution, better security of our liberties, and the protection of life and property. We need battle ships on land, as well as on the sea, but of a very different sort.

The judiciary is our navy on land. This navy requires no original investment, only the cost of maintenance; and how parsimonious we have been. The liberties of our people, their lives and property, depend upon the judiciary. While we may anticipate battles on the sea and invasion from a foreign foe, these may never occur.

On land, however, there is a constant battle, incessant fighting all along the line to preserve the Republic and the Constitution in its integrity as our fathers gave it to us, to enforce the laws, to compel justice everywhere, and allow no oppression or wrong to the humblest citizen, and the chief instrumentality in this great warfare and doing all these things is the judiciary. late the judiciary has been assaulted as never before in our history, and, strange to say, attempts have been made to discredit it by those it most protects. This is the worst sort of

The Supreme Court of the United States is regarded by loyal and thoughtful people as the best safeguard of the Constitution and the best bulwark of the Republic. The Supreme Court is the mightiest force in the wide world; it has the last word in the final settlement of all great questions arising under the laws and the Constitution; back of its decrees, orders, and judgments stands the entire strength of the Republic and every gun on land and sea to give them force.

The office of Chief Justice ranks in dignity and importance next to that of the President. In no nine men living is there vested as much power as is given to the judges of the Supreme Court of the United States, and on no nine men rests such vast responsibilities. For integrity, learning, patriotism, and right conduct, the federal judges of the United States have made a record that compels the approval and admiration of all people where courts of justice administer law.

Relatively speaking, the pay and compensation to federal judges is inadequate. The salaries of the judges of our federal courts are so meager they can not afford to entertain their neighbors as they are entertained; they can not afford to maintain a social standing equal to the demands of their position. They live in the most modest and economical way to make ends meet, and their children, instead of inheriting a competency, or even anything, get nothing from their fathers but a good name and poverty.

Most any good lawyer, with a fair practice, earns more than the judges of our district and circuit courts. The other day my attention was called to the trial of a cause before one of the district judges of the United States in my State receiving $6,000 a year for his services, where each attorney got a fee in the case more than the salary of the judge for an entire year, and in this case, as in most all others, the judge had to do as much work as the attorneys.

Measured by their learning, the duties and responsibilities laid upon them, the importance of what they have to do and the labor they must give to the consideration of cases, decisions, and trials, they are not compensated as well as other officials.

We do not hesitate to give millions for the construction of battle ships, public buildings, and everything that will help the material progress of the Republic, but we stint our judges and our parsimony is both unfortunate and reprehensible. judiciary should be independent, our judges beyond want and not compelled to give their time and attention as to how they can maintain themselves and families and make ends meet, but give all their time and the best in them to the great work they have in hand. They should be paid adequate salaries, be made independent, and their families removed from want. What would be the value of all our battle ships and our public buildings; what would our material progress, our navy and army avail, if our liberties, lives, and property are not secure?

I believe some day the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States will be paid $50,000 a year, and for my part I favor now that his salary be fixed at $25,000 per annum and associate justices at $24,500. If I had my way, I would advance the salary above that named in the amendments to the bill, to district judges, judges of the supreme court and court of appeals in the District of Columbia, and also the judges of the Court of Claims.

Mr. President, I am heartily in favor of the pending amendments, and hope they will be passed.

Mr. BOURNE. Mr. President, I crave the indulgence of the Senate for a few moments in order that I may submit my reasons, which I have reduced to writing, for favoring the increase in the salary of the President and Vice-President of the United States and of the Speaker of the House of Representatives. confine my attention particularly to these offices, as I was the author of the President's and Vice-President's salary bill introduced in the Senate and referred to the Committee on Finance and by them reported to the Senate with amendments, though I am also in favor of increasing the judicial salaries, as provided for in the legislative bill.

It is said that republics are ungrateful. And in a measure it is true, because the conception of citizenship in a republic is that the citizen should be first of all a patriot and then a Spartan. The circumstances and environments surrounding those who established our Republic were excuse enough to warrant them in the adoption of these concepts as rules of action, which by the sheer force of national growth and the development of higher ideals of life and duty have now become obsolete.

It sufficed for them to make haste in a week's journey from Philadelphia to New York, to live lives of frugality and priva-tion, to turn a dollar once a year, to receive little for toil and spend less than was received, to be as sparing of charity for their fellows' wants and shortcomings as of their own meager incomes, and to look upon a public servant, in the matter of repaying service, as a servant indeed; but withal to regard public service eminently honorable, and the attaching power and distinction most desirable; in fact, so desirable as to induce into its ranks men of the best brains and highest ideals and patriotism.

It came about therefore in the most natural way possible that the people did not feel called upon to offer, nor the public servant to demand, more than sufficed to meet the need of the passing hour.

Hence in this age of hundred-million-dollar fortunes, where, in this country, at least, the industrial force of society has, in large measure, overshadowed the police powers of the state, we still behold the salaries of governors of magnificent Commonwealths in our Union fixed by constitutions and by laws at sums as low as $1,500 per year; judges of our courts, wherein the property rights of litigants involved amount to millions of dollars, paid beggarly salaries, as low as $3,000 per annum; state legislators, who are in vain being elected and called upon by the people to dethrone industrial usurpation and reenthrone the police powers of the state, receiving stipends of $3 per day for a few days once in an average of two years, and our federal judges receiving salaries wholly inadequate for the rearing and educating of their children and the laying by of a competency at all commensurate with the necessity for them to retire from the bench before senility or death overtakes them.

In many respects we are not only a magnificent Nation, but we are also a magnanimous one. Our national wealth is estimated at $127,000,000,000-a sum utterly beyond human comprehension-which is the present measure of our tax-paying capacity, and upon which we raise the revenue directly or in-directly to pay, among other things, our public servants the munificent salaries they receive. This magnificence of national wealth comes to us by the genius of our manhood, by the genius of our institutions, including honest and able government, and by chance. It chanced, providentially, that within our borders nature spread out in abundance all of the materials necessary for the creation of wealth. Nowhere on the face of the globe has she in her own generous way more bounteously given of all she had to give to man. Chance, pure and simple chance! Under the benign influence of popular government, whose genius is the liberty and freedom of the individual citizen from restraint, American Anglo-Saxon manhood has had free play; and behold, the spoliation of the face of nature in the creation of vast factories, as diversified as the wants of man; railroads and telegraphs that cobweb a continent, with all that that means; wildernesses converted into fertile fields and smiling farms; mines opened and pouring forth their treasures in streams; a country developed until it counts its hamlets, towns, and cities by tens of thousands, and magnificent cities that count their inhabitants by millions. Wonderful is the magnificence of our nation, whose pride is the parent of its magnanimity!

But our munificence to our public servants will never bankrupt us. We may go on piling up billions of wealth for yet another century, multiplying millionaires, and remain oblivious to the fact that the demands on public servants grow more exacting with the growth of the Nation and the passing of the years, while brains and energy rise in marked value in every vocation except in the public service. Private concerns pay mining engineers, for instance, more than we pay our Presidents. Washington at his death was wealthy, according to the standards of wealth in his day, but his estate measured in dollars would be a very common affair now, such as thousands of obscure men in this country may boast as the result of modest commercial enterprise commanding no great brain power and paying only what thrift, prudence, and industry now pay in numerous walks of life.

The governing of a nation then that numbered no more people than now dwell within the city of New York, whose common interests were comparatively few, simple, and widely separated, entailed less care upon the President a century and a quarter ago than is entailed upon a mayor to-day in the governing of a city of 150,000 people whose public and private interests are mingled in a complex struggle for supremacy. Not alone in the material growth and development of this great nation, but in its many times multiplied interests and constantly widening circle of differentiation in that development, have the responsibilities of the nation's Chief Executive enormously increased, until now any man falling below the weight and stature of a physical and mental giant has no possible business in the Presidency of the United States, and the man who can faithfully, intelligently, and acceptably discharge its duties, with the necessary training, would be big enough in any other walk of life to command first place on the pay roll.

The work entailed upon a Chief Executive of the United States of to-day, as against that entailed on a President in the early days of our Republic, is just as much greater as our domain, our population, our national wealth, and our national revenues are now than they were then, and the demands upon a President's nerve forces are proportionately increased. As it is the nerve strain which sets the pace that kills, this increased demand upon a President's energies is a relatively increased menace to his health and life.

I am submitting a table herewith of the Presidents from Washington to McKinley, each inclusive, showing the age of each when inaugurated, the years of service in the office, the age at retirement, the age at death, and the years surviving retirement. Of the 24 Presidents, all but 4 of them were well beyond the age of 50 years when elected. With the exception of Washington and Monroe, all who preceded the elder Harrison lived after their retirement from eight to twenty-four years, or an average of seventeen years each; while from Harrison to Mc-Kinley, 16 in number, but two—Buchanan and Cleveland—reached 75 years of age, 6 of the 16 being overtaken by death, 3 of whom were assassinated before or at the expiration of their terms, and the period of retirement of the 10 who did survive dropped down to an average of ten years, or for the whole 16 down to six and one-fourth years. The point I make in this relation is: The risk to the life of the Presidents as a result of the increasing burdens of the office should be compensated for by the Government for the benefit of their families and those naturally dependent upon them.

As the family is the unit upon which the state is founded, it is not only the inclination, but the duty of the husband and father as the head of the family to anticipate the needs and requirements of those dependent upon him by accumulating a reserve to meet these requirements in case of his untimely demise and to launch upon the sea of life his offspring in as befitting a manner as lies in his power.

I do not favor pensioning our ex-Presidents. The theory of pensions is one of charity, that is out of place in a republic, being made to stand as the measure of the citizen's patriotism and the measure of the government's justice. It is an adjunct primarily of paternalism in monarchies and of socialism in republics. The servant is worthy of his hire, which I submit should be determined, in a measure at least, by the risks incident to the occupation, by the ability of the servant to perform what he is hired to do, and by the magnitude of the responsibilities incident to the service.

Illustrating the points I have made:

A glance at the table above will indicate some of the risks incident to holding the high office of President in this Government, and a close study, I think, will disclose a decreasing life tenure corresponding to the increase of the responsibilities of the office of those occupying the Presidency since the days of Buchanan, when the Republic's especially strenuous career as a nation opened.

It has never been the practice of biographers to parade the poverty of our Presidents, omitted, perhaps, in the hope that posterity might forget, or out of due regard for Liberty's Goddess, whose fair face they hoped to spare from the mantle of shame. Nor will I parade the facts, except to say that, measured by the standards of to-day, not one of our Presidents was a rich man, while most of them would now be deemed poor. Therefore, I also draw the veil and have expunged from the financial column of the above table the figures I had there originally written. It is enough to say, perhaps, that the heirs of but a single one of our Presidents figure as even moderately wealthy men to-day.

I submit another interesting table as of 1904, except as to the South American republics and Mexico, bearing upon the subject of increased salaries for our President and Vice-President.

It relates to the civil lists of European and American countries, their populations, square miles of territory, national wealth, and revenues, and is offered for purposes of comparison.

The stupendous civil lists of Europe are the price the people there pay for royalty, with the exception of France, to which I shall call special attention later.

The civil lists of the royal houses of Europe, considered as percentages of the revenues of the realms, respectively, would lead to the conclusion, if we did not know better, that monarchical government is conducted as a private business for profit on a dividend basis of about two-fifths of 1 per cent to per cent of the gross income of the state, as illustrated in the cases of England and Greece. Here are the figures:

France is very rich; she is very frugal; she is a republic; she is not ungrateful; she pays her President $114,000 as an annual salary and $114,000 for expenses; total, $228,000. Her estimated national wealth is $54,250,000,000-less than one-half of the wealth we boast by twenty billions, and upon that as the basis of her tax-paying capacity she raises $691,349,500, a sum only $16,000,000 less than we raise on a basis of $127,625,000,000 in national wealth. If our revenues were really raised on the national wealth, and in a sense they are, and we were paying relatively the same tax on it that the French people pay on theirs, then our revenues would reach more than fifteen hundred million dollars annually, and our President's salary and civil list would represent about one twelve-hundredth part of 1 per cent of that revenue.

The actual salary of the President of the United States was one fourteen hundred and fifteenth $(\frac{1}{1415})$ part of 1 per cent of the revenues of the Government for 1904, when they amounted to upward of \$707,050,000.

Perhaps with pride we can point to this last item. It depends upon who does the pointing and the view point. We certainly should pay our Chief Magistrate a compensation commensurate with the duties he performs, the sacrifices he makes, and the risks he runs. Otherwise, whether we gauge his salary by the measure of our 85,000,000 of people, our 3,600,000 square miles of territory, our $127,000,000,000 of national wealth, or our $700,000,000 of annual revenue, or by all of them, and compare it with that paid to other rulers and presidents in the world, we must appear utterly ridiculous in the eyes of mankind.

The Vice-President, nominated by his party and elected by the people, is thus estimated by the popular verdict to be qualified in every way to act as the Nation's Chief Executive, should occasion demand.

The Speaker of the House of Representatives occupies a position next in honor to the Vice-President and second in power only to the President himself.

Upon the honesty, ability, and justice of judges rests the very stability and duration of our Government itself.

Mr. President, in conclusion I would ask, Do the American people in this age of enlightenment and national and individual dynamic efficiency want their leading great offices restricted to rich men only? Do they want their public servants to be under obligations to any persons but to themselves? Do they want to repay good service with selfishness and unappreciativeness? No; most certainly not. We all know that the American people are just, generous, and appreciative, and I feel sure that if this question was submitted to the people, they would practically unanimously vote to give their leading public servants much higher compensations than those provided for in this bill.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, the question before the Senate is not as to the expediency of increasing the salaries as proposed in this bill. The question before the Senate is not whether it is wise or unwise. The question which the Senate has before it is to determine whether under Rule XVI this amendment can be placed in a general appropriation bill.

I do not wish to detain the Senate in considering this matter. I believe it is the feeling of the majority of the members of the Senate that these salaries ought to be increased, and certainly without straining Rule XVI by a forced construction this purpose can be accomplished under Rule XI, which permits the Senate to suspend, modify, or amend any rule which may be interfering with the action desired by the Senate. I think it would be an unfortunate thing for the Senate to make a forced construction of Rule XVI, because it has been found by long experience that general legislation ought not to be permitted on a general appropriation bill, and this rule is a wise one and should be construed in accordance with its plain meaning and not encourage its breach by a forced construction for mere expediency's sake.

I wish to call the attention of the Senator briefly to the fact that paragraph 1, under its usual and reasonable interpretation, in no wise conflicts with the proper interpretation of paragraph 3. Paragraph 3 is peremptory. It declares in the most positive manner that "no amendment which proposes general legislation shall be received to any general appropriation bill." The Senate has repeatedly construed that provision of paragraph 3. It did so only a year ago. On March 21 the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. Clarke] proposed an amendment that the judges of the district courts of the United States shall be allowed the sum of $6 per day as expenses of travel, and so forth, an item which had been passed upon by the Judiciary Committee and was offered because of that fact. But because it was general legislation, obnoxious to paragraph 3 of Rule XVI, the President of the Senate very properly sustained the point of order made against it by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. Cullom]. I wish the decision in that case incorporated in my remarks.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, permission is granted.

The matter referred to is as follows:

[From Congressional Record, March 21, 1908.]

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Mr. President, I am authorized by the Judiciary Committee to offer the amendment which I send to the desk. I ask that it be made an independent section.

The Vice-President. The Senator from Arkansas offers an amendment from the Judiciary Committee as a separate section, which will be

The Secretary. It is proposed to insert as a new section the fol-

That hereafter the judges of the district court of the United States shall be allowed the sum of $6 per day as expenses of travel and attendance for each day that any such judge shall be necessarily absent from his place of residence in holding court or in the discharge of other judicial duties in any other place in the district whereof he is judge. That for the purposes of this act any such judge shall be deemed to reside in that place in his district in which his time is principally employed in holding court and otherwise discharging his official duties. Said sum to be paid upon the written certificate of such judges, and such payment shall be allowed the marshal in the settlement of the accounts of the United States."

Mr. Clarke of Arkansas, Just a word in explanation of the amendment.

Mr. Cullom. Mr. President—

Mr. Clarke of Arkansas. If the point of order is to be raised against to amendment, I shall not take a moment of time in explaining it.

Mr. Cullom. Mr. President, I wish to make the point of order against the amendment.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. If the point of order is to be raised against the amendment, I shall not dake a moment of time in explaining it.

Mr. CULLOM. Mr. President, I wish to make the point of order against the amendment.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Then it is useless to take the time of the Senate in discussing the amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. CULBERSON obtained the floor.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Mr. President, I think I yielded prematurely on the matter of the amendment which I just offered. I ought to have carried my statement a little further. It is an amendment suggested by a standing committee of the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. CLLARKE of Arkansas. That may be true, but any amendment is new legislation. If it were not new legislation it would not be an amendment: but does it propose the kind of new legislation that is prohibited by the rules of the Senate?

Mr. CULLOM. I have no question but that it is in conflict with the rules of the Senate.

Mr. CULLOM. All right. I call attention, Mr. President, to paragraph 3 of Rule XVI, which provides that—

"No amendment which proposes general legislation shall be received to any general appropriation bill nor shall any amendment not germane or relevant to the subject-matter contained in the bill be received to any general appropriation bill nor shall any amendment not germane or relevant to the subject-matter contained in the bill be received to Shall any amendment to any item or clause of such bill be received to shall any amendment to any item or clause of such bill be received by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. Nelson] and was intended to be proposed to the bill providing for the sundry civil expenses of the Government. It was referred to the Judiciary Committee, and what I now offer is the provision which was agreed upon by that committee, which directed me to present it to the Senate.

Mr. CULLOM.

Mr. OWEN. Under paragraph 1 of Rule XVI it is provided

No amendments shall be received to any general appropriation bill, the effect of which will be to increase an appropriation already contained in the bill, or to add a new item of appropriation—

Except under certain conditions, that is-unless it be made to carry out the provisions of some existing law, or treaty stipulation, or act, or resolution previously passed by the Senate during that session; or unless the same be moved by direction of a standing or select committee of the Senate, or proposed in pursuance of an estimate of the head of some one of the departments.

Numerous items may be inserted on an appropriation bill under the language of paragraph I without in anywise contravening the prohibition of paragraph 3, forbidding general legislation on a general appropriation bill.

Mr. President, under the term "general legislation" there should be no manner of doubt, because the question of what is general law, the question of what is general legislation, has been decided and passed on by the courts of nearly every State of the Union—New York, Pennsylvania, New Jersey, California, Missouri, Mississippi, Florida, and many others—and these authorities I desire to submit to the Senate; and without taking the time of the Senate or trespassing upon its patience by reading these authorities, I ask permission to incorporate the decisions of the courts of the country upon these terms "general law" and "general legislation," and the "definitions" set forth in their opinions. I think the Senate ought to have its attention called to the views of the courts defining "general

GENERAL LAW.

The term "general laws" is one which has been employed to designate different classes of laws. Examples of its various signification are given in Bouvier's Law Dictionary, where it is shown that its use is common with reference to the subject-matter of statutes, as well as to the extent of territory over which statutes are intended to operate. There it is shown to be in use as the antithesis of "private," also of "local," and also of "special" statutes, and it is said that "in deciding whether or not a given law is general, the purpose of the act and the objects on which it operates must be looked to." Legal writings abound with instances where enactments of the general law-making department are mentioned as general laws by way of distinguishing them from municipal laws. (Southern Express Co. v. City of Tuscaloosa, 31 South, 460, 461; 132 Ala., 326.)

A law may take its general nature either from its territorial comprehensiveness, or from the nature of its subject-matter, or from both. A law may be of a general nature being alone due to its territorial comprehensiveness. A law which is general by reason of its territorial comprehensiveness. A law which is general by reason of its territorial comprehensiveness only can no more be limited in its operation territorially by a subsequent special law than one which is general in the nature of its subject-matter. (Mathis v. Jones, 11 S. E., 1018, 1019; S4 Ga., S04.)

Constitution, article 11, section 6, declaring that cities or towns heretofore or hereafter organized, and all charters thereof framed or adopted by authority of this constitution shall be subject to and controlled by general laws, does not mean the general laws the legislature is commanded to pass for the incorporation, organization, and classification in proportion to population of cities and towns, or amendments thereto, because it is by the constitution was adopted to become organized under such general acts of incorporation,

AS RELATING TO ALL OF A CLASS.

The word "general" comes from "genus" and relates to a whole genus or kind; or, in other words, to a whole class or order. Hence a law which affects a class of persons or things less than all may be a general law. (Brooks v. Hyde, 37 Cal., 366, 376.)

A statute which relates to persons or things as a class is a general law. (Clark v. Finley, 54 S. W., 343, 345; 93 Tex., 171. Ewing v. Hoblitzelle, 85 Mo., 64, 78. State ex rel. Maggard v. Pond, 93 Mo., 606, 641; 6 S. W., 469, 471 (citing State ex rel. Llonberger v. Tolle, 71 Mo., 645). State ex rel. Harris v. Herrmann, 73 Mo., 340, 353. Hamman v. Central Coal & Coke Co., 56 S. W., 1091, 1092; 156 Mo., 232 (quoting Lynch v. Murphy, 119 Mo., 163; 24 S. W., 774). Van Riper v. Parsons, 40 N. J. Law (11 Vroom), 1, 8. Sawyer v. Dooley, 32 Pac., 437, 440; 21 Nev., 390. Central R. Co. v. State Board of Assessors, 2 Atl., 789, 798; 48 N. J. Law (19 Vroom), 1; 57 Am. Rep., 516. Cox v. State, 8 Tex. App., 254, 289; 34 Am. Rep., 746. In re New York Elevated R. Co. (N. Y.), 3 Abb. (N. C.), 401, 417, 422.)

The number of persons upon which the law shall have any direct effect may be very few, by reason of the subject to which it relates, but it must operate equally and uniformly upon all brought within the relations and circumstances for which it provides. A statute, in order to avoid a conflict with the prohibition against special legislation, must be general in its application to the class, and all of the class within like circumstances must come within its operation. (Daily Lender v. Cameron, 41 Pac., 635, 639; 3 Okla., 677. Gay v. Thomas, 46 Pac., 378, 586; 14 Utah, 383.)

A general act is one which has room within its terms to operate on all of a known class of things, present and prospective, and not merely on one particular thing, or on a particular class of things, existing at the time of its passage. (City of Topeka v. Gillett, 4 Pac., 800, 803; 32 Kans., 431.)

on one particular faining, or on a particular class of tinings, existing at the time of its passage. (City of Topeka v. Gillett, 4 Pac., 800, 803; 32 Kans., 431.)

A general law is one framed in general terms, restricted to no locality, and operating equally upon all of a group of objects which, having regard to the purposes of the legislation, are distinguished by characteristics sufficiently marked and important to make them a class by themselves. (Trenton Iron Co. v. Yard, 42 N. J. Law (13 Vroom), 357, 363. Riper v. Parsons, 40 N. J. Law (11 Vroom), 123, 125, 29 Am. Rep., 210.)

by themselves. (Trenton from Co. 25, 29 Am. 357, 363. Riper v. Parsons, 40 N. J. Law (11 Vroom), 123, 125, 29 Am. Rep., 210.)

A law is general when it applies equally to all persons embraced in a class founded upon some natural or extrinsic or constitutional distinction. It is not general or constitutional if it confers particular privileges or imposes peculiar disabilities or burdensome condition in the exercise of a common right upon a class of persons arbitrarily selected from the general body of those who stand in precisely the same relation to the subject of the law. (Robinson v. Southern Pac. Co., 38 Pac., 94, 98; 105 Cal., 526; 28 L. R. A., 773 (citing City of Pasadena v. Stimson, 91 Cal., 238; 27 Pac., 604).)

General laws are those which relate to or bind all within the jurisdiction of the lawmaking power, limited as that power may be in its territorial operation or by constitutional restraints. A law applicable to all the counties of a class as made or authorized by the constitution is neither a local nor a special law. If it applies to all the counties of a class authorized by the constitution to be made, it is general law; and whether there may be few or many counties to which its provisions will apply is a matter of no consequence. (Cody v. Murphey, 26 P., 1081, 1082; 89 Cal., 522.)

While it is true that a law which applies to all of a class in a State is held to be a general law, it is equally true that one which applies to only a part of a class is a special law. Thus, in Dundee Mortgage and Investment Company v. School District No. 1 of Multnomah County

(U. S.), 19 Fed., 359, it was said that an act providing for the assessment of mortgages is so far a general act; it comprehends the genus. But an act providing for the assessment of all mortgages for a sum exceeding $500 or not payable within one year from the date of their execution is special; it comprehends only a species of mortgage. Hence, a statute relating to the taxation of railroads which does not comprehend all but only two county railroads is not a general law. (People v. Central Pac. R. Co., 23 Pac., 303, 309; 83 Cal., 393.)

A statute for the assessment and collection of taxes which applies to all incorporated cities and towns in the State is a general and not a special law within the meaning of the constitution. (People v. Wallace, 70 III., 680, 681.)

A law embracing all cities or all townships is a general law within the meaning of the constitution, because of their marked peculiarities. They are by common consent regarded distinct forms of municipal government, and so constitute a class by themselves. (State v. City of Trenton, 42 N. J. Law (13 Vroom), 487.) But where an act authorizing township trustees to pay for macadamizing streets, etc., excepts from its operation certain townships, it is not a general law. (Dobbins v. Northampton Tp., 14 Atl., 587, 589; 50 N. J. Law, 496.)

As Relating to All in Like Circumstances.

AS RELATING TO ALL IN LIKE CIRCUMSTANCES.

AS RELATING TO ALL IN LIKE CIRCUMSTANCES.

A law is general and uniform if all persons in the same circumstances are treated alike. (D. H. Davis Coal Co. v. Polland, 62 N. E., 492-496; 158 Ind. 607.)

Laws are general and uniform, not because they operate upon every person in the State, for they do not, but because every person that is brought within the relations and circumstances provided for is within the law. They are general and uniform in their operation upon all persons in the like situation, and the fact of their being general and uniform is not affected by the number of those within the scope of their operation. (Arms v. Ayer, 61 N. E., 851, 855, 192; Ill., 601; 58 L. R. A., 277; 85 Am. St. Rep., 357; McAumich v. Mississippi & M. R. Co., 20 Iowa, 338; Iowa R. Land Co. v. Soper, 39 Iowa, 112, 116.)

A law is to be regarded as general only when its provisions apply to all objects of legislation distinguished alike by qualities and attributes which necessitate the legislation or to which the enactment has manifest relation. Such law must embrace all and exclude none whose conditions and wants render such legislation equally necessary or appropriate to them as a class. (Warner v. Hoagland, 51 N. J. Law (22 Vroom), 66, 68, 16 Atl., 166; Randolph v. Wood, 7 Atl., 286; 49 N. J. Law (20 Vroom), 85; on error, 15 Atl., 271, 275; 50 N. J. Law (21 Vroom), 175 Helfer v. Simon, 53 N. J. Law (24 Vroom), 550; 22 Atl., 120; Dexheimer v. City of Orange, 36 Atl., 706, 707; 60 N. J. Law, 111; Hoas v. O'Donnell, 37 Atl., 447, 449; 60 N. J. Law, 35.)

CHARACTER OF SUBJECT-MATTER.

CHARACTER OF SUBJECT-MATTER.

Without undertaking to discriminate nicely or define with precision, it may be said that the character of a law as general or local depends on the character of its subject-matter. If that be of a general nature, existing throughout the State, in every county, a subject-matter in which all the citizens have a common interest, * * * then the laws which relate to and regulate it are laws of a general nature, and, by virtue of the prohibition referred to, must have uniform operation throughout the State. (State v. Davis, 44 N. E., 511, 512; 55 Ohio St., 15 (quoting Kelley v. State, 6 Ohio St., 269).)

A law framed in general terms, restricted to no locality, and operating equally upon all of a group of objects which, having regard to the purposes of legislation, are distinguished by characteristics sufficiently marked and important to make them a class by themselves, is not a special or local law, "but a general law." (Van Riper v. Parsons, 40 N. J. Law (11 Vroom), 123, 29 Am. Rep., 210.) To justify separate legislation for town or counties, there must be something in the subject-matter of the enactment to call for and necessitate such legislation. (In re Cleveland, 19 Atl., 17, 19; 52 N. J. Law (23 Vroom), 188, citing Hammer v. State, 44 N. J. Law (18 Vroom), 667.)

FORM OR DECLARATORY PROVISION.

FORM OR DECLARATORY PROVISION.

FORM OR DECLARATORY PROVISION.

The term "general law" in constitution, article 7, section 21, providing that no general law shall be enforced until it is published, includes all public laws which are such by their own nature, but not laws which by their own nature are private, but by a provision therein are declared to be public. (Burhop v. City of Milwaukee, 21 Wis., 257, 259.)

An act is nevertheless general, though it may not operate on all cities of the State. If it is general and uniform throughout the State, operating on all of a certain class or on all who are brought within the relations and circumstances provided in the act, it is not within the constitutional inhibition against special legislation. The form or professon of an act does not control; and although it is general in form or pretense, if it necessarily produces a special result, it can not be upheld. (State v. Hunter, 17 Pac., 177, 184; 38 Kans., 578.)

upheld. (State v. Hunter, 17 Pac., 177, 184; 38 Kans., 578.)

NUMBER IN CLASS.

A law is general if nothing be excluded that should be contained. If the only limitation contained in a law is a legitimate classification of its objects, it is a general law. Hence if the object of the law has characteristics so distinct as reasonably to form, for the purpose legislated upon, a class by itself, the law is general, notwithstanding it operates upon a single object only, for a law is not general because it operates upon every person in the State, but because every person that can be brought within its predicament becomes subject to its operation. (Budd v. Hancock, 48 Atl., 1023, 1024; 66 N. J. Law, 133.)

The fact that an act is really applicable to but one municipal corporation, or, in other words, that there is but one which, at the time of its enactment, comes under its provisions, is not sufficient to make a law special and not general. But the question presents itself whether or not the legislature can create a class on the basis of indebtedness and define the amount and character of the indebtedness which shall characterize the class. We are unable to see any reason why it can not do so equally as well as on the basis of population; and an act by its terms applicable only to a city having an indebtedness to the amount of $200,000, in the payment of which it has defaulted, is a general law. (Ex parte Wells, 21 Fla., 280, 313.)

Within the meaning of the constitution forbidding the legislature to pass special or local laws for the assessment and collection of taxes, and providing that all such laws shall be general and of uniform operation throughout the State, an act which is general in its terms, embracing all railroads in a similar condition in the State, is a general act, although there may not be but one railroad in the State to which the act applies. A statute which relates to persons or things as a class is a general law, while a statute which relates to particular persons or things of a class is special. T

Laws are general if they apply to a class, though the class may be very limited, or even where there is but one of the class; but the law must be general in its application and embrace all of the given class, and not be specific in its application to a particular person or thing. In State v. Cooley (58 N. W., 150; 56 Minn. 540) it is said another proposition that may be laid down as beyond the question is that, if the basis of the classification is valid, it is wholly immaterial how many or how few members there are in the class. One may constitute a class as well as a thousand, although, of course, the fewer the numbers the closer the courts will scrutinize the act to see that it is not an evasion of the constitution. (Guthrie Daily Leader v. Cameron, 41 Pac., 635, 639; 3 Okl., 677.)

A law formed in general terms, restricted to no locality, broad enough to reach every portion of the State, and abating legislative commissions for the regulation of municipal affairs wherever they exist and operating equally upon all of them, is a general law without regard to the consideration that within the State there happens to be but one individual of a class or one place where it produces effects. (Van Riper v. Parsons, 40 N. J. Law (111 Vroom), 123, 125; 29 Am. Rep., 210.)

General laws are those which relate to a whole class of persons, places, relations, or things, grouped according to some specified class characteristic, binding all within the jurisdiction of the lawmaking power, limited, as the power may be, by territorial operation or by constitutional restraint. It is none the less general though at the time of its passage there may be but one, or in fact not one, individual of the class thus created, provided that the circle or ring of classification be such as to remain open to receive the potentials which may arise bearing the peculiar marks of the class. (Groves v. Grant County Court, 26 S. E., 460, 463; 42 W. Va., 587.

AS PUBLIC ACT OR LAW.

ing the peculiar marks of the class. (Groves v. Grant County Court, 26 S. E., 460, 463; 42 W. Va., 587.)

As Public act or R. Law.

A general act is one which regards the whole community, and is used as synonymous with "public act." (Ex parte Burke, 59 Cal., 6, 11; 43 Am. Rep., 231.)

Statutes relating to all the municipal corporations of the State are general laws. (Thomason v. Ashworth, 14 Pac., 615, 618; 73 Cal., 73.)

Any statute which affects the public at large, though operating within the limits of a particular locality, is generally declared to be a public statute. The terms "general" and "public" law are frequently used synonymously, but they are not the equivalent of each other. Every general law is necessarily a public law, but every public law, as defined, is not a general law. A general law is a law which operates throughout the State alike upon all the people or all of a class. Any law affecting the public within the limits of the county or community would be a public law, though not a general law. The effect of the statute, more than its wording or phraseology, must determine its character as a public, general, special, or local statute. (Holt v. City of Birmingham, 19 South., 735, 736; 111 Ala., 369.)

A law is general in the broad sense of the term if it extends to the whole State, or the whole of a legislative class of localities legitimately created for the purpose of general legislation. A law is general in the restricted sense of the term as it is used in constitution, article 7, section 21, not only when it is general in the broad sense thereof, but also when it is of that character in the sense of being public; but if it applies only to a single subdivision of the State, as a county, town, city, or village, or a collection of such localities not constitution, article 7, section 21, which provides that corporations without banking powers or privileges may be terminated under general laws, but shall not be created by special act, it is used only as opposite to special, and without any desig

TERRITORIAL COMPREHENSIVENESS.

TERRITORIAL COMPREHENSIVENESS.

A general act is one applicable to every part of the Commonwealth, one that applies to the whole State. (Davis v. Clark, 106 Pa., 377, 384; 15 Wkly. Notes Cas., 209, 210.)

A general act is one which regulates the common good of all the inhabitants within the State. (State v. Murray, 17 South., 832, 834; 47 La. Ann., 1424.)

In Lorentz v. Alexander (87 Ga., 444; 13 S. E., 632) it is said a law, to be general, must operate uniformly throughout the whole State upon the subject or class of subjects with which it purports to deal; so that an act relating to the power of municipalities and counties to grant liquor licenses from which numerous places are excepted is not a general law. (Sasser v. Martin, 29 S. E., 278, 285; 101 Ga., 447.)

In order that a law may be general it must be of force in every county in the State; and while it may contain special provisions making its effect different in certain counties, those counties can not be exempt from its entire operation. (Carolina Grocery Co. v. Burnet, 39 S. E., 381, 384; 61 S. C., 205; 58 L. R. A., 687 (citing Dean v. Spartansburg Co., 59 S. C., 110; 37 S. E., 228.)

A statute is not special or local merely because it authorizes or prohibits the doing of a thing in a certain locality. It is, notwithstanding this fact, a general law if it applies to all the citizens of the State and deals with a matter of general concern. (State v. Corson, 50 Atl., 780, 785; 67 N. J. Law, 178.)

AUTHORIZATION OF CITY TO ISSUE BONDS.

A legislative act authorizing a city to issue bonds for stock in a railroad company is not a general law within a constitutional provision requiring that all general laws shall be published before going into effect. (Luling v. Racine (U. S.), 15 Fed. Cas., 1105.)

CLASSIFICATION OF MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS.

A law framed in general terms, restricted to no locality, and operating equally upon all of a group of objects which, having regard to the purposes of the legislation, are distinguished by characteristics sufficiently marked and important to make them a class by themselves is not a special or local law, but a general law. The classification must be just and reasonable and not arbitrary. Under these principles the act of March 20, 1882, authorizing incorporated villages having within their classification in the sale of intoxicating liquors therein, is not repugnant to the provisions of the Constitution that acts relating to municipal corporations must be of a general nature. ESTABLISHMENT OF COURTS.

A general law must be one that operates uniformly throughout the whole State upon a subject or class of subjects with which it proposes to deal. Thus an act dealing with the establishment of county courts in order to be general and have uniform operation throughout the State must affect each county in the State; so that an act providing for the establishment of a city court upon the recommendation of the grand jury of any county having a population of 10,000 or more where a city court does not now exist is not a general law. (Thomas v. Austin, 30 S. E., 627, 628; 103 Ga., 701.)

Section 20, article 6, of the constitution provides that the general assembly may provide for the establishment of a probate court "in each county having a population of over 50,000." Section 1 of article 6 provides that "all laws relating to the courts shall be general and of uniform operation, and the organization, jurisdiction, powers, proceedings, and practice of all courts of the same class or grade so far as regulated by law * * shall be uniform. Held, That section 20 of article 6 authorized the general assembly to establish probate courts in such counties having a population of over 50,000 as it might deem best. The only effect intended to be given by the framers of the constitution to section 1, article 6, was to require that all laws relating "to the organization, jurisdiction, powers, proceedings, and practice of all courts of the same class or grades" shall be uniform. Therefore neither section operated to render unconstitutional a law providing for the establishment of probate courts only in counties of over 70,000 population. (Knickerbocker v. People, 102 III., 218, 222, 229.)

REGULATION OF DISPOSAL OF PUBLIC FUNDS.

An act regulating the disposal of a portion of the public funds of the State previously regulated and disposed of by a general law of the State is itself a general law. (State v. Hoeflinger, 31 Wis., 257, 262.)

REGULATION OF LIABILITY OF EMPLOYERS.

An act providing that railroad corporations shall be liable to their employees for any neglect of their agents or any mistakes of the engineer or other employees is general and uniform within the meaning of the constitutional provision. (McAunich v. Mississippi and M. R. Company, 20 Iowa, 338, 342.)

REGULATION OF MUNICIPAL ELECTIONS AND OFFICERS.

REGULATION OF MUNICIPAL ELECTIONS AND OFFICERS.

A statute which changes the powers and duties of municipal officers in important respects is a general law, and has uniform operation if it is made applicable to all citizens or to all of a class. (Hellman v. Shoulters, 44 Pac., 915, 918; 114 Cal., 136.)

An act entitled "An act relating to cities of the first class in this State, and providing for the holding of municipal or charter elections therein, and regulating the terms of elective and appointive officers therein," approved March 18, 1897, is a local and special law regulating the internal affairs of towns, and is not a general law, and for that reason is unconstitutional. (Hoos v. O'Donnell, 37 Atl., 447, 449; 60 N. J. Law, 35.)

Act February 28, 1901, providing that all municipal officers required to be elected shall be voted for and elected on the first Tuesday after the first Monday of November in each year, and on the same official ballots required by law for the election of state and county officers and not otherwise, and fixing the terms of officers elected or appointed in cities, and the manner of their appointment is not unconstitutional as being special and local regulating the internal affairs of cities in contravention of "Constitution, Article IV, section 7, paragraph 11, prohibiting private, local, or special laws regulating the internal affairs of towns and counties, since cities are a distinct class and within the common-law classification laws relating to their internal affairs are general." (Boorum v. Connelly, 48 Atl., 955, 958; 66 N. J. Law, 197; 88 Am. St. Rep., 409.)

REGULATION OF OYSTER BEDS.

An act regulating the cultivation of oysters in certain tidal water lying wholly within the counties of the State is not special or local within the prohibition of Constitution, Article IV, section 7, paragraph 11, the matter regulated being of general concern and applying to all citizens. (State v. Corson, 50 Atl., 780, 785; 67 N. J. Law, 178.) within the part of the part of

REGULATION OF PRIVATE CORPORATIONS.

An act authorizing the incorporation of benevolent societies and providing that corporations formed under this act shall be capable of taking real or personal property by devise or bequest not applying to corporations previously organized or effected under other acts is not a general law of the State. (Cole v. Frost, 4 N. Y. Supp., 308, 310; 51 Hun., 578.)

A law applicable to existing and future corporations would be general, and one confined to existing corporations would also be general. Both laws would at the time of their enactment apply to precisely the same existing subjects, and until further companies came into existence would have precisely the same control. (In re N. Y. El. R. Co., 70 N. Y., 327, 350.)

A statute which imposes certain legal duties upon corporations in general and makes provision intended to secure the performance of these duties by corporations is a general law. (Skinner v. Garnett Gold Mining Co. (U. S.), 96 Fed., 735, 743.)

REGULATION OF TAXATION.

The property of railroad and canal companies constitute a legitimate class of property for the purpose of taxation, and the law which extends to and operates equally upon all such property is a general law. (State Board of Assessors v. State, 4 Atl., 578, 584; 48 N. J. Law (19 Vroom), 310.) Where various counties, school districts, and other municipal corporations owning judgments had levied special taxes to pay the same, a law declaring such judgment taxes to be legal and valid was a general law operating on every municipal corporation which had levied special taxes to pay such judgments. (Iowa R. Land Co. v. Soper, 39 Iowa, 112, 116.) REGULATION OF SALOONS.

An act making it a misdemeanor for the proprietor or superintendent of a public house where liquor is sold to permit games of cards, dice, etc.. to be played in his premises is a general statute. (Territory v. Cutinola, 14 Pac., 809, 810; 4 N. M. (Johns), 160.)

REPEAL OF GENERAL LAW.

The repeal of a public or general law can, of necessity, only be by a public or general law. (State v. Hoeflinger, 31 Wis., 257, 262.) (See "Words and Phrases Judicially Defined" from which above authorities are taken.)

Mr. OWEN. I will also insert an extract from Bouvier's Law Dictionary defining the term "general law:"

Law Dictionary defining the term "general law:"

General Law. Laws which apply to and operate uniformly upon all members of any class of persons, places, or things requiring legislation peculiar to themselves in the matters covered by the laws. (Binney, Restrictions upon Local and Special Legislation.)

Statutes which relate to persons and things as a class. (77 Pa., 348.)

Laws that are framed in general terms, restricted to no locality, and operating equally upon all of a group of objects, which, having regard to the purpose of the legislation, are distinguished by characteristics sufficiently marked and important to make them a class by themselves. (40 N. J. L., 123.)

The later constitutions of many of the States place restrictions upon the legislature as to passing special laws in certain cases. In some States there is a provision that general laws only may be passed in cases where such can be made applicable. Provisions requiring all laws of a general nature to be uniform in their operation do not prohibit the passage of laws applicable to cities of a certain class having not less than a certain number of inhabitants, although there be but one city in the State of that class. (18 Ohio N. S., 85; Cooley, Const. Lim., 156. See 37 Cal., 366.)

The wisdom of these constitutional provisions has been the subject of grave doubt. (See Cooley, Const. Lim., 156, n.)

When thus used, the term "general" has a twofold meaning. With reference to the subject-matter of the statute, it is synonymous with "public" and opposed to "private" (37 Cal., 366; 14 Wis., 372; 46 id., 218; Dwarrls, Stat., 629; Sedgw., Stat. L., 30); but with reference to the extent of territory over which it is to operate, it is opposed to "local," and means that the statute to which it applies operates throughout the whole of the territory subject to the legislative jurisdiction. (4 Co., 75a; 1 Bla. Com., 85; 83 Ill., 585; 87 Tenn., 304; 10 Wis., 180.) Further, when used in antithesis to "special," it means relating to all of a class instead of to men only of that class. (70 Ill., 398; 26 Ind., 431; 22 Ia., 391; 77 Pa., 348; 32 Pac. Rep. (Nev.), 440.)

When the constitution forbids the passing of special or local laws in specified cases, it is within the discretion of the legislature to decide whether a subject not named in the constitution is a proper subject for general legislation; the fact that a special law is passed in relation thereto is evidence that it was thought that a general law would not serve, and in such a case clear evidence of mistake is required to invalidate the enactment. (81 Cal., 489; 92 Ind., 236; 107 id., 15; 77 Iowa, 513.)

serve, and in such a case clear evidence of mistake is required to invalidate the enactment. (81 Cal., 489; 92 Ind., 236; 107 id., 15; 77 Iowa, 513.)

In deciding whether or not a given law is general, the purpose of the act and the objects on which it operates must be looked to. If these objects possess sufficient characteristics peculiar to themselves and the purpose of the legislation is germane thereto, they will be considered as a separate class, and the legislation affecting them will be general (49 N. J. L., 356; 41 Minn., 74; 131 Ind., 446; 87 Mich., 217; 124 Ill., 666; 87 Tenn., 214); but if the distinctive characteristics of the class have no relation to that purpose of the legislature, or if objects which would appropriately belong to the same class have been excluded, the classification is faulty and the law not general. (87 Ga., 444; 91 Cal., 238; 32 Kans., 431; 51 N. J. L., 402; 52 id., 303; 19 Nev., 43; 2 N. Dak., 270; 106 Pa., 377.) The effect, not the form, of the law determines its character. (20 Ia., 338; 71 Mo., 645; 82 id., 231; 53 N. J. L., 4; 45 Ohio St., 63; 48 id., 211; 88 Pa., 258.)

Mr. OWEN. Under Rule XL the Senate can easily waive Rule XVI, without forcing an unreasonable or illogical interpretation upon that rule, and I think it would be unfortunate for the Senate to set the precedent of a forced construction of Rule XVI, or of any other of its established rules, and to that I am opposed. I feel that the salaries of our judges particularly should be substantially increased. In this connection I wish to make a brief comment upon a criticism of one of the great courts of the country in the Senate on January 14, when the Senator from Illinois [Mr. Hopkins] criticised the Court of Claims for its decision in a certain case which had been rejected by the Southern Claims Commission. The Senator from Illinois took the ground that the court was in error because the Southern Claims Commission had rejected this case on the ground that the party had been discharged in bankruptcy and could not hold "title to the property"—referring to a claim against the United States.

I call the attention of the Senate to the fact that this criticism is unjust, because title to that character of property can not be divested from an individual under the laws of the United States. It remains in him by statute—section 3477 of the Revised Statutes of the United States. I call attention to this merely because I observe in the bill that the Court of Claims has its salary fixed at $8,000 for the chief justice and $7,500 for the other justices of that court, while the circuit court judges of the United States have their salaries fixed at $10,000. I believe that the Court of Claims equals in dignity and in character and in service any circuit court in the United States. It passes upon questions of the greatest magnitude. It passes upon them with the greatest care. The character of evidence required in that court is peculiarly the subject of critical consideration by that court under its rules. I make that observation because that court has been inconsiderately criticised in that connection.

I say, therefore, that I have no objection, so far as I am concerned, to the proposed increases for the courts or to liberal appropriations otherwise for the officials of the United States who are involved; but I do think that under Rule XVI it can not be done without a forced interpretation of that rule. my opinion, a forced construction is unnecessary, because under Rule XL on one day's notice Rule XVI can be waived by the Senate if it sees fit to do so.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I rise simply for the purpose of making the Record speak what it should speak. It seems that in the discussion on Friday there was some question as to whether or not we reserved the point of order, the point of order being waived for a specific time, and the RECORD does not show that it was again presented. In order that the RECORD may disclose that fact, I now raise the point of order against that portion of the bill commencing in line 14, on page 26, beginning with the word "Provided," and reading as follows:

Provided, That the salary of the Speaker of the House of Representatives after March 3, 1909, shall be $20,000 per annum.

I make the point of order that it is general legislation.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I am not disposed to occupy the time of the Senate in discussing this point of order, but I do desire very briefly to address myself to the merits of the proposition, and perhaps I might as well do so now as later.

I do not believe that a great Government like this ought to ask or to expect any of its citizens to serve it at a great sacrifice of their personal interests, and I believe that the salary attached to every office ought to be fixed at such a sum as will support the incumbent in decency and comfort and enable him to educate his children. But it ought not to be more than that. It ought never to happen in a country like ours that the salary of any office is made so large as to be an inducement for men to seek it.

The true rule ought to be that those who serve the Republic shall be paid enough to provide for themselves and their families; to discharge such duties as they owe their children in the way of an education. The balance of the pay for public services ought to be taken in the honor which the office confers, and every important position within the gift of this Republic ought to be sought for the distinction and not for the emoluments.

For almost a hundred years this view controlled in fixing salaries. But now we hear it said in many places that the present salaries are inadequate to provide for the entertainments which high officials are expected to give. I am rather inclined to believe it would be a fortunate thing to reduce the salary if that would reduce the entertainments, because, in my limited experience here, I have found that the men who enter-tain the most are not the men who do the public's work the best; and surely if men holding high positions are bent on spending their time in entertainment they ought not to be permitted to spend the people's money in that way.

With me this view is not a mere appeal to what is supposed to be a demagogic spirit among the people, for I despise the demagogue. I have never found one of his arguments that appeared sound to me, and even when he happens to be on the right side I feel an almost irresistible temptation to take the other, in order to be on a side different from him. But I appeal to the highest spirit and to the best traditions of the American people against the increase of these salaries. There is no phase of American life to-day, either official or private, better calculated to alarm the thoughtful man than this tendency toward extravagance which is manifest everywhere amongst us.

The Government itself sets the example. Twenty-five years ago the party which is now in power declaimed with great vehemence against the party which was then in power because the appropriations of the Government had reached the stupendous, and then the unprecedented, sum of $248,000,000. Yet to-day we sit here and appropriate a billion as if it were a child's plaything. We spend the money of this Government in utter and reckless disregard of the fact that when we spend it we are spending the earnings of the American people. Government earns no money, and can have no money, except what it takes from the labor, physical or intellectual, of its people; and this is especially true when it lays taxes upon what men consume and not upon what they possess. Yet we pour out this golden stream as if the people did not sweat to earn it, and we call a man a demagogue who dares to stand up in this high place and call a halt in public exepnditure.

But, sir, if it did not tax the labor of the people, if it did not exact anything from their muscle or their brain, I would still protest against this governmental extravagance, because extravagance breeds all kinds of vices. Following the example of the General Government, almost every city, town, and village in America to-day are scandalized by disgraceful jobs, and the people themselves are tempted to live beyond their income. The man with an income of $20,000 is striving hard to match in gaudy show the man whose income is the princely sum of And then the man with an income of $10,000 tries to live at an equal pace with his neighbor whose income is $20,000. The man with an income of $5,000 tries to match the man with $10,000. Thus this extravagance, beginning with the Government, reaches down to every circle of society, tainting them all with its deadly poison.

Mr. President, a nation that spends more than it can fairly earn must in time become a nation of bankrupts, or rogues, or We perfectly understand the destination of the man who spends more than he earns. It is the bankrupt court, the rogue's gallery, or the gambling hall; because if he spends more than he earns he must either go in debt for it, or he must steal it, or he must gamble for it. That is the end to which extravagance leads the individual, and as the Government is simply the aggregate of all the individuals, that is the end to which the Government must come at last. There never was in the history of the world an extravagant government which did not in time become a corrupt government, and there never will be one.

Mr. CLAPP. And a bankrupt one. Mr. BAILEY. And, as the Senator And, as the Senator from Minnesota well adds, a bankrupt one.

Now, Mr. President, I have no quarrel with the man who rich wants to spend his wealth. In truth, I think it would be better for the country if most of those who are very rich spent the best part of what they have. I am not one of those who would limit the accumulation of any man's fortune so long as he accumulates it honestly. But I am one of those who believe that it would be infinitely better for the peace and happiness of these people and for the perpetuity of this Republic if we could go back to that elder and better time when it was three generations from shirt sleeves to shirt sleeves; when the one generation earned a fortune, another generation spent most of it, and the third generation went to work to make another. That was infinitely better for the peace and per-petuity of these people and these institutions than the present method of syndicating and incorporating fortunes until the degenerate spendthrifts of certain great families will never be compelled to earn their bread as God commanded they shouldin the sweat of their face. But while I would not take even from them what the foresight of their grandfathers accumulated, I deny the wisdom of teaching the American people that American public officials should imitate their habits and their follies. If a private citizen in New York wants to give a feast for monkeys, he has a right to entertain the descendants of his ancestors, but we want no such exhibitions by our public servants.

If the President of the United States is not rich enough to give a great banquet, let him give a modest one and invite men to it for what they know, instead of for what they own. Let him invite the great and upright whose purses are not their chief claim to distinction, and such men will not complain if his table does not groan beneath the weight of costly delicacies. Let him assemble men there who will be glad to break his bread amid simple surroundings. That will be better for him, for he will learn something from such men, and God knows that even the President is not often exempt from the necessity of knowing more than the best of us can hope to learn. If those who gauge everything by splendid trappings and by extravagance do not want to visit the White House because the entertainments are not lavish enough, so much the better for the President and for the country.

I belong to a class of men who regret that the capital of this Republic has ever become a city. I wish it were still a village. It would be better for the current of American public life that flows from the nation's very heart. I may offend by delivering the common eulogy which pronounces our forefathers the greatest and wisest assembly of men ever convoked in the history of the world. They did not want the seat of the Government to be in any city, and it was for that purpose that so many of them favored locating the seat of the new Government at such a place, not exceeding 10 miles square, as by the cession of particular States might be selected for the federal capital. They knew perfectly well that the State of New York would not cede the great city of New York, nor Pennsylvania the great and historic place where independence was first declared, nor would Massachusetts give Boston to the struggling Republic.

They desired an unimportant place to become the seat of the new Government, but the trend of modern civilization has defeated their very wise and patriotic purpose, and we have here a city said by travelers to be the most beautiful in the world; and I can well believe it.

The very arguments, however, which we hear advanced in support of these high salaries illustrate the wisdom of our fathers in wanting the government located among a simpler and more frugal people than those who live in a great city, and we are exemplifying the worst effect of situating it in the midst of a great population whose habits are not such as conduce to the longevity of either individuals or nations.

If I could have my way I would have less entertaining and more studying by the men who are to make or execute this country's laws. It is but simple justice to the House and Senate to say that very few of them spend much of their time at these entertainments. I will go out of my way to say, what every Senator knows to be the truth, that the men who are honored by their States with positions in this great assembly, as well as the men who are honored by their districts with seats at the other end of the Capitol, as a rule do their work diligently and thoroughly. I think I am well within the truth when I say that at the capital of no State do the state legislators work as many days in the year or as many hours in the day as Representatives and Senators at Washington.

It can not, therefore, be for their entertainment that we are asked to double the President's salary. For whose entertainment is it, then? The brainless dude and idle millionaire? You do not want to tax the American people to provide entertainment for them. For the diplomats? They are excellent gentlemen in their way. I believe it was Talleyrand who defined a diplomat as a man who is sent abroad to lie for the benefit of his country. I would not say that, but Talleyrand was a diplomat and ought to have known what a diplomat is.

What circle is it, then, which is dissatisfied with a simplicity which will preserve the strength of the nation, and demands that the President's salary shall be doubled in order that his entertainments may be multiplied in number and in splendor?

The President is already spending $100,000 of the people's money in addition to his salary. I have before me a list of the appropriations, including the $25,000 for railroad fare— and by the way, I should like to ask the Senator in charge of this bill, and without any desire or intention to obtrude myself upon the private affairs of the President, how this $25,000 is expended? Is it paid out from time to time as the President travels, or does the President draw it as he pleases and then pay his own railroad fare?

Mr. WARREN rose. Mr. BAILEY. Before the Senator answers I want to say that I ask the question because the answer to it will determine what I shall say about it.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, the Senator from Texas has acknowledged a modesty on his part concerning it. say that I have exercised the same modesty on my part. have never made any inquiries whatever. I have assumed that when the House and the Senate voted $25,000 to the President for that use they expected to leave it with him and his conscience. I have never made any inquiry, and I would be totally unable to give the Senator any information concerning it.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I have no doubt that the President has endeavored to comply with the letter of the law. Neither have I ever had any doubt about the unconstitutionality of that appropriation. I think it is clearly contrary to the Constitution, and although it is not exactly related to the proposition now under discussion I want to put into the Record exactly what the Constitution says about that:

The President shall, at stated times, receive for his services a compensation, which shall neither be increased nor diminished during the period for which he shall have been elected, and he shall not receive within that period any other emolument from the United States, or any of them.

If that $25,000 was not an emolument I do not know how to define one. I believe that although the President draw it and spent it religiously, according to the very letter of the statute, he is taking what the Constitution of the United States forbids us to give him.

Mr. WARREN. Of course the Senator will agree that the President is taking what the Senate and House freely gave him, and he is taking their judgment in regard to the constitutionality of it, whether his own might approve or not.

Mr. BAILEY. Unfortunately the Constitution does not require the President to take our judgment, but rather commands him to exercise his independent judgment and to veto what we do if he thinks we ought not to have done it.

While I agree that in this case the Congress gave it to him, I object to the word "freely," because Congress has no right to be free with the public money. This money does not belong to Congress. We have put very little of it into the Treasury. It is a trust fund which we are in honor bound to give grudgingly rather than freely.

But assuming that the President had a right to draw it, he only had a right to draw it for the specific purpose to which Congress devoted it when it appropriated the sum, and I assume he has done that. Leaving that $25,000 out of the calculation, the other expenditures, according to a statement which has been laid before me, reached the enormous sum of $80,500.

Mr. BACON. What are the items?

Eighty thousand five hundred dollars over and Mr. BAILEY. above the President's salary for the maintenance, repair, and improvement of the mansion which the Government provides for him at the public expense. The Senator from Georgia has asked for the items The first item is—

For ordinary

Mark you, "ordinary!" What would it be if it were extraordinary?

For ordinary care, repair, and refurnishing of the Executive Mansion, and for the purchase, maintenance, and driving of horses and vehicles for official purposes, to be expended by contract or otherwise, as the President may determine, $35,000.

I am rather inclined myself to think if you are going to keep things equal and it costs $35,000 to furnish and repair the house, the salary of $50,000 is somewhat out of proportion. But my experience on that point is that when they get a salary of $100,000 they will say that a man who draws a hundred thousand dollars salary ought to have a better house, and they will double the $35,000; and then when they get $70,000 for repairs they will say that is out of proportion to the salary, and they will increase that again. That is the way they have been doing ever since I have been in Congress, each increase forever calling for another increase.

For fuel for the Executive Manslon, greenhouses, and stable, $6,000.

Just exactly what they want with fuel in a stable I am not able to explain, but I suppose they want it, and of course whatever they want at the White House they get.

For care and maintenance of greenhouses, Executive Mansion, $9,000.

That would cultivate in my part of the country two or three farms. But still I have no objection to the people in the White House having flowers—pure white or blood red, as their taste may be. Perhaps it softens the nature and civilizes a man to be surrounded by flowers. But I think that when a man wants what is not necessary, he only has a right to have it if he is willing to pay for it; and I do not think we ought to tax the people, who need bread, to provide $9,000 worth of flowers for a man who is receiving $50,000 a year.

As long as there is a poorhouse in America filled with un-

As long as there is a poorhouse in America filled with unfortunates I do not believe in this kind of expenditures. After we have relieved every man's and every woman's distress, after we have administered to the sick, and when we have no longer paupers nor inmates of the poorhouse, then you can tell me how prosperous this nation is and how liberal it ought to be with its executive in the matter of salaries. But not till then.

Let us give the President what he is entitled to; let us enable him to support his great office in dignity; but let us not give him a dollar to be wasted in extravagance.

Have the Presidents heretofore lived in a manner befitting their station? Yes, sir; and until the seventies they received only half of what the President is receiving to-day, and for a part of that time the price of almost every commodity was higher than now. Lincoln bore upon his broad and stooping shoulders the burden of a mighty war. He lived as became the dignity of the Chief Magistrate of the greatest Republic on earth, and he lived on half of what his successor of the present day receives. Grant, the great commander of the federal armies—and I take pleasure in saying here that he was the greatest of those who commanded the federal armies—lived in ample style upon the present salary, because it was to him that the present sum of $50,000 was voted. The long line of illustrious men who occupied that high station before Grant and Lincoln lived on much less.

If you tell me that they lived in simpler times my answer is that it is a God's pity we can not go back to those simple times instead of going on to the more splendid times to which these revels and these extravagances invite us. I want to go back instead of going forward. I know the danger and the pitfalls that lie ahead of us in the road that we are traveling, and I know the safety and the honor in which our fathers trod the other paths.

If you can satisfy me that the present salary is not enough to support the President in decency and comfort, I will vote for more; but when you tell me that you want to double his salary in order that he may give more entertainments and increase his extravagance I refuse.

Mr. President, not content with providing the President, upon the theory that he must entertain, with an increased salary the committee ask us to increase the salary of the judges. I recognize that some judges could earn as practitioners at the bar vastly more than the salary which they receive as judges; but where is the lawyer, here or elsewhere, who would not lay down the profits of his profession to take the highest of all judicial places. I neither underrate the ability required nor the labor which must be performed by the Chief Justice and the associate justices of the United States, but their present salary is equal to the Government's rate of interest on $600,000. The Government might as well turn over to them $600,000 worth of its bonds bearing interest at the rate of 2 per cent and say, "Take these for the services which you render." How many lawyers in a lifetime are able to accumulate $600,000 worth of these United States bonds? One in a thousand? No, sir; not one in ten thousand is able to do it.

But they tell me that if these great judges remained at the bar they would not only provide themselves against the ills of poverty and age, but they would be able to bequeath a fortune to their sons and daughters. If they did they are different from most of the lawyers I have known. It is not the habit of great lawyers to leave great fortunes. My Lord Eldon was once asked by the guardian of two promising boys how he could make great lawyers of them, and quick the response came from the great lawyer's lips, quoting the words of Milton, teach them—

To scorn delights, and live laborious days.

He did not advise that they attend entertainments, where the men dress like head waiters and the ladies hardly dress at all, but his advice was to teach them

To scorn delights, and live laborious days.

That is the way to qualify a lawyer to become a great judge, and I hardly think after he becomes a member of the bench he needs or enjoys this entertainment. If you want to do the Supreme Court a service, reduce their work instead of increasing their salaries. They would infinitely rather have that done. They have now more work than any equal number of men can do. Appeals involving mere questions of commercial law ought never to go to that great tribunal. They ought only to be required to decide those cases involving questions of constitutional law. All other cases ought to end with the decision of the circuit court of appeals. Reduce their work and let them write opinions without having to write them in a hurry. That is the greatest services which you could do this country.

Mr. President, it is not proposed to stop with increasing the salaries of the Supreme Bench; but it is proposed to increase the salaries of the district judges to $8,000. Senators will bear me witness that there is not one district judge in twenty who ever earned $8,000 a year while practicing law. I know many of them, some of them the best of men and a few of them among the best of lawyers; but my personal acquaintance does not extend to more than three or four within all the number whom I know who ever earned $8,000 a year while at the bar. Is not that the experience of the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. McLAURIN. It is.

Mr. BAILEY. That is the experience of us all. While at the bar the judge took the chance of sickness, during which his clients employed other attorneys. During his practice at the bar he took the chance of depression, when the law, in common with every other occupation, felt its income diminished; but that is not so when he draws a salary from the Federal Treasury. In sickness and in health, in prosperity and in adversity, under all the checks and changes of times and circumstances he draws his salary.

A salary of $6,000 a year for a district-judge is equal to 2 per cent on $300,000 worth of United States bonds; and the promise of the Government contained in the statutes of the country is as solemn as its engagement when written upon the face of a bond. Here is the statute now promising them their annual salary in suitable installments, but it contains the further pledge that when they reach a certain age, after a certain term of service, they may retire, and for the balance of their lives they may eat the people's bread without doing the people's work. I think they are already paid, and amply paid if you look to it only as a matter of salary, and when you couple the salary with the greater honor of the office, many of them are overpaid. Still you are not satisfied and you propose to give a district judge a salary greater than a Senator in the Congress of the United States receives. Either you think too little of yourselves or else you think too much of the district judges when you fix their salaries at a sum larger than your own.

A Senator may stay here for twenty years and at the expiration of that time he may voluntarily retire or, as is more often the case, the people may call on him to retire. When he is here in the tide of success and popularity he is a statesman. When he is defeated he becomes a mere politician. No matter how faithfully and diligently he may have served for twenty years, when he lays down this great office and goes back to the body of the people, who takes care of him? He may have spent sleepless nights in searching the world's history for the truths that perpetuate freedom and make nations great; he may have scorned delights and lived laborious days; he may have earned the nation's gratitude, but in a day of disagreement with his people he may be driven from the public service, and who takes care of him then? His children, or he goes to the poorhouse. I do not deprecate that. I think one of the chief excellencies of this Government is that every man can carve out his own fortune and every man must maintain it when once he wins it. I do not lament the fact that a great Senator may pass into obscurity and oblivion, but I do say that if a federal judge, who may take the salary as long as life shall last and may draw it after he has left the bench and ceased to work, is worth $8,000 a year a Senator is worth still more. You do a duty as important as his, for there are none to review and correct your errors and your mistakes, save only one man in whom is vested the power to veto. A district judge can try a case without sitting under the sense of awful responsibility that rests on you, because, if he commits an error, there is the court of appeals to correct him, and then there is the Supreme Court of the United States to correct it. labor is fraught with greater consequences to the United States for its weal or its woe than is the labor of a district judge, and yet you sit here and vote that such a judge is worth $8,000 a year and you are only worth $7,500, and some of you spend twice that much to get here. [Laughter.] All of you have to undergo an arduous campaign. There are legitimate election expenses which can not be escaped. A federal judge is subjected to none of this. It is the same with him when once he gets his commission whether it rains or shines. He has no expense. If he is sent beyond his district to try a case, the Government pays his expenses and, as the Senate has had recent opportunity to witness, it pays $10 a day whether the judge spent the fourth of it or not.

Is there a Senator here who thinks his services less important to the Government than are the services of a district judge? You are the ambassadors of sovereign States; you speak for Commonwealths; they trust to your patriotism and to your wisdom the destiny of their children, and yet you abase yourselves, or at least you exalt the district judge above yourselves, in the matter of salaries.

Mr. President, I have detained the Senate longer than was necessary, and I have no hope that anything I could say will change the opinion of a single Senator. Of course nothing I could say would change the vote. We are still a good deal like the Scotch member of the English Parliament, who said on an occasion when he had listened to a great speech, and somebody asked him what effect it would produce upon the vote: "I have heard many a speech that changed my mind, but never a single one that changed my vote." We are all that way. We make up our minds, and in what I have said I had no hope of changing anybody's vote. I simply wanted myself to go on record against this increasing extravagance.

I do, however, want to say before I leave the subject entirely, and especially before I leave this subject of comparison between the salaries of Senators and judges, that there are many people in this country now who think that a Senator ought not to have any business while in the Senate. So far as I am concerned, I would not want a Senator who did not have some business, because I never want to see this Republic officered by a set of professional politicians who have no business to attend to and could not attend to it if they had it. My opinion is that no calamity could be greater than this. But there is in this country a very considerable number of men, who deny the right of Senators to practice law. Just exactly what will come to pass when this new gospel becomes universally accepted I am not able to judge. If a Senator is not permitted to earn something when Congress is not in session, then one of two things must happen: The Government must fall into the hands of rich men who do not need to earn anything, or it must fall into the hands of deadbeats who can not earn anything, and who are glad to get the salary as a better way of living than they could find elsewhere or otherwise.

As for my part, I prefer a public life in which all of us when the Congress sits shall be here to work faithfully and diligently, and then when the Congress adjourns that we go home and there, and through our own efforts and exertions provide for that rainy day which must come to all of us, and not attempt to provide for it out of the Public Treasury. I do not ask the Government to take care of me in my old age, for if I am fit to serve here I am able to provide against the time to come. I ask nothing from the Treasury, except such as will give me a decent and comfortable support, and then when the Congress is not in session and I am not required to be in attendance upon the Senate I am able and willing to provide a competence for my old age.

Of course, I perfectly understand that this rule can not apply In the nature of things they must be lawyers, and, in the nature of things, being judges, they can not practice law. I perfectly understand that; but neither do they need to do it under the law as it stands to-day, because when they have reached the age of seventy years, having served a given term, the law permits them to retire, and they are never again under the necessity of earning money for themselves, and they are forever protected against poverty and financial misfortune. That is enough. When the Government has done that for them, it has done enough; and let us not increase the taxes of the people, to whom $800 is an unusual income, in order to increase the salaries of men who are already receiving more than they could earn in private life.

But if you will increase the salaries of the judges, and increase the President's salary to $100,000, why stop with the sum of $20,000 for the Speaker of the House of Representatives and the Vice-President of the United States? I freely grant you that the Vice-President as long as the President lives is a piece of political bric-a-brac. He simply presides over the Senate and is not permitted to do more, however competent he may be to do it.

If the argument of entertainment is persuasive, however, it is stronger in the case of the Vice-President than of the President, because the Vice-President has not anything to do but to entertain, and all the Vice-Presidents I have ever known entertained with a delightful hospitality. If you are going to furnish money for entertainment, the Vice-President ought certainly to have half as much as the President.

There was a time in the history of this country when the Vice-President did not think it necessary to come to Washington except occasionally; but that time has passed. He is here, and without calling in this presence the name of any distinguished occupant of that high position, we know that no Member of this body is more regular in his attendance now than is the Vice-President of the United States. He gives the Senate his time. although it is the most irksome thing in the world for a man who feels a capacity to do things to be denied the opportunity of doing them. Mr. President, the ability to work is worth more than the salary for which we work, and the compulsion to do nothing is the greatest infliction that could be visited upon an active and intelligent mind.

But it is not sufficient to gauge salaries now by what men do. We are going to gauge them by entertainment. If this new argument is to obtain the distinguished friend who sits by me [Mr. TILLMAN] ought not to have anything, because he never entertains. [Laughter.] If that is to be the criterion, if we are to provide for entertainment because men occupy high official station, the Vice-President is entitled to at least half as much as the President.

The Senate is not the place to discuss the social calendar, and I should not have introduced it into this discussion; but I venture to say that if you will examine the matter you find the entertainments at one house are almost as brilliant as the entertainments at the other, and the expense of one is almost as great as the expense of the other; yet for the purpose of this entertainment you give one man $100,000, a house to live in, and $80,000 incidental expenses, and you give the other the sum of $20,000, with no emoluments or supplies.

It is true that this bill does provide a carriage and horses for the Vice-President, and I am delighted to see that it is old-fashioned enough to provide for horses instead of automobiles. I want to see that the Sergeant-at-Arms buys horses that were bred by American farmers, instead of automobiles manufactured in France.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. BAILEY. Yes; I yield. Mr. BORAH. I do not want the Senator from Texas to abate his zeal on that proposition, but the provision reads "carriage or other vehicle."

Mr. BAILEY. Then I shall move to strike out the words "or other vehicle." [Laughter.] I thank the Senator from Idaho for calling my attention to that.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. BAILEY. I do.

Mr. WARREN. I want to suggest right there, that the Senator could accomplish his object, if he wishes to protect the interests of Americans, by having the amendment amended so as to read "vehicles of American construction." If the Senator is conversant, as I presume he is, with the horse market, he knows that at the present time the price of horses is about as high as that of automobiles.

Mr. BAILEY. If the Senator from Wyoming thinks that, I will take a contract to buy him five horses for the cost of one automobile. I know something about the price of horses, for that is one of the cranks in which I ever indulge myself.

Mr. WARREN. On the other hand, I could easily contract to furnish five automobiles for one horse.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, you can not find many horses in the United States that would sell for the price of one automobile; but I could buy horses, at the rate of five for an automobile, until the Senator's great ranch in Wyoming would hardly furnish standing room for them. But so far as that is concerned—and I do not jest about this matter—I find that the Government is dispensing with the use of horses wherever they can and buying automobiles. I am not a protectionist, and I would let a man buy an automobile, just like I would let him buy everything else, wherever he could buy the cheapest.

Mr. WARREN. The product of the farmer?

Mr. BAILEY. Yes; or of anybody else. The only addition to that which I would make is that when he imported it, I would make him pay a duty which should constitute his fair contribution toward the support of the Government. I would not pre vent him from buying an automobile abroad by law. rely upon an American enough to know that he will buy from an American if an American will sell him at a decent price, and if any American will not sell to an American at a decent price, then I think that American ought to be permitted to buy from a foreigner who will sell him at a decent price.

The Federal Government could never have any extensive jurisdiction over that question, but, if I had my way, I would make it a crime to use these automobiles on the public highways, because no man has a right to use a vehicle on a public highway that is dangerous to the safety and lives of other people, and an automobile is dangerous. Probably the time will come when horses will be educated to the point where they will not be afraid of automobiles; but I doubt that, for I have not seen the time yet that I was not afraid of them.

Mr. TILLMAN. An old man in this city was run over the other day.

Mr. BAILEY. I do not believe that any man ought to be permitted to use that kind of a vehicle upon the public thoroughfares where everybody has a right to travel. Consequently, if the Senator from Idaho will join with me, I think we will strike the words "or other vehicle" out, and we will confine the Vice-President to horses and carriages, or make him walk.

[Laughter.]

Mr. President, I am not appealing for an increase, but I do say that, as a matter of justice and equity, if you are going to give the President $100,000, the salary of the Vice-President is not in correspondence, and the salary of the Speaker of the House is not in correspondence. The Speaker of the House of Representatives is certainly the third greatest officer under this Government. I do not know just exactly what precedence they accord him at social functions, but in power and authority he is undoubtedly the second, excelling even the Vice-President of the United States himself in point of power. I doubt if the President of the United States exercises as much power over the legislation of this country as does the Speaker of the House Therefore, measured not merely by the of Representatives. dignity of his office, but measured by its power and its responsibility, it is absurd to say that the President shall have $100,000 and the Speaker of the House but $20,000.

Then, if you go into that other indefinite field, about which I profess to know nothing, if you take up the question of the cost of entertainment, certainly the Speaker in that regard is not so far behind the President as this bill places him

Mr. President, I venture to state that there has not been a Vice-President in twenty years who did not leave that chair poorer than he was when he assumed it. I will venture to say that there has never been a Speaker of the American House of Representatives who saved money out of that great office, but there has not been a President in twenty years who did not leave the presidential office with more than he possessed when he entered upon it. It is to the credit of Mr. Cleveland that he saved something out of his salary—not much, but enough to provide for his old age. It is to the credit of Benjamin Harrison that from the $50,000 salary, which you now describe as inadequate, he saved something with which he purchased brick buildings in the city of Indianapolis, The Senator from Indiana [Mr. Hemenway], I think, knows that. A great man, upright, honorable, and just, he illustrated the best traditions of the Republic by living economically and saving something out of his salary. For that I honor him, and the pity is that all of his successors in that great station will not practice his frugality and his simplicity. With the President able to save from his present salary, we are asked to double it. With the Vice-President and the Speaker spending more than they receive, you pay them less than half of the increase you are giving the President. It is not just, it is not fair, it is not equal treatment. leave it to the Senate, contenting myself with voting against the entire schedule of increases.

Mr. President, I rise in the hope that I may Mr. CLAPP. render some slight service to the country, although the chances are that when I shall have finished my remarks I will simply find myself cordially hated by many. There is to-day in this find myself cordially hated by many. country no more popular cry than a billion-dollar Congress and the billion-dollar country. The Senator from Texas [Mr.]

BAILEY] I think is mistaken upon one point, and that is that it is popular or could by any possibility be strained into an attempt to curry popular favor to stand upon this floor for economy. From all over this land, from my own State-and to-day I incur the disapproval of friends, both personal and political, in taking stand here for economy-comes the demand for appropriations, ending inevitably in indebtedness, evidenced by bonds.

Is it astonishing, Mr. President, that to-day thinking men, business men, will calmly consider the proposition of this great Government running behind in its revenue and contemplate equally calmly an issue of its securities? The wild delirium for extravagance and the debt thereby created will outlive the Senator from Texas and myself, and we might well content ourselves in silence. But we would be recreant to our duty if we did that.

Mr. President, I am not going to detain the Senate long with speech. I can not hope to rival the brilliant Senator from Texas in his presentation of this subject. It is not a question of compensation. The wealth of this Nation could not compensate a Washington, nor could it, in my humble judgment, compensate the present occupant of the office of Chief Executive for the services he has rendered this country. We can not measure service by dollars and cents. The true test is that announced by the Senator from Texas that we should pay public officials enough to maintain them with dignity in their office and enable them to educate their children. Beyond that we can not hope to go. Beyond that we ought not to seek to go.

Mr. President, we stand to-day confronted by a condition. We stand to-day with a deficiency confronting us. promised the people of the United States that we would revise the tariff this coming summer, and the very promise of that revision has resulted in the greatest industrial nation upon this earth sitting back and waiting to see what will happen. inevitably leads to a decrease of revenue, and not only have we a deficiency confronting us, but we have a decreased revenue also confronting us.

Now, what do we have on the other hand? We have coming in here day after day additional appropriations. The naval bill, which will come here within a few days, will contain a large addition over last session's bill. The military bill, which is to come here within a few days, will contain another large addition over the last session's bill; and in the face of our decreased revenue it is proposed now to raise these salaries.

Mr. President, the Government to-day is in this position. With a deficiency confronting us, we are paying out money for the rent of buildings all over this country, and especially in this city; a bill upon the desk of the Senator from Oregon Mr. Fulton] proposing to pay millions of honest debts of this nation, it is proposed to let go; and now, in the face of this condition, it is proposed to raise these salaries.

I am not here to make any invidious comparison. It may be said, in answer to my attitude, that the salary of Representatives and Senators has been raised. I could, if I would, avail myself of the defense that I did not vote for it; but I stand here to-day upon the floor of this Chamber and assert that a United States Senator or a Representative ought to receive a salary equal to any officer of this Government, save the President, save the Vice-President, save the Speaker, and save the Chief Justice of the United States. So I will not avail myself of the defense which I could make upon that score. We made that increase of salary under entirely different conditions from those under which it is proposed to make this increase. If it was the mere question of the President's salary, of the President's salary, of the Speaker's salary, of the Judges' salary, we might content ourselves with one of those, and perhaps face the possibility of increasing the salary. But Senators can not disguise this proposition. It is a proposition to increase all of these salaries, and that, too, in the face of these conditions.

Now, my reason for arising at this moment is simply this: Time and again in this body, after these bills are passed and attention has been called to the increased appropriations, Senators have said, "Yes; we ought not to have done it; but we have done it. It is too late now to undo it; but next time we will see that it is not done." I believe—if I am the only Senator who will vote along this line—that the time has come when some one should say that "now is the time to do it." and not wait until after the appropriation bill has passed. In my single capacity I propose to vote against these appropriations.

There is a vast difference between increasing these salaries and adding to the official force of this Government.

There is an amendment pending-

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. CLAPP. I wish to conclude the sentence.

There is pending to this bill an amendment to increase the force in one of the departments. As the Government grows, as the work increases, these forces must be increased; and there is a vast difference between increasing the force of the departments and increasing these salaries. Now, I will listen to the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. TILLMAN. Knowing that the revenues of the Government are falling behind, I had intended to propose, to come in at the appropriate place in the bill, the following:

Provided, however, That no part of the increased pay provided herein shall be paid if the revenues of the Government shall show a deficit during the next fiscal year.

Will the Senator support that amendment?

Mr. CLAPP. I would not want to support that, because it would be equivalent to a roundabout way of voting against the amendments. I prefer to vote against them directly.

Mr. STONE. I am going to vote against them directly; but, then, if I am run over, I propose to try to check this extrava-gance and waste by putting a tail on the kite.

Mr. CLAPP. Every Senator in this Chamber knows that the revenues are going to fall off. There is not a day that I do not get letters from men whose business it is to import goods, saying, "We will not import any more goods at present. We are going to wait to see what Congress does as to the duty on this particular article." Not only will that decrease revenue from importations, but it has already accentuated—and it will more accentuate—a business depression, which will also have its effect upon internal revenue and decrease the revenue in that direction.

I dislike to take this stand. The gentleman who will soon occupy the position of Vice-President and presiding officer of the Senate is a personal friend. The gentleman who will soon occupy the position of Chief Executive of this country is a personal friend. I realize that no amount of dollars and cents can compensate him for the service he will perform to this country, as I believe, but at the same time we can not measure that service by dollars and cents. We can only content ourselves with voting a reasonable salary for these positions, and instead of waiting until the naval bill or some other bill comes into this Chamber, and then finding it too late to make a stand for economy, I for one propose to begin now, and I shall vote against every one of these amendments increasing salaries.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] interposes the point of order that the pending amendment contravenes paragraph 3 of Rule XVI.

Mr. WARREN. Does the Senator from Idaho insist upon his

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The point of order is before the

The Senator from Idaho [Mr. Borah] makes the point of order that the pending amendment contravenes paragraph 3 of Rule XVI, which provides:

No amendment which proposes general legislation shall be received to any general appropriation bill.

What is general legislation upon a general appropriation bill under Rule XVI has long been a sharply debated question. The rule is an old one. It has been frequently invoked, and the discussion has invariably disclosed the same conflicting views which have been expressed with respect to the point of order now interposed. There is no well-defined uniform line of decisions, either by the Chair or by the Senate, when the question has been submitted by the Chair to its determination or when the question has been brought before it by an appeal from the decision of the Chair. The impression created upon the mind of the present occupant of the chair, after a somewhat careful and therough examination of the subject, is that the Senate has been largely controlled in its interpretation of the rule for more than a third of a century by a consideration of the public interest involved at the time being rather than by any regard for its technical meaning or strict application.

Under the well-known rules of the Senate the Senate can express itself upon the question as to whether a proposed amendment is in order by an appeal from the decision of the Chair upon a point of order or when the Chair submits the matter for its determination.

The Chair thinks that under all the circumstances, in view of the wide interest in it, it is fair to all concerned to allow the Senate to pass by a direct vote upon the question raised by the point of order. This has been the course which has been frequently pursued in past years. Therefore the Chair will submit the question to the Senate, Is the amendment in order?

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, the reasons given by the Chair are so clear and cogent, and its determination so conforms to previous action by the Chair in other matters, that I should say nothing but approval could follow that course. I wish to say and it is brought to my attention by the point which the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. Owen] made—that the Senate can at any time by a majority, under Rule 40, suspend any rule. The Senate has a fashion—it has been its practice—when any question of order is submitted to the Senate, by a short cut and voting upon the merit of the question, of dispensing with the rule instead of in form suspending it by a majority vote. and other Senators here, on important matters, when the Chair has submitted the question to the Senate, have voted upon the merit instead of voting in form under Rule XL that the rule shall be suspended; and for one I shall do the same now. Whatever I may believe of the force of the point of order—and I expressed that in the early part of the discussion—the whole matter being submitted to the Senate, I shall vote upon the merit of the question, being in favor of the proposition presented to the Senate by the amendment, although I think the point of order well taken.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is, Is the amendment in order

Mr. BORAH. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Will the Chair state the question once more? The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is, Is the amendment in order? The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. I transfer it to the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. Wetmore], and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. DAVIS (when the name of Mr. Clarke of Arkansas was called). My colleague [Mr. Clarke of Arkansas] is paired with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. Aldrich].

Mr. DOLLIVER (when the name of Mr. Cummins was called). I desire to state that my colleague [Mr. Cummins] is unavoidably detained from the Chamber, being absent from the city.

Mr. DEPEW (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. McEnery]. I transfer it to my colleague [Mr. Platt], and will vote. I vote "yea."
Mr. FOSTER (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. Mc-CUMBER]. I understand he is absent from the Capitol, and therefore I withhold my vote.

Mr. OWEN (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. Hopkins] to my colleague [Mr. Gore], and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. PILES (when his name was called). I was out of the Chamber when the question was presented. I do not know what we are voting on. Are we voting on the amendment?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is whether the amendment is in order.

Mr. PILES. I vote "yea."

Mr. RAYNER (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Delaware [Mr. RICHARDSON].

Mr. TILLMAN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM]. In his absence I withhold my vote. If at liberty, I should vote

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. HEYBURN. I want to make an inquiry, Mr. President, My vote will depend upon whether the amendment was accepted by the chairman or whether we are voting upon it as it is in the bill as it came from the committee.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will state that under the rule debate is not in order.

Mr. HEYBURN. I am not debating it; I want to know what e are voting on—that is, what amendment is pending.
The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is, Is the amendment we are voting on-in order?

Mr. HEYBURN. There are two before the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is the amendment proposed by the committee, beginning in line 26, on page 14, and including lines 1, 2, and 3 on page 15 of the bill.

Mr. HEYBURN. In italies?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. In italics.

Mr. HEYBURN. If the other amendment were accepted, it would be a different vote.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Debate is not in order.

Mr. HEYBURN. I am not debating it, but I have a right to information.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Has the Senator from Idaho voted? Mr. HEYBURN. I vote "nay" as to the amendment in italics, but would vote "yea" as to the amendment offered by the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. Aldrich].

Mr. TILLMAN. I transfer my pair with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. Dillingham] to the Senator from Missouri [Mr. Stone], who is not paired, and vote "nay."

Mr. LONG. I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. CURTIS] is unavoidably absent.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. Stone] is paired generally with myself. I transferred the pair to the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. WETMORE].

Mr. TILLMAN (after having voted in the negative). wanted to protect the Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLING-HAM], and transferred my pair to the Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE]. I thought I had a right to do so, as the Senator from Texas [Mr. Culberson] informed me. But I have since learned that the arrangement of pairs does not permit of that transfer, and I withdraw my vote.

Mr. KNOX. I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. Penrose] is unavoidably absent. If present, he would vote yea.'

Mr. MARTIN. I desire to state that my colleague [Mr. Daniel] is unavoidably absent from the city, having been called home by a very sad affliction in his family.

So the Senate decided the amendment to be in order. The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is upon the adoption of the amendment of the committee.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the amendment to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Idaho proposes an amendment to the amendment, which will be read by the Secretary.

The SECRETARY. In the committee amendment, page 15, line 3, before the word "thousand," strike out "twenty" and insert "fifteen," so as to read "shall be $15,000 per annum."

Mr. BORAH. Upon that I ask the yeas and nays.
Mr. HALE. I move to amend the amendment by inserting the word "eighteen" before "thousand."

Mr. BACON. I understand that if the Senate should vote down the amendment of the Senator from Maine the question would then recur upon the amendment offered by the Senator from Idaho; in other words, if the Senate should vote against $18,000, the vote would then be on the question of $15,000. Am I correct?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair is under the impression, as he understood the amendment of the Senator from Maine, that it is an amendment in the third degree.

Mr. HALE. I think the Chair is correct; I thought of that. The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. Borahl] to the amendment of the committee, upon which he demands the year and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HALE. Let it be read.

Mr. du PONT. I could not hear the amendment to the amend-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the amendment to the amendment.

The Secretary. On page 15, line 3, before the word "thousand," strike out "twenty" and insert "fifteen," so that if amended the amendment of the committee will read:

Provided, That the salary of the Speaker of the House of Representatives, after March 3, 1909, shall be $15,000 per annum.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Idaho to the amendment of the committee.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.
Mr. TILLMAN (when Mr. DILLINGHAM's name was called). I wish to announce again my pair with the senior Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM]; and for the balance of the evening, on all amendments, being paired, I will not vote.

Mr. FOSTER (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the senior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCumber], who is absent. I withhold my vote.

Mr. McENERY (when his name was called). with the junior Senator from New York [Mr. DEPEW]. He is not present, and I withhold my vote.

Mr. OWEN (when his name was called). with the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. Hopkins] to my colleague [Mr. Gore], and vote "yea."

Mr. RAYNER (when his name was called) nounce my pair generally for the rest of the day with the junior Senator from Delaware [Mr. RICHARDSON]. Mr. WARREN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. Money], but as he was on the Finance Committee and, I understand, supported this measure when it was before that committee, I am going to venture to vote. I vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded. Mr. BACON. I desire to call the attention of the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. Warren] to the fact that the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. Money] voted the opposite way on the ques-

Mr. WARREN. That was entirely another matter. He was voting on the point of order.

Mr. BACON. I know, but the Senator will remember that the Senator from Maine [Mr. Hale], who is a very distinguished authority in this body, himself announced that while he believed the point of order was well taken it was not the custom of the body to be measured by that consideration, and he would therefore vote in the way he thought the merits of the case would induce him to cast his vote.

Mr. WARREN. If there is any question about it upon the other side, although I feel perfectly sure of my ground, I withhold my vote, or I will transfer my pair to the junior Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE], who is not in the Chamber. I vote "nay."

So Mr. Borah's amendment to the amendment of the committee was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee as amended.

Mr. CULBERSON. I ask for the yeas and nays on the adoption of the amendment as amended.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, when the question of order was submitted to the Senate I undertook to ascertain whether the question as contained in the bill reported from the committee was under consideration on the point of order or whether the amendment which I understood was accepted by the Senator in charge of the bill was the amendment under consideration, and it would doubtless seem to those who are not advised that my vote was somewhat inconsistent. I voted upon my judgment as to the parliamentary situation when I voted upon the point of order. I did not have any sentiments in regard to the size of the salary of this officer. I desire that the RECORD shall leave no question in regard to that matter.

When the matter was under consideration on the 15th, the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. Aldrich] proposed the following amendment:

Provided, That of the amount herein appropriated, $20,000 may be used to pay the salary of the Speaker of the House of Representatives.

I distinctly understood the Senator in charge of the bill to accept that proposed amendment.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President— Mr. HEYBURN. I may have been mistaken. I would be glad to be advised.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator from Idaho is correct in stating that such an amendment was read, and that the Senator in charge of the bill stated, addressing the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. Aldrich] rather than the Chair, that he was willing to accept the amendment. But the Senator did not formally offer it as an amendment. If the Senator will read the Record as to the amendments to the bill, he will find that the amendment was not recorded as having been acted upon.

Mr. HALE. It is not before the Senate.

Mr. HALL. It is not before the Senate.

Mr. WARREN. It is not before the Senate.

Mr. HEYBURN. It has been the custom, where an amendment was proposed to an appropriation bill, that the Senator in charge of the bill would say, "I accept the amendment;" and, there being no objection, it would be treated as having been

The Record shows, on page 972, as I shall read. The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. Aldrich] claimed the recognition of the Chair during the time the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. McLaurin] had the floor. The Senator from Mississippi said:

If the Senator will allow me, not to interrupt the Senator from Kan-

Then the Senator from Kansas [Mr. Curtis] said:

I want the item read.

The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. McLaurin] said: It provides Quoting from it-

That the salary of the Speaker of the House of Representatives after March 3, 1909, shall be $20,000 per annum.

Mr. Aldrich. I think the committee, perhaps, were somewhat unfortunate in the language which they used. I suggest to the acting chairman of the subcommittee that the item should be changed to read as follows:

"Provided, That of the amount herein appropriated $20,000 may be used to pay the salary of the Speaker of the House of Representatives"—

The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. McLaurin] said:

From what is the Senator reading?
Mr. Aldrich. Which is a mere limitation upon this appropriation and applies for only one year.

I desire that the Record shall show my position upon this question in such a way that there may be no misunderstanding about it. There is a vast difference between the parliamentary rule as applied to the amendment reported by the committee and the amendment suggested by the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. Aldrich]. The amendment offered by the committee is not an item of appropriation at all; it is an item of legislation. It provides as to what the salary shall be for the time mentioned, but it makes no appropriation for the payment of that So it can not be said to be anything but general legis-It determines the salary not only of the present Speaker, but of all future Speakers until Congress shall change it. It was upon that language that I voted on the question that was submitted to the Senate. The amendment offered by the Senator from Rhode Island was not legislation at all. It was merely making an appropriation pursuant to existing legislation. That was the difference. It was that condition which controlled my seemingly inconsistent vote. I was not willing to vote against my judgment on a parliamentary question, because it involved a question of general legislation.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Texas demands the yeas and nays upon agreeing to the amendment of the committee as amended.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. ELKINS. What is the amendment?
Mr. BACON. I desire to ask a question for information. ought perhaps to know it, but I do not at this moment recall what is the present salary of this officer.

Mr. WARREN. Twelve thousand dollars. I understand that those voting "yea" vote to accept the amendment making the salary $15,000 a year.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That is the effect of the vote.

Mr. ELKINS. If it is lost, then what?

Mr. GALLINGER. It remains at $12,000.
The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is for the determination of the Senate. The Secretary will call the roll on agreeing to the amendment of the committee as amended.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll. Mr. FOSTER (when his name was called). I again announce my pair. I make this announcement for all future votes upon this measure. I withhold my vote.

Mr. GAMBLE (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from Nevada [Mr. Newlands] to the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. Penrose], and I vote "yea."

Mr. OWEN (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. Hopkins] to my colleague [Mr. Gore], and vote "nay."

Mr. WARREN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. Money]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Maine [Mr. Frye], and I vote "yea."

The roll call having been concluded, the result was announced—

FORT DOUGLAS MILITARY RESERVATION, UTAH.

The bill (H. R. 23863) for the exchange of certain lands situated in the Fort Douglas Military Reservation, State of Utah, for lands adjacent thereto, between the Mount Olivet Cemetery Association, of Salt Lake City, Utah, and the Government of the United States, was read twice by its title.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, the House bill just laid before the Senate is identical in terms with Senate bill No. 7396, passed by the Senate on Thursday last. I therefore move that the House bill be put on its passage, and the bill heretofore passed by the Senate be recalled from the House.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Utah for the present consideration of the House bill named by him?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I move that the bill (S. 7396) for the exchange of certain lands situated in the Fort Douglas Military Reservation, State of Utah, for lands adjacent thereto, between the Mount Olivet Cemetery Association, of Salt Lake City, Utah, and the Government of the United States, be recalled from the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, I now desire to enter a motion to reconsider the vote by which the Senate bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the motion will be entered.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, it is now after 5 o'clock. It is evident that we shall not be able to finish the appropriation bill this evening. I desire, therefore, to give notice that I shall ask to bring it up to morrow morning immediately after the routine business. But before laying the bill aside, I wish to say that, in the opinion of the committee, the reduction which has been made in the first one of these salaries will be expected to govern, in a measure, some of the others, and corresponding reductions will doubtless be expected. Now, Mr. President, I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. LODGE. I ask the Senator from Wyoming if he will be kind enough to change his motion to a motion to proceed to the consideration of executive business, as there are some matters that ought to be referred.

Mr. WARREN. Very well; I will change the motion, and move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business, but I will withhold that motion for a moment to enable the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. Bulkeley], who has a small bill in charge, to bring it up.

UNITED SPANISH WAR VETERANS.

Mr. BULKELEY. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 3751) authorizing the Secretary of War to issue discarded arms to camps of the United Spanish War Veterans.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, on page 2, after line 9, to insert as a new section the following:

SEC. 4. That the ammunition issued under this act shall be limited to the supply now on hand and available; and that the shipment of all ordnance stores issued to and from the aforesaid camps, including the maintenance of the arms in repair, shall be made at the expense of the various camps.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. WARREN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 20 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, January 19, 1909, at 12 o'clock meridian.

WATER MAIN THROUGH MILITARY RESERVATION, NORFOLK, VA.

Mr. MAYNARD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill H. R. 4836. The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent to discharge the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union from the further consideration of the following bill and consider the same at the present time.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 4836) granting to the Norfolk County Water Company the right to lay and maintain a water main through the military reservation on Willoughby Spit, Norfolk County, Va.

the right to lay and maintain a water main through the military reservation on Willoughby Spit, Norfolk County, Va.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Norfolk County Water Company be, and it is hereby, granted the license and privilege to maintain and operate its water main, which has heretofore been constructed under a license granted by the Secretary of War on the 23d of March, 1907, across the military reservation of the United States on Willoughby Spit, in the county of Norfolk, Va., upon the following conditions, namely:

First. That the said Norfolk County Water Company, its successors or assigns, shall remove its pipes, at its own expense, from said reservation within sixty days after receiving notice from the Secretary of War that the War Department requires the premises so occupied for the purposas of the United States; and upon the failure, neglect, or inability of said company, its successors or assigns, so to do, the same shall become the property of the United States, and the United States may then cause the same to be removed at said company's expense, and no claim for damages against the United States, or any officer or agent thereof, shall be created by or made on account of such removal.

Second. That the said company shall confine the route of its pipes to the location heretofore named under the license granted by the Secretary of War.

Third. That the Norfolk County Water Company shall pay all taxes assessed against the said pipe line laid and maintained hereunder.

Fourth. That any sum which may have to be expended after the revocation of this license, as heretofore provided, in putting the premises or property hereby authorized to be occupied or used in as good condition for use by the United States as it is at the date of the granting of the said license, shall be repaid by the said company on demand.

Fifth. That said company shall pay such reasonable annual rental as may be fixed from time to time by the Secretary of War.

Fifth. That said company shall pay such reasonable annual rental as may be fixed from time to time by the Secretary of War.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

At the end of section 5, after the words "Secretary of War," add the following:
"Sixth. That the said company shall furnish water to the United States, if the latter at any time so desires, at rates as favorable as those accorded to private consumers."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman from Virginia—as I understand, this water main is now on this reservation, constructed there under license from the War Department, which license contains some provisions that are not in the bill.

Mr. MAYNARD. This bill was sent to the War Department for its approval, and it sent it back with its assent that the bill should pass with one amendment, and that amendment is

It is a section of this bill.

Mr. MANN. On the other hand, originally the license contained this provision:

That all work incident to this license shall be subject to the supervision and approval of the officer of the United States Army in charge of said reservation. That the occupation of said reservation incident thereto shall be subject to such rules and regulations in the interest of good order, police, sanitation, and discipline, as said officer may from time to time prescribe.

Now there is absolutely no limitation or provision in the bill safeguarding or regulating its control.

Mr. MAYNARD. I will say to the gentleman from Illinois that when the license was granted the pipe line had been in-That was with reference to the installation of the stalled. pipe line.

Mr. MANN. It does not so state. Mr. MAYNARD. It states that the pipe line is already there, and it requires an act of Congress to continue this license.

Mr. MANN. By this license given in this bill they may construct a new pipe line and take out the old pipe line.

Mr. MAYNARD. The War Department did not think the language necessary; but if the gentleman from Illinois thinks it necessary to put it in the bill, I have no objection to his offering it as an amendment and having it added to the bill.

Mr. MANN. I think that language ought to go into the bill. Then, the gentleman proposes to say that if this company having the pipe line now constructed shall not do something, it shall forfeit its property—which is beyond the power of Con-

Mr. MAYNARD. Well, it is a condition of the contract under which they put it there.

Mr. MANN. It is not a condition of the contract under which they put it there. It is already there now. We propose to make a contract forfeiting their property, which, perhaps, they may agree to, but they ought to be required to agree to it.

Mr. MAYNARD. It is part of the agreement under which this former license given by the War Department was made.

Mr. MANN. I wish the gentleman would let this matter go over for a little while.

Mr. MAYNARD. How long? Mr. MANN. Temporarily.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman for the present withdraws

EXTENDING PROVISIONS OF CAREY ACT TO NEW MEXICO AND ARIZONA.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union be discharged from the further consideration of the bill H. R. 26216, and that the same be considered at this time.

The bill was read, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 26216) to extend the provisions of section 4 of an act entitled "An act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1895, and for other purposes," approved August 18, 1894, to the Territories of New Mexico and Arizona.

Mexico and Arizona.

Be it enacted, etc., That all the provisions of section 4 of the act of Congress approved August 18, 1894, being chapter 301 to Supplement to Revised Statutes of the United States, entitled "An act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1895, and for other purposes," and the amendments thereto be, and the same are hereby, extended to the Territories of New Mexico and Arizona, and that said Territories upon complying with the provisions of said act shall be entitled to have and receive all of the benefits therein conferred upon the States.

SEC. 2. That this act shall be in full force and effect from and after its passage.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, you can not tell anything on earth about the bill from hearing it read. What is it? Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, this bill extends the provisions of the Carey Act to Arizona and New Mexico. The bill was discussed the other day, and there was objection to it. The gentleman who objected has withdrawn his objection.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. What is the Carey Act you are talking about?

Mr. MONDELL. It is a law under which the States are authorized to provide for the reclamation and settlement of arid lands. It has been in operation some ten years in the arid-land States, but the provisions have not heretofore been extended to the Territories. The bill was unanimously reported from the committee, and its enactment is urged by the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. GARRETT. I understand the gentleman desires to extend the act to Arizona?

Mr. MONDELL. The bill before the House includes Arizona. The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. REEDER. Does this bill extend the provisions of the former act to Arizona and New Mexico? Mr. MONDELL. That is all.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

On motion of Mr. Mondell a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask that House bill 15850, which relates to the same subject, be laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that the bill (H. R. 15850) relating to the same subject, be laid on the table. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

BOUNDARY BETWEEN MISSISSIPPI, LOUISIANA, AND ARKANSAS.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of House joint resolution 232, to enable the States of Mississippi and Louisiana to agree upon a boundary line and to determine the jurisdiction of crimes committed on the Mississippi River and adjacent terri-

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the consent of the Congress of the United States is hereby given to the States of Mississippi and Louisiana to enter into such agreement or compact as they may deem desirable or necessary, not in conflict with the Constitution of the United States, or any law thereof, to fix the boundary line between said States, where the Mississippi River now, or formerly, formed the said boundary line and to cede respectively each to the other such tracts or parcels of the territory of each State as may have become separated from the main body thereof by changes in the course or channel of the Mississippi River and also to adjudge and settle the jurisdiction to be exercised by said States, respectively, over offenses arising out of the violation of the laws of said States upon the waters of the Mississippi River.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? There was no objection.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, House joint resolution 233 is identical with this, except that it gives the same consent as to the States of Mississippi and Arkansas. I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 233) to enable the States of Mississippi and Arkansas to agree upon a boundary line and to determine the jurisdiction of crimes committed on the Mississippi River and adjacent territory.

jacent territory.

Resolved, etc., That the consent of the Congress of the United States is hereby given to the States of Mississippi and Arkansas to enter into such agreement or compact as they may deem desirable or necessary, not in conflict with the Constitution of the United States, or any law thereof, to fix the boundary line between said States, where the Mississippi River now, or formerly, formed the said boundary line and to cede respectively each to the other such tracts or parcels of the territory of each State as may have become separated from the main body thereof by changes in the course or channel of the Mississippi River and also to adjudge and settle the jurisdiction to be exercised by said States, respectively, over offenses arising out of the violation of the laws of said States upon the waters of the Mississippi River.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I think the Record ought to contain the reasons for an important proposition like this. I wish the gentleman would state it

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, the reasons for the resolution are stated very succinctly in the report which accompanies it.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. For the sake of brevity, Mr. Speaker, I ask that the Clerk read the report.

Mr. MANN. You do not need to have it read. Insert it in the RECORD.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. I ask unanimous consent that it be printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that the report be printed in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The report (by Mr. Foster of Indiana) is as follows:

The Committee on the Judiciary having had under consideration the resolution (H. J. Res. 229) to enable the States of Mississippi and Arkansas to agree upon a boundary line, and to determine the jurisdiction of crimes committed on the Mississippi River and adjacent territory, respectfully report in lieu of said resolution the following

The Committee on the Judiciary having had under consideration the resolution (H. J. Res. 229) to enable the States of Mississippi and Arkansas to agree upon a boundary line, and to determine the jurisdiction of crimes committed on the Mississippi River and adjacent territory, respectfully report in lieu of said resolution the following as a substitute:

"That the consent of the Congress of the United States is hereby given to the States of Mississippi and Arkansas to enter into such agreement or compact as they may deem desirable or necessary, not in conflict with the Constitution of the United States or any law thereof, to fix the boundary line between said States where the Mississippi River now or formerly formed the said boundary line, and to cede, respectively, each to the other such tracts or parcels of the territory of each State as may have become separated from the main body thereof by changes in the course or channel of the Mississippi River, and also to adjudge and settle the jurisdiction to be exercised by said States, respectively, over offenses arising out of the violation of the laws of said States upon the waters of the Mississippi River."

Your committee recommend the passage of the substitute.

The reasons for the adoption of the resolution are, briefly: The boundary line between the States of Mississippi and Arkansas, as originally fixed, was the Mississippi River. By this it is meant the thread or middle of that stream was the dividing line. The river along that reach which forms this boundary flows through an alluvial vailey and is marked by a most tortious course. Long bends, 10 and even 20 miles around and only 2 or 3 miles across, are very frequent, and in times past, when the annual floods would come, the river would rush across these narrow necks with such force and volume that it would in many instances cut through the soft alluvium and thus establish a new and shorter channel and leave the long, narrow bends cut off from their original jurisdictions.

The old channel around the bend, the States which are separated by the Ohio River were empowered to do by the original ordinance which ceded the Northwest Territory to the States which are do by the original ordinance which ceded the Northwest Territory to the Union.

While it may be a decatable question as to whether or not the consent of the Congress is necessary, it has been deemed best to accede to the wishes of the States and give them consent to do what they

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, the necessity for the action contemplated by this resolution is made clear by the report. It has been a source of very great annoyance for many years to have these little parcels of no man's land scat-tered along both shores of the great river where those who choose to violate the laws can find a refuge. The States which are separated by the Ohio River were given concurrent jurisdiction of offenses committed on it by the early ordinances in reference to the Northwest Territory, and I believe this has been generally done when States have been admitted with a navigable river as a boundary line, but it was not done when the Mississippi Territory was created, and for the very good reason that the United States only extended at that time to the middle of the Mississippi River. By the articles of cession of 1802, Georgia, which owned the territory which is now the State of Mississippi ceded to the United States-

All her right, title, and claim to the jurisdiction and soil of the land situated within the boundaries of the United States south of the State of Tennes and so forth, and the boundaries of the United States then extended only to the middle of the Mississippi River.

The treaty of 1763 between England, France, and Spain fixed the middle of the Mississippi River as the dividing line between the French possessions west of the river and the English possessions on the east, and when the independence of the colonies was recognized by the treaty of peace in 1783, the middle of the river was again designated as the western boundary. Mississippi was made a Territory in 1798 "bounded on the west by the Mississippi River," and when she was admitted to statehood nineteen years later her boundary ran "to the Mississippi River, thence up the same," and this has universally been held to mean the middle of that river. In Handly's Lessee v. Anthony, reported in 5 Wheaton, the Supreme Court of the United States decided that-

Where a great river is the boundary between two nations or States, if the original property is in neither and there be no convention respecting it, each holds to the middle of the stream.

Running, as it does, through an alluvial valley, where the banks are continually caving into the river, the course of the Mississippi has undergone almost innumerable changes, and what is the middle of the river to-day may be a long distance from the middle of the river to-morrow. This illustration mentioned in the report, where the city of Vicksburg has been left high and dry several miles from the Mississippi, is a case in point. Although the middle of the Mississippi River is now some miles below the city, the boundary line between the two States still runs along the city front, where the middle of the Mississippi was when it was made the original boundary. In other words, the boundary line is not variable, it does not follow the shifting channel of this most fickle and inconstant stream. To express it in the very forceful language of the Supreme Court of the United States, in the case of Indiana v. Kentucky-

Her dominion and jurisdiction continue as they existed at the time she was admitted into the Union, unaffected by the action of the forces of nature upon the course of the river.

This was said in a case where a very similar situation had appeared in the Ohio River. Green Island had been left by the shifting channel of the Ohio River, and had in fact, though not in law, become a part of the State of Indiana-

Undoubtedly-

Says the court-in the present condition of the tract, it would be more convenient for the State of Indiana if the main river were held to be the proper boun-dary between the two States. That, however, is a matter for arrange-ment and settlement between the States themselves, with the consent of

There is no dissent in the books from this view, and if these States are to be relieved from the embarrassments—which might perhaps more aptly be called "harassments"—of this situation it must come by "arrangement and settlement between themselves." The Constitution declares that no State shall enter into any compact or agreement with another State without the consent of Congress, and this resolution proposes to give that consent.

I think there can be no question that the States are competent to enter into the character of agreement or compact which this resolution consents to. It is certainly a part of the general right of sovereignty, belonging to independent nations, to cede territory and to incorporate in the body of the commonwealth the territory so ceded, and this right equally belongs to the States of the Union, except in so far as they may have surrendered it by the Constitution. A study of the great instrument will readily reveal the fact that so far from surrendering that right, it is plainly reserved to the States with but one single limitation: it must be exercised with the consent of Congress. With that consent they resume the sovereignty which was theirs without limitation before they delegated it to the Federal Government, and being thus unhampered their compacts with each other are of the same binding force and operate with the same effect as a treaty between sovereign powers. This view is distinctly announced in Poole v. Fleeger, in the 11th Peters, and in the case of Rhode Island v. Massachusetts (12 Peters), and has been affirmed in numerous opinions since these, notably in the somewhat celebrated case of Virginia v. Tennessee, reported in 148 United States.

The other subject upon which these States are permitted to negotiate and agree is equally important.

To adjudge and settle the jurisdiction of offenses arising out of the violations of the laws of said States upon the waters of the Mississippi River.

The offense most usual on the waters of the great inland sea is the violation of the local laws against gambling and the sale of intoxicating liquors. Small boats fitted up solely for that purpose hover along the shores in front of the towns and cities where prohibition statutes are in force and operate floating saloons along the river in utter and flagrant violation of the state laws? For the reasons which I have stated it is not possible to prove the venue in any proceeding against these outlaws, because no man knows where the middle of the river was when the State was admitted in 1817 and that must be proven as a jurisdictional fact. With the consent of Congress these States may, and no doubt will, immediately make such a compact as will give concurrent jurisdiction of all offenses committed on the river, and in this way make it possible to put an end to these evil practices. That there is ample authority for this can not be doubted.

The subject of extraterritorial jurisdiction is a very interesting one and has engaged much of the attention of the writers on international law. In the second volume of Moore's Digest of the Law of Nations there is a most interesting and instructive treatment of this whole subject. Fortunately for my contention here, however, our own courts have passed directly on this point.

In 1785 the States of Virginia and Maryland, for the very reasons which I am urging now, entered into an agreement by the terms of which both States were to exercise concurrent jurisdiction of all "piracies, murders, and other crimes" committed on the waters of the Potomac River where it forms their boundary. Under this agreement both States have for more than a century been punishing offenders for crimes committed on these treaty waters, and the highest court of the land has upheld these convictions. This whole subject was gone into and most elaborately discussed by the Supreme Court in Wharton v. Wise (153 U. S.). In this case the power of the States to enter into this compact was not only upheld, but Congress was held to have consented to it by its silent acquiescence.

I have examined with some thoroughness all the authorities I have been able to find which throw any light on this subject, and the only element of doubt seems to be as to the necessity of congressional action. In other words, need the consent of Congress be given to enable the States to enter into such an agreement or compact as is contemplated in this resolution? Certainly the consent of Congress is not necessary to the validity of every kind of compact or agreement the States may desire to enter into. The evident purpose of the limitation which the Constitution imposes was to prevent such compacts or agreements among the States as might hamper the administration and complete exercise of all the functions of the Federal Goverment or which might so increase the political power and importance of the States as to raise up within the Union itself another and rival confederacy. This question was discussed at some length in the Tennessee-Virginia case, and later in Wharton v. Wise, and the opinion there seems very clear that the limitation extends only to such compacts as tend to increase the political power of the States or which may encroach upon or interfere with the just supremacy of the United States.
So far, then, as the agreement is limited to the question of the jurisdiction of offenses committed on the Mississippi River, it may be admitted that this could not add to the political power of either State, and so would not require the consent of Congress. There are some lawyers of ability, however, in this House who hold to the opposite view. There can be no doubt that the limitation does apply to the other clause of the resolution, under which they are permitted-

To fix the boundary line between said States where the Mississippi River now, or formerly, formed the said boundary line, and to cede, respectively, each to the other such tracts or parcels of the territory of each State as may have become separated from the main body thereof by changes in the course or channel of the Mississippi River.

The cession of territory is necessarily a political question, and whether it involves an increase of political power is a question which Congress must decide, and this is another way of saying that the consent of Congress must be had. In the Virginia-Tennessee case the court says:

The compact or agreement will be within the prohibition or without it, according as the establishment of the boundary line may lead or not to the increase of the political power or influence of the States affected, and thus encroach or not upon the full and free exercise of

And in the case of Florida v. Georgia, reported in 17 Howard. the court says:

The question of boundary between States is in its nature a political question, to be settled by compact made by the political departments of the Government, and if two States by negotiation and agreement proceed to adjust a boundary between them, any compact between them would be null and void without the assent of Congress.

From all the authorities I am convinced that the consent of Congress in the matter now before us is necessary, because the States are not simply permitted to ascertain and locate the boundary as it was originally established, but they are further empowered to fix that boundary in such wise as may necessitate the mutual cession of territory.

But one question remains for our consideration, and that is,

Should the consent of Congress precede or follow the agreement of the States? The Constitution declares simply-

No State shall without the consent of Congress enter into an agreement or compact with another State.

And from this unequivocal language it would appear that the consent should first be given before the States undertook "to enter into an agreement." This would undoubtedly be the preferable course unless there was such uncertainty as to the nature and scope of the agreement as to make it inadvisable to consent in advance. In the Tennessee-Virginia boundary case the court announces this view, and adds:

But where the agreement relates to a matter which could not well be considered until its nature is fully developed it is not perceived why the consent may not be subsequently given.

The necessary inference from this is that, where the subjectmatter of the agreement is apparent and nothing further is needed to have its "nature fully developed," the consent of Congress should precede rather than follow the agreement. Nothing is needed to "fully develop the nature" of the agreement contemplated in this resolution. There are a number of small tracts which have been cut off from the main body of each State by the shifting channel of the Mississippi River, and Congress is asked now to consent that these States may agree upon a new boundary line, which will involve the cession, respectively, of these small areas; and further, to permit them to adjudge and settle the jurisdiction of offenses committed on the Mississippi River. The "nature" of the agreement is plainly manifest and "fully developed." So much for the law.

There is a reason which I think makes it very desirable that this consent be given at once. Citizens who live near the river, and who for that reason are subject most keenly to the annoyances of the present status, are continually calling upon Congress to enact some legislation that will put an end to these lawless practices on what they consider "the Government's river." I have been appealed to time and again to have Congress forbid the sale of intoxicating liquors on this river. I do not believe that the Federal Government has any such power. because this is clearly a matter of police regulation, and police power is exclusive with the States. If Congress has the power to forbid the sale of liquor on this river, it would certainly have the power to authorize it, and I am quite certain no State would be willing to concede that. Aside from the question of power, the practical question of proving venue would be just as great an obstacle to the enforcement of the law in the federal courts as in the state courts. It would still be necessary to prove whether the law was violated in Arkansas or in Mississippi, because the Constitution declares:

The trial of all crimes, except in cases of impeachment, shall be by jury, and such trial shall be held in the State where the said crime shall have been committed.

This of course refers to trials for crimes against the federal laws and has no reference to state law. It has been suggested that this difficulty might be obviated by a law which would authorize the cancellation or revocation of the boat's license if intoxicating liquors were sold on it, because it would then be necessary only to prove the fact of sale, the jurisdiction in which the sale occurred being immaterial. This would certainly be effective to a degree, and I have reason to believe that the officials in the Steamboat-Inspection Service would welcome such legislation, but it would be effective only to a degree, and as to the particular evils, which have proven so vexatious on the lower Mississippi, this provision would be valueless. Under the law now license is required only of such craft "propelled by machinery as are of 15 gross tons or over," and the whisky boats, which are such nuisances on the lower river, are all of less than 15 tons, and are therefore required to have no license. The Steamboat-Inspection Service has been asking Congress for several years to put these small boats in some way under governmental supervision, but so many are owned by parties who operate them solely as pleasure boats that Congress has so far refused to subject their owners to any governmental supervision.

The best answer to all of these propositions, however, is that the States should enforce their own police regulations and not rely upon the Federal Government to do it for them. The more they rely upon themselves and the less they ask or expect from the Federal Government the better for all concerned. If we pass this resolution we put the burden where it belongs-on the States; and if they then fail to discharge that burden in such manner as will give their citizens the relief they desire, the fault will be upon the officials of the State, and the people will know their duty.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There was no objection.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Record.

CONDEMNED CANNON TO COUNTY OF ORANGE, N. Y.

Mr. BRADLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to discharge the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union from the consideration of the bill (H. R. 24492) to authorize the Secretary of War to donate one condemned bronze fieldpiece and cannon balls to the county of Orange, State of New York, and that the same be considered in the House.

The bill was read, as follows:

The offi was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to donate to the county of Orange, State of New York, one condemned bronze fieldpiece, with or without carriage, with a suitable outfit of cannon balls, which may not be needed in the service, the same to be placed by the Major Murray Camp, Sons of Veterans, on the memorial plot at Goshen, the seat of said county, in honor of the soldiers and saflors from that county who served in all wars: Provided, That the articles of ordnance property furnished under the foregoing provisions of this act shall not be required to be accounted for to the Chief of Ordnance and no expense shall be incurred by the United States in the delivery of the same.

The following committee amendment was read:

In line 5, page 1, after the word "with," strike out "or without." The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

CONDEMNED CANNON TO MARSHALL COUNTY, W. VA

Mr. BRADLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to discharge the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union from further consideration of the bill (H. R. 24151) to authorize the Secretary of War to donate two condemned brass or bronze cannon or fieldpieces and cannon balls to the county court of Marshall County, W. Va., and to consider the same in the House.

The bill was read, as follows:

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia renews his request for unanimous consent for the discharge of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union from further consideration of the bill (H. R. 4836), and for its consideration in the House at this time. The Clerk will report the title of the bill.

The Clerk again reported the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendments, to go in after the committee amendment:

Seventh. That all work incident to this license shall be subject to the supervision and approval of the officer of the United States Army in charge of said reservation.

Eighth. That the occupation of said reservation incident hereto shall be subject to such rules and regulations in the interests of good order, police, sanitation, and discipline as said officer may from time to time prescribe.

Mr. MAYNARD. Mr. Speaker, I accept the amendments. The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection. The question is on the committee amendment and the amendments offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The question was taken, and the amendments were agreed to.
The SPEAKER. The question now is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill as amended.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

PENSION APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of further considering the bill H. R. 26203, the pension appropriation bill, and pending that motion, I desire to ask unanimous consent that all general debate be closed in four hours. I have an arrangement with the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. Bowers], by which we will, if consent is given, divide the time satisfactorily.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio moves that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the pension appropriation bill, pending which motion he asks unanimous consent that general debate be limited to four hours upon the bill, to be controlled by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. Bowers]. Is Keifer a name of The Chair hears none. The question now is on the motion of the gentleman from Ohio.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to. Accordingly, the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the pension appropriation bill, with Mr. Butler in the chair.

Mr. BOWERS. Mr. Chairman, I yield one hour to the gentleman from New York [Mr. WILLETT].

Mr. WILLETT addressed the committee. Remarks stricken out by order of House resolution No. 516, January 27.1

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to inquire whether if the committee does not desire to listen to the remarks of the gentleman from New York it has any remedy under the rules of the House; whether the House can stop him if the Chair does not rule him out of order?

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from New York yield to the gentleman from Kentucky?

Mr. WILLETT. I decline to yield.
Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Chairman, I did not ask the gentleman to yield. I was making a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will please state it. But so long as the gentleman proceeds within the rules and practice of the House he is in order and may proceed.

Mr. LANGLEY. But suppose we do not think his speech is in

The CHAIRMAN. Then the gentleman from Kentucky may raise the point of order and the Chair will consider it.

Mr. IANGLEY. All right.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will say to the gentleman from Kentucky that the Chair is listening with patience, but the Chair is unable to hear everything the gentleman says.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman—

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from New York [Mr. WILLETT] yield to the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. WILLETT. I decline to yield.

Mr. MADDEN. I move, Mr. Chairman, that the gentleman has compelled to proceed in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair feels that the motion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] is not in order at this time, because the language used by the gentleman from New York has not yet been decided to be out of order, no point having been raised. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from New York yield?
Mr. WILLETT. I will not yield.
Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. The gentleman must yield to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair did not understand that the gentleman rose to a point of order. Will the gentleman please state it?

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. I make the point of order that the gentleman's discourse is out of order and in violation of the rule which says personalities must be avoided.

The CHAIRMAN. Which part of the gentleman's speech does the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER] refer to?

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER] refer to?
Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. To the part in which he speaks of a persistent defamation of Admiral Schley.
The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from New York [Mr.
WILLETT] please suspend for a moment and be kind enough to quote the language to which the gentleman from Massachusetts takes exception, so that the Chair may distinctly understand it?

Mr. WILLETT. The gentleman from Massachusetts objects to my languauge. He must know what I said. Let him report what he objects to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will be better satisfied to have the language repeated by the gentleman from New York [Mr. Willert], for the reason that the gentleman from Massachusetts may not quote him distinctly and correctly.

Mr. WILLETT. The lines in relation to Admiral Schley

The persistent defamation of Admiral Schley, who really fought the battle of Santiago Bay.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is obliged to the gentleman for having repeated his language.

Mr. WILLETT. Is all this debate coming out of my time?
The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will say that the gentleman will be protected as to time. The Chair has the opportunity if the committee will accord the Chair the right.

Mr. BATES. Mr. Chairman—
The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will rule. The Chair is decidedly of the opinion that that remark is out of order. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman-

The CHAIRMAN. The gentlemen will please permit the Chair to rule. In few of the other remarks that the gentleman has made, and in the general tenor of his remarks respecting the President of the United States, the Chair has already expressed an opinion, and has requested the gentleman to proceed in order, but the Chair will now ask the gentleman, if he sees proper, to explain what he means.

Mr. WILLETT. The language speaks for itself. It is an historical fact that the President, in the controversy between Admiral Schley and Admiral Sampson, took the side of Sampson and cast reflections constantly upon the attitude of Admiral Schley in his claim for authority at the time this battle was

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from New York that the gentleman from Massachusetts called the attention of the Chair to the use of the words "defamation of Admiral Schley" on the part of the President of the United States, and the Chair, having in view previous expressions to which the Chair has objected, holds and will repeat that, in the judgment of the Chair, that remark is out of order—

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman-

Mr. BATES. Mr. Chairman-

The CHAIRMAN. Leaving it to the House to determine whether or not the Chair is right.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. A point of order Mr. Chair-

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will please state it. Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. I raise the point of order that a Member, having been out of order in debate, is no longer entitled to the floor, and that another Member may be recognized.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair remembers the rule. It is for the committee to determine whether the gentleman shall have the floor, and not the gentleman who makes the point of order.

Mr. MANN. I raise a point of order.
The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN].

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to call your attention to clause 4 of Rule XIV.

If any Member, in speaking or otherwise, transgress the rules of the House, the Speaker shall, or any Member may, call him to order; in which case he shall immediately sit down, unless permitted, on motion of another Member, to explain, and the House shall, if appealed to, decide on the case without debate.

I insist that the gentleman shall take his seat and not be permitted to proceed. [Loud applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I raise a point of order. The gentleman from Iowa has called attention to clause 4 of Rule XIV. I desire to call the attention of the Chair to clause 5 of Rule XIV, which prescribes the procedure in such cases, and which reads:

If a Member is called to order for words spoken in debate, the Member calling him to order shall indicate the words excepted to, and they shall be taken down in writing at the Clerk's desk and read aloud to the House, but he shall not be held to answer nor be subjected to the ceasure of the House therefor if further debate or other business has

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state his recollection as to the CHARMAN. The Chair will state his recollection as to the application of the rule. That rule is enforced where some punishment is proposed, but ordinarily it is not enforced. The gentleman simply takes his seat until some gentleman moves that he be permitted to proceed in order. Will the gentleman from New York kindly take his seat?

Mr. CANDLER. Mr. Chairman, I move that the gentleman may be permitted to proceed in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi moves that the gentleman from New York may be allowed to proceed in order.

Mr. VREELAND. The gentleman from New York has not taken his seat.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the gentleman will, and that he has merely overlooked doing so. The motion is made that the gentleman may proceed in order.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. CANDLER. Division!
The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would be glad to have this vote taken by tellers.

Mr. MANN. I ask for tellers.

The question was taken on ordering tellers.

Tellers were ordered.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER] and the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. CANDLER] will take their places and act as tellers.

The committee divided; and tellers reported-ayes 78, noes 126.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee has concluded that the gentleman from New York shall not proceed. [Loud applause gentleman from New on the Republican side.]
on the Republican side.]
Trise to a question of order.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I rise to a question of order.
The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will please state it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The only power the committee has is to have the words of the gentleman taken down and reported to the House, for action by the House. There is no provision of the House for action of the committee other than that, but it is for the House to act, and not the committee, on the language.

The CHAIRMAN. The practice of the House is the practice of the committee. If the committee had desired more stringent action, the words might have been taken down and reported to the House; but as the gentleman from New York quoted his language, and has been dealt with, therefore it would seem to the Chair that the committee having already acted it is not necessary to refer the subject to the House.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The point I make is that the committee has no such power, and is limited to the exercise of this provision in the rule.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee has authority to report the words to the House if they were taken down. No geutleman asked that the words be taken down until we had proceeded with business, on the question of order, which is now disposed of.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I did not catch the statement of the

The CHAIRMAN. It is simply a question of order, and the committee has now disposed of it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The Chair apparently does not catch the point I made, and that is, the committee has no power to do what the Chair claims it has done.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair did understand the gentleman, and his position was plainly stated. The Chair is of the opinion that the committee has jurisdiction, and the committee had authority to act just as the committee did act.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Chairman, I will ask the gentleman from Mississippi if he desires to yield some time now?

Mr. BOWERS. I can use some now, or the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Keifer] may use his time, just as he prefers.

Mr. KEIFER. Suppose you yield to some other gentleman

Very well, I yield thirty minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. SMITH of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, it is my purpose to discuss during the time allotted me what is known as the "Enrolled Missouri Militia bill."

At the beginning of the first session of this Congress I, with a number of other gentlemen from Missouri and from other parts of the country, introduced pension bills. I introduced my bill for the purpose of pensioning what is now and has ever been known as the "Enrolled Missouri Militia" and other militia of that State.

This proposed legislation has been before Congress for a great number of years in one form and another, and how long it will remain before Congress before definite action is taken upon the measure no one can foretell. It has received the attention and been discussed before the Committee on Invalid Pensions again and again, but without results. I learned at a hearing before this committee near the close of the last session that similar bills had for many years received the consideration of gentlemen from Missouri, like Judge De Armond, Mr. Bartholdt, and others from that State, and hence I take it for granted that there must be merit in the bill.

Missouri, as is well known, was one of the border States. It was bounded on three sides by loyal States and on one side by a State which went into the Confederacy. Possibly no State in the Union had so much internal strife and so much commotion, dissension, and disorder of various kinds as did the State of Missouri; and had it not been for the decisive action of men like Francis P. Blair, Samuel Glover, James O. Broadhead, B. Gratz Brown, and others like them, the probabilities are that Governor Clabe. Jackson and his coadjutors would have swung the State into the Confederacy. But by their prompt action and the men, with swords back of them, for some of whom I am now speaking, the State of Missouri was made a loyal State and kept within the Union.

Some of these soldiers have been pensioned, some have not. The Three Months' Militia that were called out early in the year 1861, in pursuance of a proclamation by President Lincoln for 75,000 to suppress insurrection, have been pensioned by the extension of the general pension laws not many years ago. The Missouri State Militia, an organization under the command of federal officers generally, and particularly when necessity required, have also been pensioned.

In answer to the Senate resolution of June 14, 1902, in which Secretary of War, Root, was directed to transmit to the Senate a statement showing the various classes of Missouri volunteers, militia, and home guards that were in the service during the civil war, the Secretary, in contrasting the enrolled Missouri Militia and the Provisional Enrolled Missouri Militia, said that their military status was precisely the same.

And yet the Government has pensioned the Provisional En-rolled Missouri Militia and left unpensioned the Enrolled Missouri Militia.

The bill which I introduced is well guarded and protected, so that the Pension Bureau, with the authority that it has in matters of that kind, can prevent the pensioning of any Enrolled Missouri Militia, or any other militia, who ought not to be pensioned. The provisions of the bill are simple, and yet comprehensive, and its provisions have been censored by the Pension Bureau often, and until the bill, so far as the Missouri Militia are concerned, is about as perfect as it can be made.

I desire to read just a part of the bill to show its main provisions, omitting the language that articulates it with the general pension laws, which is as follows:

extended to include the officers and enlisted men of the state militia and other organizations of the several States of the Union that were organized for the defense of the Union and cooperated with the military and naval forces of the United States in suppressing the war of the rebellion, who served ninety days or more in any of said military organizations during the said war, and were honorably discharged therefrom or otherwise relieved from duty under orders of a military or naval officer of the United States, and that a certificate of discharge from such service from either state or United States authority shall be conclusive proof of such service, and to the widows, minor children, and dependent mothers and fathers of such persons: Provided, That no person, his widow, or minor children, shall be entitled to the benefits of said acts unless the company or organization in which he served was organized under orders of a commanding officer of the military or naval forces of the United States, or served under authority of a military or naval forces of the United States, or coperated with the military or naval forces of the United States in the suppression of the war of the rebellion, and was paid or maintained by the United States, or doperated with the military or haval forces in said militia or other organization, or was paid or maintained by the States Government.

Those coming within the provisions of this bill are not to be pensioned unless they were organized for the defense of the Union, and to cooperate with the military and naval forces of the Federal Government in the suppression of the rebellion, and unless they had seen as much as ninety days' actual service in the field, and had been honorably discharged or otherwise relieved from duty under military orders, and were organized under and commanded by federal commanding officers.

All of these requirements and others can be carefully preserved and applied by the Pension Bureau to the parties seeking They are not to be pensioned unless they were acting under the command of federal officers at the time that they were in the service to suppress the rebellion, and served actively ninety days. There is no reason why these men, or those who are left of them, should not be pensioned as well as any of the other militia of the State of Missouri.

Mr. BATES. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask the gentleman a question.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Missouri. Yes; certainly.
Mr. BATES. I desire to ask the gentleman from Missouri whether the provisions of the invalid-pensions law of 1890 were not extended to a company or regiment of Missouri volunteers some two years ago?

Mr. SMITH of Missouri. There was an extension of the general pension laws to what is known as the Missouri State Militia, and also to the Provisional Enrolled Missouri Militia, and to the Home Guards.

Mr. BATES. Does this bill which the gentleman favors follow the precedent set by that action?

Mr. SMITH of Missouri. If I understand the gentleman, I think it does.

Mr. BATES. I think that was a joint resolution. Mr. SMITH of Missouri. This is not a joint resolution, but an original bill for the purpose of extending the provisions of the pension laws to the Enrolled Missouri Militia and other militia that served at least ninety days under the direct command of federal officers in the suppression of the rebellion.

Mr. BATES. Then, this measure contemplates embracing the balance of the Missouri Militia?

Mr. SMITH of Missouri. That is the purpose of it.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SMITH of Missouri. Yes.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I have known for some time that one branch of Missouri Militia had already been covered into the regular service so that they are now eligible for pensions. Does the gentleman from Missouri know how many there were of those and how many still remain outside, and what the two branches of the Missouri Militia were that made the distinction in the first instance?

Mr. SMITH of Missouri. I think I do, and I shall attempt to answer that before I conclude my remarks. I shall undertake at this moment to show that certain of the Missouri Militia, which now enjoys the benefits of the general pension laws came in under the arrangement of 1861 between President Lincoln and Governor Gamble. That arrangement thus made was so clear and so conclusive when brought to the attention of Congress that it could no longer be ignored. Congress perceived that the President in 1861 wanted the Militia of Missouri, when in line of duty and under the control of federal officers, recognized, and hence some of the Missouri Militia finally secured by resolution an extension to them of the general provisions of the pension laws. The Enrolled Missouri Militia was called out in the summer of 1862 for the purpose of meeting an emergency that unexpectedly arose in the State, that of holding the State within the Union. Something like twenty-five or thirty thousand of that class of militia were then organized and put into active service. They were armed as well as could be by the State, and Brig. Gen. John M. Schofield, at that time the military commander of the Missouri State Militia, acting with the state authorities, assumed command of the Enrolled Missouri Militia and the other militia of the State, and drove from the boundaries of the State the outside invaders, and suppressed the raiding bands within the State, and saved the State. In one of his reports he said that had it not been for the Enrolled Missouri Militia he could not have expelled the invading troops and have subdued the guerrillas and raiding bands in the State. Notwithstanding these facts, and the statements contained in Secretary Root's report, of which the committee has often heard, of the valor and value of these men to the State in preserving the Union, they have not yet been pensioned, and I regret to say that there has never yet been a report by the Committee on Invalid Pensions of this bill or any similar bill. The committee simply contents itself by saying that the bill is not broad and comprehensive enough, that it does not extend to all kinds of military companies in the various States of the Union, and stops at that, as if it had done its duty in the case and was not required to make a bill that would cover the conditions or lend a hand in helping to do it.

Mr. HAMMOND. May I ask the gentleman a question? Mr. SMITH of Missouri. Yes; certainly.

Mr. HAMMOND. I would like to ask if the members of the Enrolled Missouri Militia were regularly enrolled within the State.

Mr. SMITH of Missouri. Yes, sir, they were.

Mr. HAMMOND. Is there a record of the enlistment of these men and of the service they performed?

Mr. SMITH of Missouri. Yes; there is a record.

Mr. HAMMOND. So that it would be possible from official records to determine the length of service of each militiaman and the kind of service he rendered?

Mr. SMITH of Missouri. It would, yes, by state records.

Mr. HAMMOND. Those, of course, are state records. Mr. SMITH of Missouri. Those are state records, but there are copies of them here in the War Department. Now, as to that, I ought to explain further. You will understand that the Enrolled Missouri Militia was called out into service as I have said, in 1862, because the state authorities, and I will add General Schofield, too, believed that there was about to be a general uprising in the State, of those in sympathy with the South for the purpose of turning the State over to the confederacy. To this call for troops something like 25,000 responded. The response was prompt and organization of the forces was active and effective to meet the conditions that seemed to threaten the integrity of the State with the Union.

Mr. HAMMOND. Now, will the gentleman yield for one more question?

Mr. SMITH of Missouri. Yes, sir.

Mr. HAMMOND. Who made that call? You state there was a response made to the call; now, who made the call?

Mr. SMITH of Missouri. It was made by Governor Gamble after interviewing and consulting Gen. John M. Schofield, brigadier-general, United States regular forces, as well as commander of the Militia in Missouri. These militia were in part supported by the General Government. They received their uniforms, their arms, part of their subsistence, including forage and food, and some from the enemy. After a year or more had elapsed—and now here comes the pretext and technical trouble, and the alleged reason why the men I am speaking of have not been pensioned. After the storm had cleared away and it looked as if the State was secure through the valiant services of the Enrolled Missouri Militia, it was then thought some of them could be dispensed with and sent home.

Hence the Provisional Enrolled Missouri Militia came into existence, and here is the rub, and this point is technical, empty as a bubble, as I shall show, and yet, so far as I can learn, has never yet been brought out and debated. General Schofield, who had commanded these men that saved, as he himself asserted, the State of Missouri to the Union, came to the conclusion in some indefinable way that it was not necessary to keep them all in the field, and in a cold-blooded way suggested that a better grade of men, whom he thought would make better soldiers, should be picked out of the Enrolled Missouri Militia, that had saved the State against Joe Shelby's raid and a general guerrilla warfare in 1863. In keeping with this suggestion, 10 the Enrolled Missouri Militia and organized, to be known as the "Provisional Enrolled Missouri Militia." This class of militia have a pensionable status, and I am glad they have, and they ought to have it. But they were not mustered in or mustered out, any more than the Enrolled Missouri Militia, but they were picked or selected by Governor Gamble and his officers, as was suggested by General Schofield. Permit me, however, to state that the Enrolled Missouri Militia did not retire from the service, nor were they disbanded until April, 1865.

These men, the Enrolled Missouri Militia, who enlisted in April, 1862, disbanded in 1865, served their State and kept it in the Union, have never been pensioned, but their comrades have been, simply because they had a little better social standing before enlistment; and here I want to call the attention of the House to what Secretary of War Root had to say with respect to this anomaly in military jugglery:

The members of the Provisional Regiments, Enrolled Missouri Militia, organized under the authority of the governor of the State February 3, 1863, that were detailed from the regiments of the Enrolled Missiouri regiments, their military status was precisely the same, as the original force—

Meaning the Enrolled Missouri Militia. That is what Secretary Root said in answer to the Senate resolution to which he undertook and did make a comprehensive report, giving from the records in the War Department the exact status of every militia organization of the State. He says that the Enrolled Missouri Militia and the Provisional Enrolled Missouri Militia have a military status of exactly the same character and quality.

I do not know, whether this authority here is regarded as very valuable or not, but, generally speaking, when Secretary Root announces himself on any proposition, it usually receives weight; then why should it not have a controlling influence in this regard? But the Committee on Invalid Pensions-and its attention has been called more than once to this identical language, notwithstanding this statement of the Secretary and hearings, at one of which I addressed the committee last Mayhas consistently and persistently refused to make any report on this bill, or report a bill of its own, giving these old soldiers, many of whom are decrepit, a pensionable status.

Mr. EDWARDS of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman a question. Could the gentleman give about the number of people this bill would include?

Mr. SMITH of Missouri. I made a statement in answer to that question when this bill was heard before the committee at the first session of this Congress, and then said that the estimate of the number of Missouri militia yet living, and who would be affected by the proposed legislation, varied from 3,000 to 10,000 veterans. Originally there were about 25,000 of them, and perhaps 3,000 have been pensioned already, and at least half the others are dead, which would leave a remnant of 5,000 or 6,000. I speak from my own knowledge, because I happen to be connected in a very personal way to this question, for my father was a soldier of the Missouri Militia, and I have an acquaintance with a number of the men, who served in the Enrolled Missouri Militia, and therefore I know personally that at least half of them are dead, so far as my knowledge extends. If I could compute the number that are yet alive and that ought to be pensioned under this bill, should it become a law, there would not, in my opinion, be more than 6,000-possibly not that many.

Mr. HAMMOND. If it will not disturb the gentleman, I ould like to ask another question. The gentleman states that would like to ask another question. The gentleman states that several regiments of the Enrolled Militia were picked out in 1862, and that the balance of the militia was not disbanded until the close of the war.

Mr. SMITH of Missouri. That is correct.

Mr. HAMMOND. Now, will the gentleman please state what services were performed by the members of the militia not picked out or detailed between the time the Provisional Militia of Missouri was organized and the time when the Enrolled Missouri Militia disbanded—the general service performed by the Enrolled Missouri Militia?

Mr. SMITH of Missouri. So far as my information goes, there was no difference in the service at all. There seems to have been some trouble or misunderstanding, which resulted in the discontinuance of General Schofield. There was a good deal of feeling in the State at that time. Factions and strife were strong and bitter, and no doubt he had a good deal of trouble in controlling his men. Therefore he said, he would like to have a certain class of men excluded from the service, because they were not exactly of the character that ought to be in the serv-The correspondence with respect to this subject may be ice. seen in Secretary of War, Root's report, pages 77 to 79, which I hold in my hand. After the storm, as I stated, had passed over, and there was visibly no further use for these bad men as soldiers, the authorities undertook to organize a more decent set of men to serve the country. A certain class, supposedly the rabble, were not picked or detailed for the Provisional En-rolled Missouri Militia, and while each did the very same service and served their country in 1862, 1863, and 1864, during the uprising in 1862, which I have described, the Shelby raid in 1863 and the Price raid in 1864, only the picked Provisional Enrolled Missouri Militia have been pensioned.

Mr. HAMMOND. But after this selection, what service did

Mr. SMITH of Missouri. I understood you to ask, What service did the picked Provisional Enrolled Missouri Militia render the country? I answer, no more real service than did the Enrolled Missouri Militia, and I quote again, listen to these laudatestimonials quoted in behalf of the Enrolled Missouri Militia.

Of the service of the Enrolled Missouri Militia, the adjutantgeneral of the State of Missouri said in his annual report for the year 1863:

Regiments and parts of regiments were ordered into active service and relieved therefrom at various times throughout the State whenever the emergency required it, and life and property, either from bands of guerrillas or an invasion of the enemy in force, become unsafe in any locality. In doing this a sound discretion was used, so as not to involve the State in too great an expense for their payment.

Again, in the same report, the adjutant-general said:

During the month of January the enrolled militia in active service were continually engaged in skirmishes and fights with small bands of guerrillas and bushwhackers, in all of which they invariably routed the enemy whenever a fight could be gotten out of them or a stand was made. The heaviest engagement in which the enemy was in any considerable force was at the battle of Springfield, upon the 5th of that month, and the gallant part taken by the Enrolled Missouri Militia, under the command of Brigadier-General Holland, in the defense of that point against the attack of the greatly outnumbering forces of the rebels under Marmaduke, forms a bright page in the history of our state troops.

In his annual report for the year 1864, the adjutant-general

This body of our state forces, thus designated to distinguish it from other local troops in the service of the United States, and which is properly the militia of the State, has performed an immense amount of duty throughout the State during the past year and has proved a valuable adjunct to the troops in the service of the United States in not only repelling invasion in force, but in suppressing the bands of guerrillas and cutthroats, which, under the name of "confederate soldiers," have, in a great measure, succeeded in their attempts to desolate Missouri.

In 1863 a concurrent resolution was passed by the senate and house of representatives of the State of Missouri, as follows:

Resolved by the senate (and house of representatives concurring therein), That a committee of two on the part of the senate and three on the part of the house be appointed to memorialize Congress to extend to the Missouri State Militia and the Enrolled Missouri Militia the benefit of the pension laws of the United States and all other laws conferring rights and privileges upon the volunteer soldiers in the United States service.

And in 1864 the following joint resolution was adopted:

Resolved by the general assembly of the State of Missouri, That our Senators in Congress be instructed and our Representatives be requested to prepare and support the passage of an act through the Congress of the United States to secure to the widows and orphans of decased soldiers of the Enrolled Militia of this State who died or have been killed in actual service, and to such soldiers of the same as have been wounded in the service of the State in the present rebellion, such pension and bounty as may be allowed by the laws of Congress to the volunteer soldiers of the United States.

The point is that the 10 picked regiments as already described, known as the "Provisional Enrolled Missouri Militia." were supposed to be constantly in camp or in the field, whether they were or not, or whether they had anything to do or not. The original Enrolled Missouri Militia were supposed to be, and in fact were, always ready for actual war; however, when there was nothing to do, and no fighting to be done, and the country required no protection, they went home temporarily, Cincinnatus-like, subject to be called at any hour, as they frequently were, to defend their country and help preserve the Union; for instance, when Joe Shelby raided the State in 1863, and Price made his raid in 1864, and when Marmaduke made his raid in southeast Missouri in the fall of 1862; and they were in service many, many times of sudden excitement, or when scares were bruited abroad of some threatened invasion or raid from the South.

Mr. HAMMOND. Will the gentleman yield there? Mr. SMITH of Missouri. Yes, sir; of course.

Mr. HAMMOND. Then, afterwards, I understood they were called out when there were skirmishes and raids and guerrillas to be suppressed.

Mr. SMITH of Missouri. Yes; I admit that the Provisional Enrolled Missouri Militia did their part, but not any more than the Enrolled Missouri Militia.

Mr. NORRIS. Will the gentleman yield for a question there?

Mr. SMITH of Missouri. Yes, sir. Mr. NORRIS. Were the Enrolled Missouri Militia called after this detailing of which you speak took place?

Mr. SMITH of Missouri, Yes, sir; frequently, and particularly for Price's raid.

Mr. NORRIS. These instances that the gentleman has given occurred after the selections had been made, did they?

Mr. SMITH of Missouri. Yes, sir. These selections by detailing were made by an order of the governor, February 3, 1863. (See Secretary Root's Report, p. 82.) After that, at different times, the whole militia force of the State was called out, as I have stated; for instance, in the summer of 1863, when Joe Shelby raided, especially southwest Missouri, and also in the fall of 1864, when Price made his celebrated raid.

Mr. GOULDEN. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. SMITH of Missouri. Yes, sir; certainly.

Mr. GOULDEN. The gentleman uses the term "called" frequently, and I would like to know whether these troops or militia were called by state authorities or United States author-

Mr. SMITH of Missouri. The Missouri Militia, except the Three and Six Months' Militia, of every name were called out by the governor of the State, after the arrangement made by Governor Gamble with President Lincoln in 1861, for the double purpose of protecting the State and preserving the Union. This was all particularly brought out before the committee by me at the hearing on this bill on the 8th of last May, to which I here refer.

Mr. GOULDEN. Then, what is the objection, may I ask, to granting these men pensions, if they served ninety days or over?

Mr. SMITH of Missouri. There seems to be to the committee one very serious objection—which, to my mind, however, is but technical—and that is that they have no military status in the War Department at Washington.

Mr. GOULDEN. In that they were never enrolled?
Mr. SMITH of Missouri. More than that, they were never regularly mustered in or mustered out of service; but I desire to note that the Provisional Enrolled Missouri Militia were not mustered in or mustered out, nor were the Missouri State Militia mustered in or mustered out. The status of these two classes of Missouri Militia is precisely the same in this respect as the Enrolled Missouri Militia, and yet they have been given a pensionable status, and those who survive are to-day drawing pensions, and rightfully, too.

Mr. GOULDEN. From whom did they receive their pay for military service in the militia?

Mr. SMITH of Missouri. They were originally paid by the State of Missouri, and subsequently, April 17, 1866, an omnibus act was passed by Congress to reimburse the State of Missouri-

For moneys expended in enrolling, equipping, subsisting, and paying such state forces as have been called into service in said State, since the 24th day of August, 1861, to act in concert with the limited state forces in the suppression of the rebellion against the United States.

The exact amount appropriated for this purpose was $7,456,-417.80, and other smaller sums were appropriated for a like object, and this act, or acts of Congress, ought to constitute an equitable estoppel against the Government making any opposition to placing these men on the pension rolls of the Government, and if I were in a court of equity, they would be.

Mr. GOULDEN. That is the best reason why they should be put on the pension rolls by the Government.

Mr. SMITH of Missouri. The facts are, that the Enrolled Missouri Militia was armed and equipped by the Government and did much service, continuing throughout the war, and the only technical difficulty is that they were never mustered in and out of the service. The further fact is, as Missouri was a border State, the militia of all classes were required to do much, and really did more service, a great many times over, than did the regular United States soldiers that were in the State.

I want to make this observation, because of its importance in this debate, that the appropriations made to reimburse the State were made indiscriminately without singling out any particular kind of militia.

Mr. RUSSELL of Missouri. I will ask the gentleman if it is not a fact that members of this Enrolled Missouri Militia, although they have never been regularly pensioned under the law, fought the battles and many of them were wounded, and many of them killed in battles?
Mr. SMITH of Missouri. That is true. Many who served in different local militia companies, and were on temporary rolls, who were injured in battle, or injured in the service have been pensioned by special acts, but this practice has been abandoned by the committee absolutely, as I understand.

Mr. THISTLEWOOD. I would like to ask the gentleman if this difference in reference to pensions has not been due to the fact that some were enrolled with the understanding that they were not to leave the State of Missouri, and yet if the Enrolled. Missouri Militia did not have to go out of the State a good many times?

Mr. SMITH of Missouri. I do not believe that any enrolled with that understanding, but often they were taken out of the State and sent into border States to pursue invading armies, guerrillas, raiders, and otherwise to protect the State. own knowledge that Captain Cochran's company, that was organized principally in Bollinger County, in southeast Missouri, was with other Enrolled Missouri Militia, under the command of General Rogers, a United States commander, garrisoned at Cape Girardeau, kept scouting and scouring all southeast Missouri and northeast Arkansas. My father belonged to Captain Cochran's company, and was in actual service six months-hard service-in the fall and winter of 1864 and 1865. I know this to be true, of my personal knowledge.

Mr. EDWARDS of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, realizing that the gentleman from Missouri has given this question a great of thought, and understanding that there are other border States whose militia are in the same condition as that of Missouri, I would like the gentleman to state to the House if he has knowledge or information what other States are in such or like position, and about the total number, if he could give it, that would be benefited by his bill.

Mr. SMITH of Missouri. I can not do that. I think the State of Kansas is in a very similar condition to the State of Missouri

Mr. EDWARDS of Kentucky. I would like to ask the gentleman, as a further question, if he would be willing to embody in his bill a general provision, or accept an amendment, including all the other States that have their militia in a similar

Mr. SMITH of Missouri. Certainly I would. I think my bill, as it is, will cover them all. Without quoting its language exactly, it states that it is "extended to include the officers and enlisted men of the state militia and other organizations of the several States of the Union that were organized for the defense of the Union," and so forth, and to extend to them the benefits of the pension laws. As I understand it, the Pension Bureau could formulate such kind of procedure as would be required to carry out and give effect to the terms of the measure or, act as the general power under my bill is given.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. Bowers], who is in charge of the time on this side, is temporarily out of the Hall, and I have been left in charge of the time on this side. I yield to the gentleman ten minutes further time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. Bowers] has charge of the allotment of the time on that side of the House. The gentleman has asked in his absence that the gentleman from Missouri be recognized for ten minutes further.

Mr. SMITH of Missouri. My bill could be amended so as to reach Kentucky, Kansas, or any other State and cover its militia, organized as in Missouri, but who were never mustered in or mustered out and are without a pensionable status on that account. That feature of the bill, or a supplemental bill recommended as an amendment to my bill, would cover the State of Kentucky or any other State in a similar condition.

First. To recapitulate, the Enrolled Missouri Militia was called out and enlisted July 22, 1862, for the purpose of protecting the State and its citizens, repelling foreign invasion, and suppressing raiding bands within, which it did to the satisfaction of the state and federal authorities, as I have shown, the total strength of which was 85 regiments, 16 battalions, and 33 independent companies, aggregating possibly 40,000 men from first to last.

Second. The record shows beyond controversy that they were constantly, when the necessity demanded it, under the immediate command of General Schofield, General Rosecrans, General Dodge, and General Rodgers from the date of their enlistment, July 22, 1862, until they were disbanded, March 12, 1865.

Third. The record shows indisputably that the State could not have been defended and kept within the Union without the service of the original Enrolled Missouri Militia. I wish the Committee on Invalid Pensions were present and would take notice of this.

Mr. EDWARDS of Kentucky. I suppose that the gentleman means that he would like to have that portion of the committee present who are not in favor of reporting this bill.

Mr. SMITH of Missouri. I should like to have them present. Mr. EDWARDS of Kentucky. I should like to see them here also.

Mr. SMITH of Missouri. Fourth, I have mentioned several times the agreement formed by Governor Gamble and President Lincoln November 5, 1861, which set in motion the plan to organize the Enrolled Missouri Militia. I have noted the act of Congress April 17, 1866, to reimburse the State of Missouri for moneys expended in enrolling, equipping, subsisting, and paying such state forces as were called into the service in said States since the 24th day of August, 1861, to act in concert with the United States forces in the suppression of the rebellion against the United States.

Fifth. I have called your attention to the action of the senate and the house of representatives of Missouri in 1863 memorinlizing Congress to give to the Enrolled Missouri Militia the benefits of the pension laws of the Government. Yet, when this matter was fresh in the minds of Congress and in the minds of the people of the State of Missouri, they could not say enough laudatory things about the Enrolled Missouri Militia. for whom I am now speaking. I have told you that the late Secretary of War, the Hon. Elihu Root, believed that they were worthy defenders of the Union between 1862 and 1865 and ought to be given a pensionable status by Congress. (See his report to the Senate, pp. 80, 81.) And yet the honorable Invalid Pensions Committee have for twenty years ignored every bill and every resolution and every hearing, every demand, and every plea, personal and public, made by them and their friends, and the effort of a united Missouri delegation in the House.

All has been regarded as mere babble.

Sixth and last. I here set forth the view taken by President Lincoln of the Enrolled Missouri Militia. He regarded the Enrolled Missouri Militia as being under the national military control, stated in a letter written by him to Charles Drake and others, in reply to the demand that General Schofield be relieved as commander of the Department of the Missouri and that the Enrolled Missouri Militia be disbanded. In the letter, dated "Executive Mansion, October 5, 1863," President Lincoln says:

"Executive Mansion, October 5, 1863," President Lincoln says:

As to the Enrolled Missouri Militia, I shall endeavor to ascertain better than I now know what is its exact value. Let me say, however, that your proposal to substitute national force for the enrolled militia implies, in your judgment, the latter is doing something which needs to be done; and if so, the proposition to throw that force away and to supply the place by bringing other forces from the field where they are equally needed seems to be very extraordinary. Whence shall they come? Shall they be withdrawn from Grant, or Banks, or Steel, or Rosecrans? Few things have been so gratifying to my anxious feelings as when in June last the local force in Missouri aided General Schofield to so promptly send so large a general force to the relief of General Grant, then investing Vicksburg and menaced from without by General Johnston. Was this all wrong? Should the enrolled militia then have been broken up and General Herron detached from Grant to police Missouri? So far from finding cause to object, I confess to a sympathy for whatever relieves our general force in Missouri and allows It os serve elsewhere. I therefore, as at present advised, can not attempt the destruction of the enrolled militia in Missouri. I may add that the force being under the national military control, it is also within the proclamation in regard to the habeas corpus.

A. Lincoln. A. LINCOLN.

want to say, in conclusion, that Missouri furnished over 100,000 men to help preserve the Union, that she did more than Iowa, more than Kansas, more than many other States. Many of these men who were of the militia first afterwards became soldiers in the Regular Army and, with the assistance of the men for whom I am now speaking to this Congress and the country, saved the great State of Missouri to the Union and protected the citizens of that State and preserved civil liberty and civil authority in the country. During all thes eforty years, they have struggled with disease and poverty, and now with old age and, most of all, that desolate feeling of having been forgotten and forsaken by their beloved country. There is only a very small fraction of these men now living, something like 5,000 or 6,000.

Mr. Chairman, it is high time that justice be done these men. Though the mills of God grind slowly, yet they grind exceeding small;
Though with patience He stands waiting, with exactness grinds He

[Applause.]

Mr. KEIFER. I now yield to the gentleman from Kentucky

[Mr. LANGLEY] thirty minutes.
Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Chairman, while I disclaim any relationship to an insurgent, and while I am, generally speaking, tolerably well satisfied with the present rules of the House, I have sometimes felt, when listening to the many varieties of oratory that we hear on all sorts of subjects under the liberty of general debate, that I would be willing to vote for an amendment to the rules which would confine debate at all times to the matter pending before the House. I felt very much in that humor a little while ago when the gentleman from New York [Mr. WILLETT] was addressing the House.

I have no ambition, Mr. Chairman, to pose as the eulogist of the present President. His record both before and since he became President, and his championship of the cause of the people, of the great policies, national and international, the enforcement of which have helped to make this the greatest Republic, aye, the greatest nation of the earth, are sufficient eulogy of him. [Applause on the Republican side.]

I do not deny that I am, and have been for many years, a stanch admirer of Theodore Roosevelt, and I am glad to have this opportunity of saying that in my judgment no man since the birth of the Republic has done more to increase its prestige or to promote the cause of civic righteousness, and that his name and deeds will be cherished by the people of this country long after those who are snapping at his heels have been buried in oblivion. [Applause on the Republican side.]

The country will determine whether or not gentlemen on the Democratic side of the House have acted consistently, in view of the fact that the other day they voted to rebuke the President on the ground that they were maintaining the dignity of the House and the rights and privileges of the coordinate branches of the Government, while to-day they joined in applauding the language of the gentleman from New York [Mr. WILLETT], which, I assert, was far more disrespectful to the Executive and a far greater invasion of those rights and privileges than any language contained in any message of the present or any other President ever was to Congress.

But, Mr. Chairman, I have digressed from the subject I arose to discuss. It is not my purpose to indulge in any criticism of this Government for its lack of liberality in pension appropriations. When we remember that the pending bill carries nearly $161,000,000 and that up to the present time this Government has expended practically $4,000,000,000 in the payment of pensions, certainly no one will contend that we have been ungenerous in pension appropriations. [Applause on the Republican side.] Yet, every time a pension appropriation bill passes I can not help feeling the injustice that, in my judgment, has been done to that class of soldiers referred to in part by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SMITH], the militiamen of Kentucky and other States who aided in the suppression of the rebellion. I do not propose to advocate, and I have never advocated, the extension of the pension laws indiscriminately to all state militiamen, regardless of the character or length of service performed by them. I am referring rather to that comparatively small class of militiamen who cooperated with the armed military forces of the United States in the suppression of the rebellion and who rendered valuable service to that end. Gentlemen who have studied this question know that there were three principal steps in the enactment of legislation for the benefit of invalid pensioners. I am somewhat familiar with this question, because I spent nearly ten of the best years of my life as an examiner in the adjudication of pension claims and as a member of the Board of Pension Appeals in passing upon appeals from the decisions of the Commissioner of Pen-

Those three steps were, first, the law which provided pension for disability due to the service; second, the act of June 27, 1890, which provided pension for disability without regard to service origin; and, third, the act of February 6, 1907, which provides certain rates of pension at certain ages. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Smrth] has given us an interesting discussion of his bill providing relief for certain organizations of Missouri state troops. As the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Edwards] suggested to him, I think that a bill should be passed which is broader than his bill, and which will include the cases of militiation of other States who have a significant state. of militiamen of other States who have a similar status. see that I am honored with the attention of several gentlemen who are interested in this subject, and therefore I am going to beg your indulgence while I send to the Clerk's desk and have read in my time a bill which I have prepared after much thought and investigation, and which I think meets the suggestion of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. EDWARDS].

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 16095) to extend the provisions of the pension laws to officers and enlisted men of state military organizations who rendered military service to the Union during the war of the rebellion, and to their widows, minor children, and dependent parents.

Whereas the officers and enlisted men of military organizations of certain States who, while cooperating with the armed forces of the United States and acting under the command of United States officers, rendered actual and valuable service to the cause of the Union during the war of the rebellion and aided in its suppression; and Whereas such officers and enlisted men and their widows, minor children, and dependent parents are barred from the benefits of the pension laws solely for the reason that such officers and enlisted men were never actually enrolled and mustered into the service of the United States: Therefore actually enrolled and mustered into the service of the United States: Therefore

Be it enacted, etc., That any officer or enlisted man of a state military organization who rendered service of the character set forth in the foregoing preamble and who is disabled by reason of injury received or disease contracted in the line of duty while rendering such service, and the widows, minor children, and dependent parents of any such officers or enlisted men dying of such injury or disease, shall be entitled to the benefits of the provisions of the pension laws embodied in Title IV of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

SEC. 2. That the provisions of the act approved June 27, 1890, entitled "An act granting pensions to soldiers and sailors who are incapacitated for the performance of manual labor, and providing for pensions to widows, minor children, and dependent parents," and of the amendments thereto, be, and the same are hereby, extended to such officers and enlisted men of the state military organizations referred to in the foregoing preamble who rendered service of the character therein set forth for a period of ninety days or more, and to their widows, minor children, and dependent parents.

SEC. 3. That the provisions of the act approved February 6, 1907, entitled "An act granting pensions to certain enlisted men, soldiers, and officers who served in the civil war and the war with Mexico," be, and the same are hereby, extended to the officers and enlisted men of state military organizations who rendered service of the character set forth in the foregoing preamble for a period of ninety days or more.

SEC. 4. That the Secretary of the Interior shall prescribe rules and regulations governing the character of evidence necessary to prove the service herein set forth: Provided, That a certificate of the adjutant-general of the State to which the military organizations belonged, showing the date of discharge thereform, shall be accepted in lieu of the honorable discharge required by the provisions of the acts

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Chairman, I regret that the chairman of the committee before which this bill is pending is not now on the floor, because I would like to hear from him some good reason, if he has one, why a bill of that character should not be enacted.

Mr. GOULDEN. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. LANGLEY. Yes.
Mr. GOULDEN. To what committee does the gentleman refer and to what committee would that bill go?

Mr. LANGLEY. Necessarily a bill of this character would go to the Committee on Invalid Pensions. The bill I have had read by the Clerk is pending before that committee now, but I have been unable thus far to get a report on it. Mr. OLLIE M. JAMES. Does the gentleman's bill provide rellef for what are known as "state guards?"

Mr. LANGLEY. It does. All members of those organizations in Kentucky, and elsewhere for that matter, who cooperated with the federal forces—the armed military forces of the United States-in the suppression of the rebellion are intended to be covered by its provisions.

Mr. OLLIE M. JAMES. I notice that; but there were many persons in my country, for instance, that were in the state guards who rendered service, but they were not under the control of any federal general.

Mr. LANGLEY. But did they cooperate with them? Mr. OLLIE M. JAMES. They did in a way, but it was under the control and direction of state officers. I notice the gentleman's bill provides that they must have rendered service under the control and direction of the Federal Government.

Mr. LANGLEY. I will state to my colleague that in drawing this bill my chief purpose was to embody in its provisions, as far as possible, limitations similar to those contained in the general pension laws, so that they would differ only from cases now pensionable in that these men were not mustered into the service of the United States. My own opinion is that if legislation of this character is enacted it should be broader than the provisions of this bill, but after a careful consideration of the situation and after consulting with a number of gentlemen, including several officials connected with the adjudication of pension matters, I arrived at the conclusion that a bill framed conservatively, as mine is, would have a good chance of passing.

Mr. OLLIE M. JAMES. The only point to which I was attempting to direct the attention of the gentleman was this, that if a soldier in a state guard rendered effective service for the time which is provided for in this bill, though he was not under the supervision and control of a federal officer, it seems to me he would have as good a case as though he were under the control of a federal officer.

Mr. LANGLEY. That is so; but does not this bill cover a case of that kind?

Mr. SMITH of Missouri. I will ask the gentleman this question: Will the delegation from Kentucky join with the delegation from Missouri and go to the Pension Committee and ask that committee to report a bill which will cover the case?

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Chairman, I will be delighted to do so, and I am sure my colleagues will also. Not only that, but will state to the gentleman that I have already talked with several gentlemen from Missouri and other States who are interested in this question, with a view of getting a hearing before the House Committee on Invalid Pensions on it.

. Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. LANGLEY. Certainly I will. Mr. MILLER. Will the gentleman from Kentucky have any objection to the acceptance of an amendment, such as suggested by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Ollie M. James], providing that all persons who rendered effective service to the Union cause, even though under state officers, should be included in the bill?

Mr. LANGLEY. I have not, Mr. Chairman, if I thought an amendment of that character were necessary and that it would not endanger the passage of the bill, which, in view of this discussion, seems more promising than I had thought.

Mr. KEIFER. If the gentleman will allow me, I would state that while these troops served under state officers and did services which were valuable, that such service was always under the general direction of the federal officer who had charge of the district at that time.

Mr. MILLER. Not always.

Mr. OLLIE M. JAMES. Mr. Chairman, I think the gentleman from Ohio is entirely in error, because the troops in Kentucky were under the direction of the governor of Kentucky.

Mr. KEIFER. They were classed together under the general having charge of the district.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Edwards], who can clearly state that point, as he has recently made a careful investigation of it.

Mr. EDWARDS of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, my information is that there was an arrangement by the President of the United States, through the War Department and the governor of Kentucky, under which the State Militia of Kentucky and home guards did cooperate with federal troops, and while I do not think it would be necessary to incorporate such an amendment for the purpose of covering the home guards or state guards of Kentucky, I do not see any objection to it, because I believe any man who served ninety days or more in the suppression of the rebellion is entitled to be recognized by the Government for such services and should receive a pension.

Mr. OLLIE M. JAMES. The trouble about an understanding between the President and the governor of Kentucky is that it is not of record, and a soldier would have great trouble in proving the understanding originally had between the Presithe governor.

Mr. EDWARDS of Kentucky. But not the fact of the co-

Mr. OLLIE M. JAMES. No; but you remember the Kentucky troops who had charge of guarding the capitol at Frank-

Mr. EDWARDS of Kentucky. Some; but not many.

Mr. OLLIE M. JAMES. A good many; and there might be a considerable question whether they were doing that under instructions of the President, as Commander in Chief of the

Mr. EDWARDS of Kentucky. With permission of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. LANGLEY], I will say, on the contrary, that that is a matter of record in the correspondence between the President and the governor of Kentucky. I have a copy of this correspondence, and if I had thought of this question coming up at this time I would have brought it. The Capital Guards are one of the divisions in Kentucky that were provided for in this correspondence, but because of differences between the governor and the federal authorities they were never mustered in, but there is a record of the facts.

Mr. MILLER. That may be true as far as Kentucky is concerned, but it is not true of those that rendered efficient services in other States. If the gentleman from Kentucky will accept such an amendment as suggested by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Ollie M. James], they will find the Kansas delega-tion heartily in agreement with them in trying to secure this legislation.

Mr. LANGLEY. I will say to the gentleman from Kansas, if it appears that such an amendment is necessary, in order to cover the class of cases referred to, then, so far as I am concerned, I will be glad to see it inserted, and I am only sorry that the bill we are now discussing is not before the House in such a shape that it could be amended.

I am not conceding that the bill needs amending in that respect, because my understanding is that all of these troops being in a federal military division, or department, were cooperating with the armed forces of the United States whenever they performed any service in the suppression of the rebellion, and that while performing such service, at least, they were "acting under the command of the United States officers" within the meaning of my bill, even though they may have been acting directly under the orders of the governor of the State: and I think their status was, in effect, the same so long as they were actually in the service and subject to the orders of these federal forces. It seems to me that this is necessarily the case, in view of the Janguage contained in Article II of the Constitution, which reads as follows:

The President shall be Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy of the United States and of the militia of the several States when called into the actual service of the United States.

But the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Ollie M. James] and the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MILLER] may be right in their contention. Of course I will gladly cooperate with all of the friends of the militia in the effort to perfect the measure so as to reach every deserving case. What I am contending for is not only right action, but quick action, and I want to do everything in my power to effect both these ends.

As I was proceeding to say, Mr. Chairman, when I was interrupted, the first section of this bill requires proof that the disability was contracted while the soldier was in the service and line of duty before pension can be granted under the "old' or "general" law, as it is usually termed. The second and third sections of the bill provide that it must appear that the soldier rendered the character of service to which I have referred for a period of ninety days, and the fourth section that no cause appears that would have barred the soldier from an honorable discharge if he had been in the service of the United States before the provisions of the acts of June 27, 1890, and February 6, 1907, shall apply. I have failed to hear from any gentleman a satisfactory reason why such legislation as this should not be enacted. I have heard it contended that these troops had an opportunity to go into the service of the United States and declined to do so, and that for that reason they should not be pensioned, but as a matter of fact many of them did not have the opportunity to go into the United States service.

In my own State of Kentucky, for example, a good many regiments were never mustered into the United States service because before they had the opportunity the State's quota was filled, but they nevertheless cooperated with the federal authorities there, the armed military forces, and rendered arduous and valuable service in the suppression of the rebellion. Many of them were wounded in battle, many of them lost their lives in the service, many were taken prisoners, and many contracted diseases from which they have never recovered. They rendered, I undertake to say, more arduous and more valuable service in the suppression of the rebellion and underwent more hardships than did thousands of soldiers whose names are now upon the pension rolls and who have received this recognition over these militiamen simply because they were mustered into the service of the United States, while the militiamen were not. It is an unjust discrimination, Mr. Chairman; service ought to be a far more important factor than muster.

Mr. EDWARDS of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman— The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Waldo in the chair). Does the gentleman vield?

Mr. LANGLEY. Certainly.

Mr. EDWARDS of Kentucky. I would like to know from the gentleman, if he has investigated that part of this matter, how many soldiers he estimates a general bill along this line would place on the pension rolls?

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Chairman, in reply to the gentleman from Kentucky, I will state that while I can not answer that question now, I have talked two or three times with the Adjutant-General of the United States Army regarding the matter, and he tells me that he thinks the records are in such shape that it will be comparatively easy to approximate the number that would be affected by this bill. And I may say further in this connection, that he seemed inclined to the opinion that his records were in such shape that it could be easily ascertained what organizations in Kentucky and elsewhere were cooperating with the federal authorities, and for how long a period they so cooperated.

The contention is made also, and I presume that is what the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Edwards] has in mind, that the passage of this bill would involve a very large increase in our appropriation for pensions. I do not think so. It is evident already, Mr. Chairman, that no general pension legislation is to be enacted at the present session of Congress, and I give notice now to the Committee on Invalid Pensions that I will have ready at the next session the information to which reference has been made, and will be prepared to show that the passage of this bill will not greatly increase our pension appropriation.

see that my time will soon be up Mr. SMITH of Missouri. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. LANGLEY] yield to the gentleman from Missouri?

Mr. LANGLEY. I will.

Mr. SMITH of Missouri. Can the gentleman say how many men of this character there are in his State?

Mr. LANGLEY. I could not answer that positively, I will say to the gentleman from Missouri; but the larger part of them, I think, have already passed away. Only a comparatively small remnant of them is left. There are only a few thousands at the most; and, so far as Kentucky is concerned, the enactment of this bill would not place any considerable additional burden on the Treasury of the United States.

I want, before I close, to refer to one or two other matters and to make another appeal for more liberal pensions for all of the old veterans.

Mr. EDWARDS of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, a while ago the gentleman from New York [Mr. GOULDEN] asked the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Langley] to what committee this bill had been referred. Now, I think I violate no confidence of the committee when I say that there has been some contention that the Committee on Invalid Pensions does not have jurisdiction of this sort of legislation, because of the fact that these soldiers, or this militia, ought to be mustered in, or ought to have some action in this House that usually comes through the Military Committee; and as the gentleman from Kentucky has had experience on the Pension Board of Appeals and is a lawyer and has been giving this question considerable thought, I would like to have his opinion on that question, and if his time expires I think I can procure more for him.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Chairman, so far as the matter of the respective jurisdictions of the Committee on Invalid Pensions and the Committee on Military Affairs is concerned, I am perhaps not as capable of determining that as is the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Edwards], he having had longer service in this body than I have. I presume that would be largely a question of what the rules provide and what the customary practice has been. At least it is more a question of that character than it is a legal question, as I view it.

I am perfectly clear, however, on one point, and that is, that Congress has the power to fix the conditions upon which any person may be admitted to the pension rolls, and in the exercise of that power it can, of course, give a pensionable status to persons who were in state organizations without requiring that they be mustered into and out of the United States service. In fact, it has done so in several instances. This being the case, I think it would be a technical and unnecessary proceeding to have the Committee on Military Affairs take the action suggested, or rather report a bill for that purpose.

What we are trying to get at is to give these militiamen a pensionable status just as they stand and in recognition of the service they rendered, conceding that they never were in the service of the United States. My bill was drawn upon that theory, you will observe. Section 4 provides that the certificate of the adjutant-general of the State, showing date of discharge from the state service, shall be accepted in lieu of the honorable discharge from the United States service which is required in the acts of 1890 and 1907, and the concluding proviso also renders a muster in and a muster out of the United States service Consequently I think my bill clearly comes within the jurisdiction of the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and that the Committee on Military Affairs has nothing to do with it.

Mr. SMITH of Missouri. Mr. Chairman-

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. LANGLEY] yield to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SMITH]? Mr. LANGLEY. Certainly.

Mr. SMITH of Missouri. I desire to ask the gentleman whether the provisions of my bill are not general enough to enable the Pension Bureau to formulate a procedure that will let in the militia of all the States, and whether the bureau has not jurisdiction to arrange a procedure to admit them to pen-

Mr. LANGLEY. Of course the bureau has only such jurisdiction as Congress gives it. I have not given as careful a study to the gentleman's bill as I should have done perhaps. I was greatly interested in his discussion of the question, which I think was able and most convincing.

Mr. SMITH of Missouri. Before this matter is postponed to another session, I should like to ask the gentleman to examine my bill and see whether it will cover his State.

Mr. LANGLEY. I will be glad to do that, but I know that my bill covers my State.

Mr. SMITH of Missouri. I think myself that it does, and covers the State of Kansas also.

Mr. LANGLEY. I care not whose bill is passed. I simply feel that Congress and the country owe it to these brave and patriotic old heroes who rendered such valiant service to the Union cause to place them on an equality with the other soldiers of the country who now have a pensionable status,

Mr. GILLESPIE. I would like to make an inquiry of the gentleman as to the principle on which he asks that these men shall be placed upon the pension roll. They were men who were called out by the governor of the State for the protection of the citizens of the State when the governor thought the general protection of the Federal Government was not sufficient; when there might be sudden uprisings, or things of that kind, and to protect the citizens, the governor goes on and musters these forces that are to act entirely independent of the United States forces. Do you believe that soldiers, men engaged in warfare that way, have a right to rely upon the Federal Government for pensions, even though they did cooperate for the purpose of more effectually extending their aid in protecting the State, independent of the Federal Government? How do you argue that these men should be allowed a pensionable status by the Federal Government?

Mr. LANGLEY. So far as allowing them a pensionable status at this late day-which I understood the gentleman's question to suggest as an objection—is concerned, I think that that ought to have been given them many years ago—

Mr. GILLESPIE. Another question, if the gentleman pleases,
Mr. LANGLEY. The gentleman makes his questions so lengthy, if he will pardon me, and propounds so many of them before I have a chance to-

Mr. GILLESPIE. I would like to hear a little more elaboration of the proposition-upon what principle should the Government pension them?

Mr. LANGLEY. As I said a while ago, I am not contending that all the militia of all the States that was called out for temporary purposes or uprisings, of which the gentleman from Texas speaks, should be given a pensionable status. I am referring to that class of men like those in Kentucky, for instance, who were called out by the governor, some of whom, at least, went into the service with the understanding that they were going into the United States service, and who, although not mustered in, proceeded to cooperate with the armed forces in aiding to suppress the rebellion. The principle involved in my proposition is similar to that, I claim, upon which Con-gress based the legislation for the relief of the Texas Rangers, the Enrolled Missouri Militia, the Provisional Missouri Militia, and an organization of Tennessee Militia, which was given a pensionable status years ago.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. KEIFER. I yield five minutes more to the gentleman.

Mr. LANGLEY. I thank the gentleman from Ohio for his courtesy. They were armed and equipped by the United States Government; they were furnished clothing by the United States Government; and in some instances they were taken entirely out of the State under the command of federal officers. I will say further to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Gillespie] that the Government of the United States afterwards reimbursed the State of Kentucky for its expenses incurred in that connection, thereby recognizing that these militiamen had a status which removes them from the class of militiamen to which the gentleman from Texas is referring.

Mr. GILLESPIE. Is it not true, not perhaps of the kind described in the gentleman's bill, but that these irregular troops who belonged to organizations acting independent of the federal forces and who are trying to get on the pension roll, if we took them all that there would probably be 200,000 of them, including all the border States? Is there not danger that if we open up this question all these 200,000 irregular troops will get on the pension rolls?

Mr. LANGLEY. The gentleman seems to think that if Congress recognizes this small class of militiamen that I have endeavored to describe and to distinguish from the large body of militiamen throughout the country, that it will necessarily have to go still further and give them all a pensionable status. I do not recognize the force of that argument. Congress can undoubtedly go as far as it thinks proper and then stop, and we must assume that this is what it will do. I do not know how many state militiamen there are altogether, even in these border States, who are still surviving and who, of course, would be glad to get a pension if they could; but of the class described in my bill I do not think, as I have already said, that there are more than a few thousand surviving who would be given a pensionable status under its provisions.

Now, I hope gentlemen will not interrupt me further, as I have lost a great deal of my time by these questions, but I was glad to have them, because it evinces a growing interest in this subject and makes me exceedingly hopeful of favorable action.

There were one or two other matters that I was anxious to One of them was the paragraph in the bill which appropriates for only one pension agent, the purpose of which is, of course, to accomplish, by this indirect method, what could not be accomplished directly under the rules of the House, the consolidation of all the pension agencies in Washington City. That question will, of course, be fully discussed when we reach that paragraph of the bill under the five-minute rule. But I want to say now that I am opposed to the consolidation. It is claimed that it is in the interest of economy, but I do not believe, on the whole, that it will have that effect,

I am opposed to it also because most of the pensioners in my State and district are opposed to it, and because it will be less convenient to the pensioners and will necessarily delay more or less, the payment of pensions in a large part of the country. I am opposed to it also because it will result in throwing out of employment nearly all of the people employed in these agencies, many of whom are old soldiers, and the widows and orphans of soldiers. Their salaries are too small, as a rule, to enable them to move to Washington and live, and many of them could not come if their salaries were increased. I am opposed to it because, as a result of this situation, the consolidation would take jobs from people in the different localities where the agencies are located and give the work to clerks here in the Pension Bureau who would otherwise be dropped sooner or later because of a diminution in the work of that bureau.

There has been too much discrimination in this respect al-Too many government positions are now held by citizens of Washington and its immediate vicinity notwithstanding the fact that the theory of the civil-service law is that an equitable apportionment of these places must be made among all the States

So far as the Louisville agency is concerned, I will challenge a comparison of its present administration with that of the Washington agency or any other agency. A distinguished Union soldier of Kentucky, Hon. A. T. Wood, has charge of that, A distinguished and it is conducted in an up-to-date manner in every respect. He tells me that for a considerable period preceding the quarterly payments he and his clerks all work at least an hour more than the clerks here in Washington.

I am sorry that I have not the time allotted to me to discuss this question at greater length. I also wanted to say a few words in behalf of the widows of civil war veterans, and particularly those who married the soldiers before or during the service and who, in a sense, bore their share of the hardships and privations of the war. I also wanted to advocate the repeal of the law which denies pensions to widows who married the soldiers since 1890, and to urge favorable consideration of my bill extending the provisions of the act of June 27, 1890, and its amendments, to the veterans of the Spanish-American war and their widows and orphans, and my bill granting these veterans a bounty, and one or two other measures of interest to soldiers and in which I am deeply interested, but my limited time will not permit. I hope, however, to get these measures before the House a little later on, when I will have a chance to express my views on them.

Let me, in conclusion, urge again a more liberal pension law for the old soldiers. In my judgment, Mr. Chairman, the time is now at hand when this Government should provide a pension law liberal enough to place the old veterans of the civil and Mexican wars entirely above want, so that they will not have to labor for support, but may live in comfort for the remainder of their days. Most of them are now receiving only 40 to 50 cents a day; and yet it is contended by some that we have already done enough for the old soldier.

I can recall at this moment many a humble home down in my district wherein dwells an old man, a soldier of the Union, who is trying to keep body and soul together, and sometimes trying to support others as well, on this small pittance of 40 or 50 cents a day.

The time has come when we ought to give every one of these old veterans a pension of at least a dollar a day. If it be contended that the condition of the Treasury is such now as not to warrant this action-that we have not the money-I, for one, would be glad to have the opportunity to vote for an issue of bonds to meet the additional expense.

In view of the glorious record that these old veterans will leave behind them; of the heroic struggles through which they passed; of the hardships they endured; and of what they accomplished for their country, I am sure that the next generation will not object to bearing its share of the burden. [Applause.] Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from

New York [Mr. GOULDEN] ten minutes.

Mr. GOULDEN. Mr. Chairman, the wide latitude of debate allowed by the Committee of the Whole House, if not always instructive, at least, I think tends to the gayety of nations.

We were very much amused this morning, and some of us perhaps instructed, by the remarks of the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. WILLETT], and while many of us did not agree with him in what he said as to the Chief Executive, at the same time I fear that the suppression of free speech in the House is a very bad precedent to establish. To my mind it was a dangerous thing to do and subversive of free govern-

I usually agree with the reports of committees, believing that a committee bringing in a unanimous report have given the question more consideration than it is possible for individual Members of the House to give, but there are times when I shall have to be classed as an insurgent. Although my friend from Kentucky [Mr. Langley] rather disclaims any intention of being put into the category of an insurgent, I observe that he is about as frequently, perhaps, in that list as many of the rest of us who are Members of this House on the question of supporting the views of the standing committees of this body.

H. R. 26203, with report numbered 1851, now under consideration has the merit at least of being brief and to the point. In addition to this excellent feature, the bill is carefully and intelligently prepared, and, with one exception, it is entitled to the approval of the House. That is the paragraph relating to the pension agencies. Under existing law there are eighteen located in the chief cities of fifteen States and one in the District of Columbia, New York and Pennsylvania having two each, This to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. Norris].

arrangement, now in successful operation for many years, has proven very satisfactory, and, in my judgment, should be continued for at least some years longer.

The pensions paid yearly have steadily grown in volume owing to the just recognition of the debt due the men who, in the civil war, saved the Nation, as well as to their widows

In the ten years from 1899, when the amount paid was $144,651,879.80, it has increased to the sum carried in the present bill of $160,869,000, an increase of more than $16,000,000 in ten years. The age law and the increase in widows' pensions that Congress enacted into law in 1907 and 1908 are responsible for this great increase.

In 1907 the appropriation reached the low-water mark, amounting to $138,155,412.46. The present bill may properly be called the high-water mark in the matter of pensions.

Dui ing 1907 and 1908, 67,636 new claims were added to the list. Notwithstanding this large number of additional claims, the total number on the roll decreased in 1907 from 985,971 in 1906 to 967,371, and in 1908 it fell to 951,687, a net loss of 34,284, due to death principally.

The decrease in number in the next five years will be far greater, and the total will not, in my judgment, exceed 600,000.

As this year's appropriation is the largest in the history of pensions, it seems to me to be a mistake to attempt to change the system of payment by centralizing it into one office, and I am therefore opposed to the change at this time.

The report accompanying the bill has the following comments on the proposed change. A few salient ones I shall read for the information of the House and the country:

the information of the House and the country:

Pension agents.—The compensation of pension agents is fixed by the act of June 14, 1878 (Supp. Rev. Stat., pp. 347 and 348), by the act of July 4, 1888, and by the act of March 3, 1885 (Stat. L., vol. 23, pp. 99 and 362.)

The bill provides for the payment of the salary of one pension agent at $4,000. This is in accordance with the recommendation of the Secretary of the Interior (Mr. Garfield), concurred in by the Commiscioner of Pensions (Mr. Warner), made pursuant to a proviso in the pension appropriation act approved March 4, 1907, which reads as follows:

That the Secretary of the Interior shall make inquiry and report to Congress, at the beginning of its next regular session, the effect of a reduction of the present pension agencies to one such agency upon the seconomic execution of the pension laws, the prompt and efficient payment of pensioners, and the inconvenience to pensioners, if any, which would result from such reduction. This provision shall not be construed as interfering with or limiting the right or power of the President under existing law in respect to reduction or consolidation of existing pension agencies.

From the closing lines of Secretary Garfield's report, it seems

From the closing lines of Secretary Garfield's report, it seems that the President has the right and power to reduce the number of agencies, and therefore the proposed change is unnec-I have the fullest confidence in President Roosevelt, as well as in Judge Taft, who becomes Chief Executive on the 4th day of March, and believe that the matter should be left in their hands to determine. The President can thoroughly examine into the needs of the bureau, and if deemed wise, and in the interests of those intended to benefit, the veterans and the widows of the same, he can readily and intelligently apply the remedy. I desire to insert the action of the Grand Army of the Republic of New York City, printed in the RECORD of March 18, 1908,

MEMORIAL COMMITTEE,
GRAND ARMY OF THE REPUBLIC,
New York, March 17, 1908.
To honorable United States Senators and
Members of House of Representatives:

Members of House of Representatives:

The memorial committee of the city of New York, boroughs of Manhattan, Bronx, Queens, and Richmond, in meeting assembled, unanimously disagree with the proposition to discontinue the pension agencies throughout the country and the establishment of an agency in the city of Washington, and they do most earnestly urge in behalf of the comrades resident in our city that the United States Senators and Members of the House of Representatives from the State of New York use their influence and effort against the proposed law, and for a continuance of agencies as at present existing under the law.

GEO. B. LOUD, Chairman.

EDWARD J. ATKINSON, Secretary.

I feel quite confident that those who are beneficiaries under the various laws of a grateful government to a most deserving class, by a large majority, are opposed to this change. In my judgment, there is no good, valid reason for it except the matter of economy, and I do not regard that as sufficient to justify trying an experiment at this time. [Applause.]

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. Keifer having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message, in writing, from the President of the United States was communicated to the House of Representatives by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries,

PENSION APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr KEIFER. Mr. Chairman, I now yield twenty-five minutes

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. Chairman, I desire to avail myself of the present opportunity to offer a few observations upon the rules of the House of Representatives. The present House of Represcutatives is more than five times greater in number than the first House of Representatives that met after the adoption of the Constitution. I think all who study the subject will agree that the rules governing the organization of a legislative body should be determined somewhat by the size of the body and the length of time that it has to dispose of its business. that would properly govern 4 or 5 men when in session would be, I think all will agree, entirely inadequate to an organization composed, in round numbers, of 400 people. As a matter of fact, most of the people who defend the rules of the House, and oppose any change therein, always devote their attention and their defense to those portions of the rules which nobody has at-

It will be conceded, I believe, by all those who think that many rules, even of a very stringent nature, are necessary in the House of Representatives in order to permit us to do any business at all. As far as I know, no one has claimed that all the rules are bad; and it is no defense of the evil, if there be evil in them, to make a defense against those portions of the rules which nobody complains of, and which everybody admits

The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Olmsted] the other day devoted a great deal of his time in showing how it was that Members had all the opportunity necessary for debate, and what would happen if unlimited debate were allowed, and then devoted considerable time to a defense of what are ordinarily known as the "Reed amendments" to the rules of the House. So far as I have heard, no one has claimed that there should be a rule that would permit unlimited debate, or that what are known as the "Reed rules" are wrong in practice or in prin-

Notwithstanding the fact that, in my judgment, most of the rules are good and are the result of wisdom and experience. I do believe in one or two particulars the rules of the House of Representatives are not only wrong, but vicious, and ought to be changed, in order to permit the House to do the business that was intended by the framers of the Constitution it should do, and do it in the way that it should be done and in a manner satisfactory to the great people of the country that we represent.

In the first place the rules of the House provide that the Speaker shall have the power to appoint all the standing committees. Everyone who has given the subject any study knows that most of the legislation is at least mapped out by the standing committees of the House. In an organization such as this, it must necessarily be that most of the work will be done in committee. As a matter of practice, I understand the rule to be that the Speaker appoints the members of the standing committees coming from the majority side, and the leader of the minority appoints the members of the standing committees who come from the minority side.

In this way the two men-and I am not criticising or finding fault or complaining of the patriotism, the wisdom, or the ability of the present Speaker or of the present minority leader, nor do I complain of the statesmanship of any of their illustrious predecessors—I am speaking of them not as individuals, and have no complaint to find with them personally as such, but as a part of the system or the scheme that I believe to be wrong. A man on the majority side who desires to get an appointment on a committee seeks the favor of the Speaker to get it. If he be a minority Member, he goes to the minority leader. And in this way a power, second almost to none that has been granted by the Constitution of the United States, has been given by the House rules to one, and in a certain degree to two Members of the House of Representatives.

Every Member of the House of Representatives comes here anxious for a place on some particular standing committee. For reasons best known to himself the coveted position means much to him in his political welfare. Is it any wonder that he is anxious to stand well in the eyes of the man who holds his future destiny in his hand? Is it surprising that he should strive to please the man who has the power to advance or ruin his future political prospects?

The Speaker and the minority leader, by virtue of the rules and practice of this House, hold in their hands, to a great extent, the political welfare of every Member. It is no answer to this argument to say that this power is never used. If the system is wrong in principle, it should be abolished. Neither should the system be retained, even though it be admitted, which it is not, that just as good results would follow from the present method as the one proposed. It is not enough that we do right, but we should do right in the right way. Even if it be admitted that this great power is never intentionally used to influence Members in their official action, it would nevertheless be quite natural that in legislation pending in this House, or in questions of policy before a political caucus, where the wishes or desires of these men were known, that the Members who had been the recipients of political preferment at their hands, unless they were vitally interested to the contrary, should endeavor to pay the political debt they owed. It is no reflection upon the Speaker or the minority leader that the House should desire to take into and retain in its own hands this great and responsible function of legislation that the framers of the Constitution never contemplated should be delegated to any one man, however wise or able.

One of the most serious objections to the rules of the House, and in my opinion it is the most objectionable and vicious of any, is that there is practically no provision within the rules themselves for amendment or a change of the rules except by the consent of the Speaker.

Any resolution to change the rules of the House will be by the rules referred to the Committee on Rules, which we all know means practically to the Speaker himself. Thus when we adopt the present rules at the beginning of a Congress we have tied the hands of the House absolutely as far as any change is concerned in the rules themselves and made it impossible during the entire sessions of that particular Congress to amend them in any way without the consent of the Speaker.

Many propositions have been made that the Committee on Rules ought to be elected by the Members of the House of Representatives themselves. In order that I may explain more fully my views on this subject, I desire to call attention

Mr. EDWARDS of Kentucky. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. NORRIS. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. EDWARDS of Kentucky. Under the rules as now constituted, can not the House elect its committees if it so desires?

Mr. NORRIS. Practically no.

Mr. EDWARDS of Kentucky. I call attention to Rule X, where he will find that it says:

Unless otherwise specially ordered by the House, the Speaker shall

And so forth.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; but it has never been "specially authorized," and I do not suppose it ever will be or could be under the rules. The fact is it can not be unless we change the rule and thus make it "specially authorized." That is just what I propose to do.

Mr. EDWARDS of Kentucky. But it is not necessary to change the rules to give the House that authority?

Mr. NORRIS. I think so. I was going to say, when the gentleman interrupted me, that in order to explain more fully the idea I have in regard to the change, I want to call the Members' attention to House resolution 417 that I introduced in this Congress, having in view an amendment to the present rules. It provides that the Committee on Rules as now existing shall be abolished, and that another Committee on Rules consisting of 15 members shall be elected by the House. The resolution provides that 9 members of this committee shall belong to the majority party, 6 to the minority party, and that they shall be elected as follows:

The States of the Union shall be divided into nine groups, each group containing, as near as may be, an equal number of Members belonging to the majority party, and such Members in each of said groups shall meet and select one of their number as a member of said Committee on Rules. The States of the Union shall likewise be divided into six groups, each group containing, as near as may be, an equal number of Members belonging to the minority party, and such Members in each of said groups shall meet and select one of their number as a member of said Committee on Rules.

Mr. MANN. These divisions are made according to the number of Representatives?

Mr. NORRIS. According to the majority and the number of the minority as near as may be.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NORRIS. Certainly.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Under Rule X the appointment of committees is provided for by the Speaker unless otherwise ordered

Now, what rule stands in the way of the House taking upon itself the responsibility of appointing these committees?

Mr. NORRIS. Oh, probably none; but it would take another rule to "otherwise provide."

The rule of common sense.

Mr. MANN. The rule of common sense.

Mr. NORRIS. There is not any method provided for their appointment, and any method proposed would under the rules be referred to the Committee on Rules, which we all know would mean its death.

Mr. CAMPBELL. It is simply the practice of the House?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. CAMPBELL. ing the committees? That has resulted in the Speaker appoint-

Mr. NORRIS. I do not know as to that, but I think it has

Oh, no; it has not always been done.

Mr. MADDEN. Did the gentleman suggest any number of members of the Committee on Rules?

Mr. NORRIS. I did. The proposed amendment that I have offered provides for 15, and I was just explaining when the gentleman interrupted me.

Mr. OLLIE M. JAMES. How does the gentleman divide the 15 between the majority and the minority?

Mr. NORRIS. I have just explained that nine would come from the majority side and six from the minority side. The resolution provides that no nember of the Committee on Rules shall be a chairman of any of the standing committees. In my judgment that ought to be changed, and it ought to provide that no member of the Committee on Rules should be a member of any other standing committee.

Mr. MADDEN. Wi Mr. NORRIS. Yes. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Would not the gentleman think that a great hardship, to take the brains of the membership of the Rules Committee away from active participation in the affairs of the House and the country?

Mr. NORRIS. Well, if the members of the committee were the only ones that had any brains, that would be true; but I am going on the theory that there will be a whole lot of brains left over, enough to supply all the committees. I would not be surprised if even the gentleman himself would not be on the Rules Committee.

Mr. MADDEN. I assume that in the selection of the fifteen gentlemen under the plan proposed by the distinguished gentleman from Nebraska he would assure the country that none but the best brains of the House would be selected for that committee.

Mr. NORRIS. Well, I suppose that that would be true. It would be the best brains of the House and of the country, and as good as the House afforded; but there would be just as good I assume, and I hardly think that the gentleman's inference could mean, or that it might be construed to mean, that by taking 15 men out of the House we would exhaust the House of all its ability and brains.

Mr. MADDEN. Oh, not at all.

Mr. NORRIS. Neither would I think the gentleman would assume that, even under the present rules, all of the brains, although there may be a great portion of it there, are to be found on the Committee on Rules or any other standing committee of the House.

Mr. MADDEN. The idea I wished to convey was that if men of a very high and superior order of ability were selected as members of the Committee on Rules, the knowledge and intelligence that these men possessed might be well utilized in other places as well as on the Committee on Rules.

Mr. NORRIS. Well, that might be. I recognize the fact that if we were adopting or trying to adopt this resolution it would be subject to amendment, and if the gentleman from Illinois could convince the House that there was not brains enough to go round and that the members of the Committee on Rules had a monopoly of the brains, the House would, no doubt, refuse to put in the amendment I have suggested, and would allow the Committee on Rules to be distributed throughout the other committees

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield to one further question?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.
Mr. MADDEN. In view of the few times during the session of Congress that the Committee on Rules is called upon to act, would the gentleman think it possible to get the men of the widest experience in the legislation of the country to act upon the Committee on Rules if they were to be debarred from the right to act upon other committees?

Mr. NORRIS. That might be, and that would be something to take into consideration, of course, whether we were going to deprive them of it. That is only one of the details upon which men might very honestly disagree, but it is only my individual opinion that a member of the Committee on Rules, as proposed by the resolution, would have enough to do without being put on any other standing committee. If this particular resolution were adopted we would have a Committee on Rules that would be representative of the entire membership of the House, a committee that would be subject at any time to the will of the majority of the Members of the House of Representatives, one that would be absolutely representative of the entire country. I know-or I believe, I will say-that throughout the country generally the idea prevails that the House of Representatives has delegated too much of its power to the Speaker. Right here we often hear gentlemen talking about the degeneracy of the House of Representatives, and that it has lost its prestige that it used to command, and that it ought to have before the country under the Constitution. In my judgment, it is because we have delegated practically all of our powers as Members of the House of Representatives to the presiding officer. The Speaker of the House should be its servant, doing its will, and not its master, controlling its action.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Along that line. The gentleman proposes a Committee on Rules of fifteen, as the gentleman explained, and I see by the gentleman's resolution that it is practically a committee of three.

Mr. NORRIS. Oh, no. Mr. MANN. Well, the gentleman's resolution provides that a committee of fifteen shall have authority to delegate to a subcommittee of its members of not less than three in number the power to report special rules to the House of Representatives for the transaction of business, and within the limitation of the authority granted such subcommittee shall have all the authority of the full committee. That is giving the power to turn over all the power to a committee of three

Mr. NORRIS. In answer to the suggestion or question I will Mr. Chairman, that it often occurs that it is necessary that the Committee on Rules has to take immediate action on something that is up before the House. I have talked with a great many men with regard to this particular subject, and it is generally conceded that there must be, in order to keep the House running properly, a small committee that will have the power if an emergency arises in the consideration of a bill, when they want to report a special rule to report it immediately and not take the necessary time that would be involved to call together a large body of men, and that was my object in putting that in the resolution, and it is safeguarded from the fact that the Committee on Rules delegates whatever power it deems necessary in such a case up to the extent of its own authority.

Now, it often occurs in the consideration, as I have seen it occur since I have been in the House, of an appropriation bill that some point of order has been made against a particular item in the bill and which would be declared out of order, properly, too, on the ground that it is new legislation, but it would be something that everybody probably except one or two men, or the one man who made the point of order, wanted to go in. The Committee on Rules, through this subcommittee, would be able to meet that emergency. This illustration shows the desirability of this provision for a subcommittee.

Mr. MANN. What I want to ask the gentleman is this, If he thinks that the power of the House is absorbed through the rules by the Speaker, as he seems to think, why does he think that granting authority to a subcommittee of three will be used and limited to emergencies? Why does he think the power in one case is less and will not be exercised in the other?

Mr. NORRIS. Because the committee that is provided for in the resolution comes from an entirely different source and derives its power from an entirely different source, as it comes directly from the membership of the House.

Mr. MANN. Then 15 Members of the House would confer authority upon 3 in one case, and the gentleman thinks it is more unlikely for 15 Members to confer authority on 3 than for 391 to confer power on 1. I do not think so.

Mr. NORRIS. I think it is likely that 15 Members, elected by divisions of the country such as I have described, would be more likely to represent the ideas and the purposes of the House than that 3 men appointed by the Speaker, including the Speaker himself, would be likely to represent us. Now, I admit-

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman permit?
Mr. NORRIS. Certainly.
Mr. MADDEN. Would these men be appointed by the House or by the 15?

Mr. NORRIS. These 3 would be a subcommittee of the 15.

Mr. MADDEN. That would be a sort of executive committee.
Mr. NORRIS. It would be a subcommittee. You can call it executive committee" if you want to, but I want to again call attention

Mr. MADDEN. I apprehend the gentleman thinks that the Speaker usurps the power that should be in the rules themselves now.

Mr. NORRIS. Well, I have not said that the Speaker usurps any authority or power, and I do not want to say it.

Mr. MADDEN. Let us admit he does.
Mr. NORRIS. I do not care to go into a discussion of a side issue on this proposition. I have not made that charge and I am not going to be led up to it in this discussion. It may be some time we will get there when we can not help it, but I do not want to cast any reflection on the Speaker or any-one else. I refer to him as part of a system. I am not fighting him personally, but I am opposed to the system that he repre-

Mr. MADDEN. Well, if the individual who happens to be Speaker should by any chance become arbitrary by reason of the power that is vested in him by the House, is it not more than likely that those three members of the executive committee proposed by the gentleman would be still more arbitrary if they were given power?

Mr. NORRIS. No. Mr. MADDEN. And would it not be much more easy to get consent from one arbitrary functionary than from three arbitrary functionaries?

Mr. NORRIS. No; I say not. The resolution provides in the first place that a committee on rules, composed of 15 Members, shall be selected, not even by a caucus of the different parties, but the selection is thrown to the several divisions, where in each division the Members meet together and select one of their own number who shall become a member of the Committee on Rules. He represents that division. He is your member on the Committee on Rules or mine. He is responsive to the men who gave him the position, and he does not depend for his position on the Committee on Rules, upon the Speaker, or any caucus, or upon any particular individual.

The resolution amending the rules which I have proposed also provides that this committee of 15 on rules, in addition to having all the power now exercised by the present Committee on Rules, shall have the power to appoint all the standing committees of the House. This committee would be the most powerful and influential of any committee of the House. It is important, therefore, that its selection be safeguarded by every possible protection. Its selection by geographical groups, as proposed in my resolution, would put it beyond the power of any man or set of men to control its selection or to wrongfully influence its action when selected. It would be unwise, in my judgment, to permit the members of this committee to be elected directly by the House. Such a course would result in their selection by party caucuses. This would mean that they would be selected at a meeting where nearly every man present would be anxious for some particular committee appointment, and the man who had power to make that appointment would thereby have an unequal and unfair advantage in influencing and controlling the action of the caucus. I am neither charging that this has been done in the past nor admitting that it has not. It is sufficient to say that the power exists, and its use should be avoided by some such rule as the one proposed.

It is no wonder that the House has lost its prestige before the country. It has delegated by its rules much of its power to legislate to the Speaker. The lawmaking power of our Government has been by common consent of the country, like Gaul of old, divided into three parts: The Executive, the Senate, and the Speaker. The House will never regain its prestige and perform its proper function in governmental affairs, as well as regain the confidence and respect of the country, until it takes into its own hands the responsibility for legislation and resumes the powers it was intended to have by those who framed the Constitution. To do this, I believe it is necessary that it should adopt some rule or rules containing the principle, if not the form, of the one proposed.

Mr. MADDEN. I would like to ask another question, please.

Mr. NORRIS. All right.

Mr. MADDEN. Then the gentleman is dividing authority and making it sectional instead of making it cover the whole country?

Mr. NORRIS. If the gentleman would do me the honor to read the resolution itself, he would find the entire country is covered.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Nebraska has expired.

Mr. KEHFER. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes more to the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. Chairman, I do not believe I will take up the additional time that has been yielded to me. I want only to say in conclusion that these particular criticisms which are made in reference to particular clauses in the resolution which I have offered may be good or they may not be good. matter of fact, there is not any reason why the scheme should fail or why the plan is bad because some particular part of it is bad. If it is not a good idea to give the Committee on Rules the power to appoint a subcommittee to meet emergencies, then it is not necessary to give them that power. If that is a bad plan, then that part should be excluded, but if we are going at it in good faith, criticism on any proposed change to the rules ought to be made in good faith and not simply for the purpose of finding fault with them. There may be various other ways that this same result could be brought about. In my judgment, this is the best way; but that some such scheme or some such plan should be adopted, or that there should be some governing body of this House similar to the one that I have proposed in this resolution, I believe, is not doubted by a great majority of the membership of this House or by the country generally.

Mr. OLLIE M. JAMES. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. NORRIS. I will yield. Mr. OLLIE M. JAMES. The gentleman referred in his remarks to the minority leader having part in this vicious parliamentary status that is in existence in the House?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.
Mr. OLLIE M. JAMES. Is it not true that the minority leader has fought all the special rules that have been brought in here and against the adoption of the rules which now govern this House?

Mr. NORRIS. I refer to the minority leader having the power to name under the practice the minority members of all the standing committees, and to that I object.

Mr. OLLIE M. JAMES. Is it not further true that in this House, when it has been found necessary to shut off debate or to deny amendment, it has always been necessary to bring in a separate rule, and that that separate rule has been adopted by the votes upon the gentleman's side of the House and over our opposition?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes, sir; as a rule that has been done, and in every instance that I remember, in my judgment, rightly done. I would not adopt or change any rule by which you would take away from the majority the power to rule or the power to close debate at any time they saw fit.

Mr. OLLIE M. JAMES. The gentleman said that it was rightly done always.

Mr. NORRIS. I did not say "always." I said "at times."
Mr. OLLIE M. JAMES. The gentleman remembers when the Esch-Townsend railroad rate bill was brought here, does he not? That was brought here under a rule which absolutely denied the right of amendment.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman is entirely mistaken in his memory

Mr. OLLIE M. JAMES. Not about the Esch-Townsend bill: I am entirely correct.

Mr. NORRIS. I do not care to have in my time a controversy over an unimportant and immaterial proposition.

Mr. OLLIE M. JAMES. I do not think it is immaterial, if the gentleman will pardon me. I said, in my belief, that the bill came in here under a rule—and I think the Record will prove it-and you could not introduce an amendment to the bill. Now, then, would the gentleman say it is proper to deny the House the right to amend legislation? Mr. NORRIS. I would not say that, and yet I realize that there are times when it would be necessary to adopt that kind of a rule. I do not have any definite recollection of the particular instance to which the gentleman refers, but I believe he is absolutely wrong, and in the case to which he refers I am confident that many amendments were offered and considered, and now, since my attention is called to it, I have a distinct recollection in the very case to which the gentleman refers, that in connection with the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Gaines] I prepared an antipass amendment to that bill which was offered on the floor of the House, discussed, and voted on. I do not believe we ought to unreasonably cut off debate on important legislation, but I do believe the majority ought to have the power to limit debate or to absolutely cut it off whenever they see fit. [Applause.]

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. Sterling having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had disagreed to the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 388) to confirm and legalize prior admissions to citizenship of the United States where the judge or clerk of the court administering the oath to the applicant or his winesses has failed to sign or seal the record, oath, or the judgment of admission, and to establish a proper record of such citizenship, had asked a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. HEYBURN, Mr. DILLINGHAM, and Mr. McLaurin as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 4632. An act for the relief of the Davison Chemical Company, of Baltimore, Md.;

S. 8143. An act granting to the Chicago and Northwestern Railway Company a right to change the location of its right of way across the Niobrara Military Reservation;

S. 6136 An act authorizing the Secretary of War to issue patent to certain lands to Boise, Idaho; and

S. 2253. An act for the relief of Theodore F. Northrop.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following resolutions:

Resolved, That it is with deep regret and profound sorrow that the Senate has heard the announcement of the death of Hon, William Pinkney Whyte, late a Senator from the State of Maryland.

Resolved, That as a mark of respect to the memory of the deceased the business of the Senate be now suspended to enable his associates to pay fitting tribute to his high character and distinguished services.

Resolved, That the Secretary transmit to the family of the deceased a copy of these resolutions, with the action of the Senate thereon.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate these resolutions to the House of Representatives.

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect to the memory of the deceased the Senate do now adjourn.

PENSION APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. BOWERS. I yield fifteen minutes to the gentleman from Porto Rico.

Mr. LARRINAGA. Mr. Chairman, I wish to improve the opportunity given to me by the gentleman from Mississippi to thank the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Douglas] for having brought before this House the question of Porto Rico. Every Porto Rican, after reading his speech, will also feel grateful to him, because we really feel that our country is what in your press is called "The Forgotten Island." I do not agree with all the points touched in his speech, much less with section 4 of his bill, for granting American citizenship to the Porto Ricans.

The gentleman from Ohio begins by saying that the discussion of last session in this House about the Porto Rican regiment took a wide range. It did; and I believe, Mr. Chairman, it was a happy occurrence both for the United States and for the people of Porto Rico. I will explain in a few words. The Provisional Regiment of Porto Rico was to be made a permanent one. There were, in my understanding, some objectionable features in the bill, but they were removed by Congress. The bill passed, making the Porto Rican Provisional Regiment permanent, and putting American and Porto Rican officers on the same footing; and the effect of that fair dealing with our people made the best impression throughout the island.

Next, the gentleman from Ohio expressed the idea that the Island of Porto Rico, for the last ten years, under American rule had progressed politically, socially, and in every way. This is a very wide proposition for me to discuss in the time conceded to me, Mr. Chairman, but I will say that I differ with the gentleman from Ohio in what he says with reference to our political progress. I can not agree with the gentleman from Ohio on the first part of this proposition. How can he explain to me or to anybody else that we have progressed politically? On the 12th of April, 1900, we were given the organic act, commonly called the "Foraker Act." Under that act, which we think was not what we Porto Ricans deserved, it is stated that the upper house will be formed of 11 members appointed by the Executive. The majority of its members (6 of them) are to be Americans. Of the remaining, 5 at least were to be natives of Porto Rico. There was an injustice in

Since the 12th day of April, 1900, Mr. Chairman, more than 25 appointments have been made, and we never have been able to have that minimum increased by one single man up to this day. Every time that we went before the Executive, when a vacancy occurred, we failed to have that minimum of 5 increased to 6, in spite of the provisions and of the spirit and meaning of that act; and that minimum of 5 remains to this very day. How can the gentleman say that we have progressed politically? Has the executive been separated from this very day. the legislative? No, sir; it has not. Has the membership of that upper body been increased at least with one more from the native population of the island, as allowed by the act? It has

Mr. Chairman, as I have said before, I have no time to go fully into the matter, because I propose to touch all the different points treated by the gentleman from Ohio.

The gentleman from Ohio has undertaken to compare the political system that we had under Spain with that which was given to us under American rule. The gentleman, I believe, is not very well informed about it. He says that it will be something of a surprise to many Americans to learn that but an appearance of autonomy had been granted by Spain to Porto Rico the year before American occupation. Yes, Mr. Chairman, it was a year before American occupation; but for forty years we had been struggling with the Spanish Government to obtain our rights, and they were conceded to us little by little.

First, we were given limited representation; then we were given the Spanish constitution and made Spanish citizens; then free trade was given us in ten years by deducting one-tenth of the duties every year, and a year before American occupation we were given home government. Mr. Chairman, in order that every Member of the House may compare that charter with the present organic act, I am going to have that charter translated into English and a copy furnished to every That act provided that the majority Member of this Congress. of the upper house should be elected by the people, and now not a single man of that body is at present elected by the people. It provided that these men were to hold some property or have other social qualifications independent of money. I do not think, Mr. Chairman, that that was a very unwise provision at the beginning.

Now the law is more liberal. The 11 members appointed by the President may not even be taxpayers nor residents of the island. But I leave it to the opinion of every Member of the House as to whether those were not more safe qualifications.

Mr. GOULDEN. Will the gentleman pardon an interruption? Mr. LARRINAGA. Certainly. Mr. GOULDEN. Have these 11 members always been appointed by the Executive?

Mr. LARRINAGA. They have always been appointed by the Executive.

Mr. GOULDEN. And were they always good men?
Mr. LARRINAGA. In the majority of cases, with only a few exceptions, as could be expected in the selection of any body of men.

Mr. Chairman, I affirm that in the Spanish act the Executive had no more power than the governor of Porto Rico has to-day. I propose to prove it further on.

In our autonomic charter the people of Porto Rico had some participation in the treaty-making power, for we had the right to appoint special delegates to look after the interests of the island whenever a commercial treaty with any other nation was to be adjusted.

Mr. GOULDEN. But your contention is that at least a part of those men, if not all, should be elected.

Mr. LARRINAGA. The majority of them, at least, yes; and also that the executive be separated from the legislative. The gentleman brings me to a point that I was going to touch upon later, namely, the proposition of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Douglas] that the time has come when this Congress should give a better government to Porto Rico, or, to quote his own

I sincerely believe that the Porto Rican people are capable of a much greater measure of self-government than is conferred upon them by the present organic law governing that island.

God bless him for those words. Mr. Chairman, this will be word of encouragement that will reach the island, and I feel deeply grateful to the gentleman from Ohio, although I can not agree with him in some of the points that he took up on Saturday on the floor of this House. [Applause.] The gentleman

Their present parliament consists of two houses—an executive council and a house of delegates. The executive council consists of 11 members, all appointed by the President, 6 of whom, citizens of the United States, are all heads of departments, and the other 5 are citizens of Porto Rico, without portfolios.

Now, gentlemen, I want to appeal to the American sentiment of every Member of this House in support of my contention—one that every good American will favor—that no such a mixture of the executive with the legislative should exist in any civilized country. [Applause.] I know very well, and every Porto Rican knows, that this organic act was only intended to be temporary. Congress had on its hands Cuba, Porto Rico, and the Philippine Islands. Your greatest statesmen here did not know much, I believe, about what they were going to do with them. Porto Rico was put in a sort of limbo, to wait there for the resurrection. [Laughter.] But we believe, Mr. Chairman, that the time has come when we should be given a government more in accordance with the principles of the American democracy, with the principles of this Nation, the greatest champion of human rights and liberty on the face of this earth. [Applause.]

I am certain, Mr. Chairman, that within my time I can not take up in detail all the points of interest in the speech of the gentleman from Ohio; neither could I, at this moment, take up the task of comparing in detail the government we had before with that under the present Foraker Act.

But even admitting, for the sake of argument, that the political organization that we had under Spain was less liberal than the Foraker Act, does that prove that the latter instrument is what the people of Porto Rico deserve? Does that make this charter worthy of the American Nation? Has not the gentleman from Ohio himself nobly declared that the people of Porto Rico are capable of a larger measure of self-government than is conferred upon them by the present organic law governing the island? What is it then, Mr. Chairman, that stands between this body of just men and justice? How long is this eternally temporary act to stand? The gentleman from Ohio dwells upon our present prosperity. It is true, Mr. Chairman, that half of the island is prosperous. Our sugar and tobacco indus-tries have prospered and are swelling the figures of our exports, but these industries are the industries of the wealthy men only, of the combines of the rich capitalist; but what of the poor man's industry, what of our coffee industry, that at all times has been the sinews of our wealth? Why are we to-day begging Congress to help us to rebuild our main industry? Because the executive council, our upper house, during three consecutive sessions rejected the legislation passed by the lower house elected by the people.

Three times, and by both political parties, an agriculture loan was vetoed to help the poor coffee planters whose farms had been damaged by the cyclone. What were those $5,000,000 that would have saved our main industry compared with the importance of a staple that has in one single crop reached the figure of $16,000,000.

Why have most of the small coffee farms been allowed to pass into the hands of the rich? Because our executive council, our upper house, rejected a bill passed by the lower house to cancel the taxes due by the small planters, and the poor men saw their little farms sold at auction by the hundreds to pay $4 and $5 and $10 taxes.

Amongst the improvements mentioned by the gentleman from Ohio, there is in truth a very important one which is being carried out with the federal money—the improvement of the harbor of San Juan.

Why have we not to-day our harbors improved and the pestilential swamps around our cities converted into firm, sanitary land, yielding large profits to the Public Treasury, saving all that money to the Federal Treasury? Because nine years ago our executive council killed our autonomic board of harbor works, which worked successfully and independently of the central government with their own funds.

Mr. Chairman, it would be an endless task to enumerate all the oppressions, all the hardships imposed on the people of Porto Rico by that executive council as constituted by our present organic act.

Let my distinguished friend from Ohio frame a bill on the lines that he has sketched in his speech, and if he succeeds in bringing it to the consideration of this House, I am sure, Mr. Chairman, that this body of fair-minded Americans will vote for it to a man, and he and this Congress will carry with them the blessings of a million people.

Mr. BOWERS. Mr. Chairman, I desire to address the committee very briefly with reference to some of the provisions of the bill under consideration. In the outset let me say that, as presented by the Committee on Appropriations, this bill is practically the same measure presented to the House one year ago, the only difference being in the amount appropriated for the various purposes covered by it. The general pension appropriation bill of one year ago carried about one hundred and sixty-three million and a few thousand dollars. This bill carries $160,869,000, or $2,184,000 less than the bill passed by the Congress one year ago.

The provisions of this measure as to the administration of the fund, the payment of the money, the medical examinations, and the pension agencies are identical with the measure reported and passed by the House one year ago.

I take it that no discussion whatever will ensue on the measure, except, perhaps, on so much of it as appropriates for 1 pension agency instead of 18 pension agencies, as in the past. In view of the fact that the House sitting to-day is the same body which sat a year ago, and of the fact that the membership of the House, with a very few changes, is identical with the membership at that time, I take it that no full or extended discussion of this particular proposition is necessary.

The question of economy of administration, of the sufficiency and efficiency of administration under the proposed plan of reduction, was thoroughly gone into and thrashed out at the time. It may not, however, be amiss to remind the House that prior to that time the matter had been referred, by the joint action of the House and Senate, to the Secretary of the Interior, seeking from him some expression as to the conditions of the Pension

Bureau in this respect, and recommendations as to what could or should be done, not only to secure economy of administration, but also an improvement of the service. The reply to that inquiry, the reply of the Secretary, came to the former session of the Sixtieth Congress in the shape of a letter, which I hold in my hand and which I ask leave to incorporate at the conclusion of my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, this order will be made.

There was no objection.

Mr. BOWERS. Mr. Chairman, I do not care, in view of the fact that I shall incorporate the letter in my remarks, to quote from it or allude to it to any great length. But I do want to call the attention of the committee to the fact that the Secretary was unequivocal, and is still, on the proposition that not only a vast saving in the matter of expenditure, wholly needless, wholly unnecessary expenditure, will be accomplished, but that in addition the administration of the Pension Bureau, instead of being in any way impaired or injured, would be absolutely and materially bettered.

During the hearings which were had at the last session of Congress on this point the very able Commissioner of Pensions, a gentleman well known to this body for his long years of efficient and faithful service here, was, if possible, more emphatic in his commendation of these proposed changes, and in his advocacy of what might be termed the "new system," than the Secretary. I recall that among other expressions used by him on that occasion he declared that if this was a matter of the administration of any private business no gentleman who had examined into it would hesitate for a moment on the proposition of making the change and working out the reform.

Speaking very briefly in the hearings had a short while ago at this session of Congress, and speaking briefly, because of the fact that no extended remarks were necessary in view of the thorough way in which the matter was thrashed out a year ago, he said, of the proposed reduction in the number of agencies:

You would do it in a moment if it were your own business. You take New Hampshire, Maine, and Massachusetts, three little agencies, and they would not make a vest pocketful.

Mr. TIRRELL. Can the gentleman inform us how many employees there are in the Boston office?

Mr. BOWERS. I have not the figures before me. I was reading, and had to read literally what the Commissioner of Pensions said on that subject. I do not know what the situation of the Boston office is. I do not care to and, in the discussion of this matter, have not taken up any particular agency for the purpose of demonstrating these propositions. It does not seem to me to be the proper way to proceed about it. The inquiry which should address itself to this committee, in my judgment, is whether a general consolidation can be profitably effected of all or of the greater number of these agencies; whether there are some that could be dispensed with, whether the whole number could be lessened with profit to the Treasury in the shape of decrease of expenditure and decrease of outlay, and with profit to the administration by way of betterment of the service, or the unification of the service and unifying methods throughout the whole department.

As I said a year ago, the sums appropriated for the payment of pensions, medical examiners, stationery, and so forth, are matters which are arrived at by mathematical calculation.

The high-water mark was reached in the last bill, reached because of the passage of what was known as the "McCumber bill," the old-age pension bill, and of the increase in the amount of widows' pensions, and the removal of the provision, that theretofore existed, that required widows to be dependent and in the attitude of not possessing more than a given amount of property. The larger amount of the last bill was due to the increase of the number of pensioners flowing from the passage of those two acts.

From that time—that is, from the time when the movement following the enactment of these bills reached its flood—it has diminished, and will, so the authorities of the bureau believe and the committee believes, continue to diminish in the future.

Mr. TIRRELL. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman another question, and that is, whether under the present administration of the business of the Pension Department the pensioners appear personally at these pension agencies scattered throughout the country to obtain their pension money or whether it is paid to them by sending in a duly signed and sworn affidavit—it is not necessary for them to appear personally.

Mr. BOWERS. Why, the fact is, the majority of them, of course, send in their affidavits and receive their money in that way. There are a few agencies at which some considerable number of people, I believe, do come and get their pensions; but when the gentleman remembers that the same agency pays in many instances a number of States, he will see how utterly impossible and impracticable it is for the vast number of them to come in person and get their money.

Mr. TIRRELL. I know the custom formerly was for the pensioner to personally appear, and I have seen the department so overrun with people in Boston that they would wait hours before they could get to the desk. I wish to ascertain whether that custom has been changed.

Mr. BOWERS. Oh, they still come to some agencies in considerable numbers, but the majority of the pensions must be paid, of course, by correspondence.

Mr. TIRRELL. I will ask the gentleman why they should appear personally.

I do not see any reason at all. I think they Mr. BOWERS. would be much better paid by correspondence.

The following is the letter from the Secretary of the Interior referred to above:

Secretary's Office,
Department of the Interior,
Washington, D. C., December 13, 1907.

Washington, D. C., December 13, 1907.

Sir: The "act making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1908, and for other purposes," approved March 4, 1907, contained the following provise:

"Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior shall make inquiry and report to Congress, at the beginning of its next regular session, the effect of a reduction of the present pension agencies to one such agency upon the economic execution of the pension laws, the prompt and efficient payment of pensioners, and the inconvenience to pensioners, if any, which would result from such reduction. This provision shall not be construed as interfering with or limiting the right or power of the President under existing law in respect to reduction or consolidation of existing pension agencies."

In compliance with said provision I submit herewith the following report:

President under existing law in respect to reduction or consolidation of existing pension agencies."

In compilance with said provision I submit herewith the following report:

"1. Economic execution of pension laws.—The annual expenditure on account of the payment of pensions, including the salaries of pension agents, clerk hire, contingent expenses, and the printing of vouchers and checks, is approximately $550,000, an average cost per pensioner of 55 cents per annum. It is estimated that after a consolidation has been completed and in perfect working order all pensioners could be paid by the Commissioner of Pensions, or one disbursing officer, located in the city of Washington, with an annual expenditure of, at most, $350,000, a saving of 20 cents per annum per pensioner, or $200,000. After the first year of the consolidation, I am of the opinion that the appropriation for the expense of paying pensions could be safely reduced at least $25,000 more.

"2. The prompt and efficient payment of pensioners.—If all pensioners are paid by the Commissioner of Pensions, or one disbursing officer, provision should be made for a division of the pensioners into three groups, one group to be pald each month, as at present, and all pensioners could be pald as promptly by the Commissioner of Pensions, or one disbursing officer, as by 18 agents.

"3. Inconvenience to pensioners.—As all pensioners could be paid as promptly by the Commissioner of Pensions, or one disbursing officer, as by 18 agents, there would be no inconvenience to pensioners except the slight delay which would be caused in the case of pensioners living remote from Washington through the mails and for the check to be returned. The checks would, however, be issued quarterly, as now, and the pensioner receive his payment. Many of the pensioners now paid by the San Francisco agency, would experience but a slight days have expired from the date of mailing of vouchers. Pensioners now paid by the San Francisco agency, would experience but a slight delay in receivi located in distant cities.

All vouchers now required by pensioners are printed by the Government Printing Office, in this city, and forwarded to the different pension agents, there to be prepared and mailed to the pensioner with checks for the preceding quarter. All checks now used by the pension agents are likewise printed in this city. A considerable saving would result in the cost of printing vouchers and also in the cost of printing checks if such vouchers and checks were prepared for one agency rather than for eighteen.

All paid vouchers must be forwarded by the pension agents to the Auditor for the Interior Department in this city. There is always danger of the loss of such vouchers in the malls. Many vouchers of widow pensioners under the general law and under the act of June 27, 1890, were recently lost in transit from one of the pension agencies to the auditor in this city. No trace of the missing vouchers has as yet been discovered. The pension agent has since died, and his accounts can not be settled for many months on account of the lost vouchers.

It is further suggested that if it be decided to consolidate the eighteen agencies into one agency, the entire eighteen agencies be abolished and provision be made that the payments be made by the Commissioner of Pensions or one disbursing officer, to be appointed by the Secretary of the Interior.

The statute now provides (26 Stat. L., 138) that the pension agent, with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, may designate and authorize a clerk to sign the name of the pension agent to official checks. There are 18 such designated clerks now employed, 1 at each agency. The name of the pension agent is printed on all checks used, but before the check is issued it must be countersigned by the designated clerk. Only I clerk may be thus authorized to sign such checks for any one pension agent under the law as it now stands. If all pensioners were paid by the Commissioner of Pensions or by I disbursing officer the services of 6 or 8 clerks would be required to sign such checks, and if the 18 agencies be abolished and all payments made by the Commissioner of Pensions or I disbursing officer, provision should be made authorizing the Commissioner of Pensions or the disbursing officer, with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, to designate the necessary number of clerks to sign the name of the Commissioner of Pensions or disbursing officer to such official clerks.

Ample accommodation for the consolidated agency could be furnished in the Pension building.

Under the practice now in vogue there is a duplication of records. Each of the 18 agents receives from here the certificates of pensions for the pensioners residing in his district. A record is made here and also by the agent at the agency, who then forwards the certificate with the voucher to the pensioner. A consolidation of the agencies would require but one record of the certificate, etc., which would be kept in the office here in Washington, and the certificate and voucher would be mailed direct to the pensioner from here. This would do away with having the certificate mailed to the agent, the making of a record by the agent, and the mailing by him of the certificate and voucher to the pensioner.

It would seem that the law should leave to the discretion of the Commissioner and the Secretary as to when the transfers from the different agencies should be made. To require all of such transfers to be made on one date would entail unnecessary work, and might result in delay and complications in making payments.

If the 18 agencies are abolished, and provision made for the payment of all pensions from the city of W

JAMES RUDOLPH GARFIELD, Secretary.

The SPEAKER OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Chairman, I hope to confine myself to a discussion of the pension appropriation bill. I wish, however, to say that after a few moments' discussion of the bill I expect general debate to end, and that we shall take the bill up under the five-minute rule, with the hope that it may be passed to-day.

Mr. Chairman, this bill, if enacted into law, will appropriate $160,000,000 for paying, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1910, army and navy pensioners of all classes now borne on the pension rolls, or who may hereafter be placed thereon under the provisions of any and all acts of Congress, with a proviso that navy pensions shall be paid from the income of the navy pension fund as far as it is sufficient for the purpose. The interest on the navy pension fund for the fiscal year 1908 was $360,-409.92, while the amount expended for naval pensions in that year was $4,934,350.50. The navy pension fund at present amounts to $14,000,000.

The bill reported to this House for the same purpose for this fiscal year called for an appropriation of $150,000,000, but before it became a law it was amended in consequence of the passage of the widows' pension act of April 19, 1908, to $162,000,000 for the payment of pensioners. It will be seen that the appropriation for the next fiscal year for the same purpose is $2,000,000

This bill carries an appropriation of $869,000 for the expense of paying pensions for the next fiscal year. On account of information received since it was agreed upon in the Committee on Appropriations, I will ask that the appropriation for the payment of fees of examining surgeons be reduced from $500,000 to $400,000, which will reduce the total appropriation for the cost of paying pensioners for the next fiscal year to $769,000. The appropriation for the present fiscal year, for the same purpose, was $1,053,000.

The bill provides for the payment of a salary to only one pension agent—$68,000 less than was appropriated for pension agents for this and each of many preceding years. It carries an appropriation of $335,000 for clerk hire at agencies, $75,000 less than was appropriated for that purpose for this fiscal year, and it includes nothing for rent or for inspection of agencies.

The disbursements on account of pensions for the fiscal year 1907 were $138,155,412.46, and for the fiscal year 1908 were $153,093,086.27. Those for this fiscal year, 1909, can not be exactly ascertained until the year ends.

Unless there should be new general pension legislation it is believed there will be a rapid reduction of the annual value of the pension roll. Notwithstanding the large additions to the pension roll under the McCumber Act of February 6, 1907, and the widow's pension act of April 19, 1908, there has been a steady decrease in the number of pensioners for the two preceding years, as well as since the year 1905, when the number reached 998,441, the maximum of all the years and a number never again likely to be reached. The total number of pensioners on the rolls for the fiscal year 1906 was 985,971, for the fiscal year 1907 was 967,371, and for the fiscal year 1908 was 951,687.

The average annual value of each pension has steadily increased through the same years. In 1905 it was $136.96, in 1906 it was $138.18, in 1907 it was $145.60, and in 1908 it was $167.50.

The total decrease in the aggregate number on the pension roll during the last fiscal year was 15,684, notwithstanding the large addition of new pensioners. The reduction by death alone was 50.676.

The following table shows the decrease in the pension roll from all causes:

Decrease in pension roll during fiscal year ended June 30, 21 By death By remarriage By minors arriving at the age of 16 years By failure to claim for more than three years For other causes
For other causes	1,010
Total	54, 366

The number of survivors of the civil war on the pension roll June 30, 1907, was 644,338, and on June 30, 1908, the number was 620,985, a decrease of 23,353 during the year, and the number of civil-war pensioners dropped on account of death during the fiscal year 1908 was 34,333, and for other causes 864. The number of civil-war veterans added to the pension roll in that year was 10,935. The number of civil-war pensioners dropped on account of death was 3,132 greater in the fiscal year 1908 than in the previous fiscal year, and it was in excess of 5 per cent of those on the roll. They will naturally, on account of the infirmities of age, decrease in a greater per cent in this and in future years.

There were 328,676 pension certificates issued in the year ended June 30, 1908, though only 37,691 were original certificates, the others being for increases, reissues and so forth. Prior to June 30, 1908, there were filed in the Pension Bureau 431,113 claims under the act of February 6, 1907, only 16,926 of which were undisposed of June 30, 1908. The total number of applicants for pensions at the end of the fiscal year 1908 was 123,483, as against 356,181 at the beginning of that year, a comparatively few of which were for original pensions.

The amount of pensions paid to soldiers, sailors, and marines, their widows, minor children, and dependent relatives, on account of military and naval service since the foundation of the Government is shown by a table taken from the report of the Commissioner of Pensions, which follows:

Total paid for pensions since the foundation of th	he Government.
War of the Revolution (estimate) ————————————————————————————————————	45, 694, 665, 24 9, 355, 711, 03
War with Mexico (service pension) Civil war War with Spain and insurrection in the Philippine	3, 533, 593, 025. 95
Islands Regular Establishment Unclassified	22, 563, 635, 41 12, 630, 947, 88 16, 393, 945, 35

There were 5,047 pensioners on the pension rolls residing in 63 foreign countries who were paid in the fiscal year ended June 30, 1908, an aggregate of $811,473.31. There was paid $21,420.53 to pensioners residing in our insular possessions.

There are 18 pension agencies, from which all pensioners are now paid. They are located at the places and each agency paid the number of pensioners and the amounts for the fiscal year 1908 stated in the table following:

Agency.	Pensioners June 30, 1908.	Money dis- bursed in 1908.
Augusta	16,718	$2,945,856.05
Boston	58,499	9,046,412,21

This bill provides for but one agency.

The number of pensioners paid from the several agencies varies, as shown by the table, from 15,633 at Concord, to 109,579 at Topeka; and the disbursements at the former for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1908, were $2,748,387.69, and at the latter $17,621,652.81. There are wide differences as to the number of pensioners paid and the disbursements made between other agencies.

The cost per capita of all kinds, including salary, clerk hire, and contingent expenses, at each of the following pension agencies in the fiscal year 1907 was: At Augusta, 76 cents; Concord, 77½ cents; Detroit, 58 cents; Columbus, 45½ cents; Topeka, 42½ cents; Philadelphia, 53 cents; Pittsburg, 56½ cents; Chicago, 51½ cents; Knoxville, 51 cents; New York, 65 cents. It will be noted that generally the larger the agency the less it costs to maintain it.

The cost at the Washington agency in paying a pensioner,

The cost at the Washington agency in paying a pensioner, treating the examining surgeons (4,662) as though pensioners, in the fiscal year 1907 was 51 cents. In Washington there is much extra labor and loss of time in paying pensioners residing in foreign countries and those residing in our insular possessions. Notwithstanding this extra labor, the cost of paying a pensioner at the Philadelphia agency is greater than at the Washington agency.

Washington agency.

The cost for clerk hire alone in the fiscal year 1907 in paying a pensioner at the Augusta agency was 53 cents, at Concord 52 cents, and at Detroit 47 cents, while at the Columbus agency it was 40 cents, and at the Topeka agency it was 39 cents, and at the Philadelphia agency 45½ cents, and at the Pittsburg agency 46¼ cents, and at the Chicago agency 42½ cents, at the Knoxville agency 44½ cents, and at the Washington agency 47 cents.

There was paid at the Topeka agency that fiscal year 109,579

There was paid at the Topeka agency that fiscal year 109,579 pensioners, which was in excess of those paid in the four agencies of Augusta, Concord, Detroit, and Louisville by 11,121. The number of pensioners (93,969) paid at the Columbus agency exceeds those paid at the Augusta (16,718), Concord (15,633), and the Louisville (26,142) agencies by 25,475.

and the Louisville (26,143) agencies by 35,475.

The cost of salaries ($12,000) and clerk hire ($36,821.63) at these three agencies in the fiscal year 1907 was $48,821.63, while at the Columbus agency the cost for salaries and clerk hire was $43,102.39, less than at the three named by $5,719.24, though it paid 34,449 more pensioners than were paid at the three agencies named.

The payments for the fiscal year 1908 at the Columbus agency to pensioners amounted to $15,940,259.79, and the aggregate payments at the Augusta, Concord, and Detroit agencies only amounted to $12,611,672.53. These and other facts conclusively show that great economy must result from a consolidation.

It is not now deemed necessary to again go over and repeat all the arguments and reasons hitherto made here for a reduction of the number of pension agencies. The reduction should be made on the ground of economy, especially as the interests and convenience of the pensioners are maintained. There are 15 of the 46 States of the Union in which agencies are located and there is 1 in the District of Columbia. The States of and there is 1 in the District of Columbia. The States of Maine, New Hampshire, Massachusetts, Illinois, Ohio, Iowa, Indiana, Michigar, Wisconsin, Kentucky, Tennessee, California, and Kansas have each 1 agency, and the States of New York and Pennsylvania have each 2 agencies, as the above table shows, and there is no agency in either of the other 31 States or in any of the Territories. The agencies are not located geographically in reference to the convenience of the pensioners, nor centrally with reference to the number of rensioners to be nor centrally with reference to the number of pensioners to be paid at each agency. No regard is had to the number of pensioners to be paid or the aggregate amount to be paid at each agency. If there is any good reason for maintaining small pension agencies in the interest or for the convenience of the pensioners, then we would proceed to establish at least enough more (42) agencies to bring the number to 50, each of which would pay more than is now paid at each of several of the agencies. This would give about 5 more agencies to Ohio. Remoteness of the residence of the pensioners from the agency is not now regarded.

The Knoxville agency pays pensioners residing in 10 States—the Carolinas to and including Texas, and the intervening Gulf and other States—and all the navy pensioners residing within that agency are now paid from Washington. Topeka pays the States of Kansas, Colorado, and Missouri, the Territories of New Mexico and Indian Territory, and the State of Oklahoma. San Francisco pays the States of California, Idaho, Montana, Nevada, Oregon, Utah, Washington, and Wyoming; the Territories of Alaska, Arizona, and Hawaii; the Philippines, Guam, and the Samoan Islands belonging to the United States, including all navy pensioners residing in these States and Territories.

Here are magnificent distances, and yet we have no cry of Twelve of the 18 agencies do not pay the navy neglect or delay.

The difference in the time of a pensioner residing in Philadelphia receiving his payment under the proposed plan and under the old would not be noticeable, and the delay or difference in payments to pensioners in Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, and the New England States would rarely be over twenty-four hours. And, as has been explained, there would be no difference at all, after the first payment, under the proposed plan; under the new plan the pensioner would still receive his pension every three months precisely the same as now, the date of receiving the payment in each paying month only being changed.

The claim is made that the payment of pensions in Washington (where there was paid last fiscal year 53,197 pensioners) is greater per capita than at some other agencies. This is only seemingly true as to the two large agencies at Topeka and Columbus. I have already shown that in the payment of 4,662 examining surgeons and in the payment of the 5,047 pensioners who reside in foreign countries from the Washington agency there is a large extra expense and much increase in labor and considerable loss of time due to several causes best stated by the commissioner in a letter to me of February 5, 1908. The postage required to be paid in paying foreign pensioners largely augments the expense at the Washington

The admitted saving the first year of $225,000 would be sufficient to pay 1,600 widows, or other pensioners, $12 per month. The much larger saving each year in the future would proportionately enable the Government, if it desired, to increase the pension roll.

All months will have, under the proposed plan, pension payments on the 4th of the month.

At each agency now there are eight months in the year when no payments are made. Payments are now made on January 4, April 4, July 4, and October 4 at the following pension agencies: Buffalo, Chicago, Concord, Des Moines, Milwaukee, Pittsburg-six.

On February 4, May 4, August 4, and November 4 at Indianapolis, Knoxville, Louisville, New York City, Philadelphia, Topeka-six.

On March 4, June 4, September 4, December 4 at Boston, Augusta, Columbus, Detroit, Washington City, San Francisco-six.

Under the plan to pay all pensioners from Washington onetwelfth of the pensioners would be paid monthly. present plan no payments are made in the months of February, March, May, June, August, September, November, and December, eight months in the year, from the agencies at Buffalo, Chicago, Concord, Des Moines, Milwaukee, and Pittsburg. And no payments are made in the months of March and April, June and July, September and October, December and January, eight months in the year, from the agencies of Indianapolis, Knox-ville, Louisville, New York City, Philadelphia, and Topeka. And no payments are made in the months of April and May, July and August, October and November, and January and February, eight months in the year, from the agencies at Boston, Augusta, Columbus, Detroit, Washington City, and San Francisco. If all pensioners are paid from one place, the same clerks can work on each month's payments.

The Commissioner of Pensions gives it as his opinion that the pensioners could be paid with at least 125 less clerks than are now found necessary. The number of clerks employed and required to transact the pension-agency business is about 430, as the Commissioner of Pensions advises me, and he gives it as his opinion that all the pensioners can be paid from the Pension Bureau with at least 125 less clerks, or by the employment of about 300 clerks only. There are now 18 chief clerks, while under the new plan but would be required. And now 18 machines and outfits for addressing envelopes, and so forth, will be required, while if the agencies are consolidated only 1 such machine will be required. One clerk with an addressing machine can address as many envelopes as 12 clerks by the ordinary method.

A somewhat similar condition exists in regard to adding ma-They have been found almost indispensable in the conduct of the agency business. If the agencies are consolidated, not one-fourth as many adding machines will be required as are now necessary. There will be much saving in clerical work, delays avoided, and time saved in the payment of original Pension certificates, when issued here, are recorded in the bureau here—a record made of them. The certificates are then sent to the different agencies in the jurisdiction of which the pensioners live. They are again recorded there-a duplication of the work-and then, after being recorded, they are mailed with the vouchers for the first payment to the pensioners. On account of the enormous amount of work made by the recent pension acts, the pension agencies (except the one in Washington) have been, on an average, thirty days behind in forwarding the certificates and vouchers to pensioners. This, as most, if not all, Members of this House know, has led to much complaint and even dissatisfaction and to much unnecessary correspondence, because the pensioner receives his voucher from the agency long after he receives notice of the allowance of his claim from the Pension Bureau.

If there was but one agency, by a consolidation here in Washington, and the certificates and vouchers were issued from the bureau they would go promptly to the pensioners instead of being delayed in the agencies. This would also save the expense and delay of double recording, and at the same time the pensioners would get their first payment sooner than they do

The death rate of pensioners is now above 4,000 per month. In substantially all these cases there is an accrued pension to be adjusted through the Pension Bureau, and then the result, where widows and minor children are involved, has to be sent to the agencies for payment, and this now produces delay, confusion, double work, and much correspondence, which would be saved, mainly, if all payments were made from the Pension Bureau as proposed.

The Secretary of the Interior, Mr. Garfield, and the Commissioner of Pensions, Mr. Warner, have each expressed the belief that there would be a large saving in the cost of paying pensions; that they could all be paid from the Pension building; that in many instances the payment of pensioners would be materially facilitated; that there would be no necessity of a duplication of the records, as is now required, and that there would be a great saving in the matter of making settlements with the several agencies.

Originally under an act of Congress (August 4, 1790) invalid pensioners were paid by the Commissioners of Loans. Some other pensioners were paid direct by the Treasury Department, and still others by the Paymaster-General of the United States Army, without any separate establishment being maintained to pay pensions. Later pension agencies were provided for. Formerly there was no system of paying, as now, by checks, for want of banks to cash them. The law (R. S. U. S., sec. 4780) passed February 5, 1867, and still in force, authorized the President to establish agencies for the payment of pensions whenever in his judgment the public interests and the convenience of the pensioners required.

If we appropriate for but one pension agent, the President will have to disestablish all the present agencies save one. The commissioner, in the hearings (p. 8) submitted a plan for the consolidation of the agencies into one agency, a portion of which I quote:

which I quote:

The Commissioner of Pensions is hereby authorized and directed, with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, to arrange the pensioners, for the payment of pensions, in three groups, as he may think proper; and may from time to time change any pensioner from one group to another as he may deem convenient for the transaction of the public business. The pensioners in the first group shall be paid their quarterly pensions on January 4, April 4, July 4, and October 4 of each year; the pensioners in the second group shall be paid their quarterly pensions on February 4, May 4, August 4, and November 4 of each year; and the pensioners in the third group shall be paid their quarterly pensions on March 4, June 4, September 4, and December 4 of each year. The Commissioner of Pensions is hereby fully authorized, with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, to cause payments of pensions to be made for the fractional parts of quarters created by such change so as to properly adjust all payments as herein provided.

By this plan it will be seen that about one-twelfth of the pen-

By this plan it will be seen that about one-twelfth of the pensioners would be paid each month, while now each agency pays a different number, and at each agency there are eight months in the year when no payments are required to be made at all, and at most the clerks are engaged only in preparatory work two of each of the three months constituting a quarterly payment period. The plan is to have one set of clerks, with one addressing machine and one or more adding machines, do the work of each monthly payment, and thus comprise within each year the payment of all pensioners. It is believed, however, this method alone would not only result in largely reducing the clerks required and the consequent expense of maintaining them, but that it will promote their efficiency and secure regularity and promptness in paying pensioners.

Pensioners now receive their checks on an average of not less than ten days after pension day, however prompt the pensioners may be in forwarding their vouchers. It is the opinion of the Commissioner of Pensions that if the pensioners were all paid from here, with a largely reduced number of clerks, from 50,-000 to 60,000 of them could be sent their checks in one day after their vouchers are received; and as only 317,229 pensioners would be paid here each month, less than six days would be required to make each monthly payment. In this way the payment of pensions would be facilitated rather than retarded. The difference in the time required for the vouchers and checks to pass by mail would, in the first payment, measure the delay. In many cases that difference would be small, and after the first payment from here would be at least as regular every three months as now. Pensioners are now paid in alphabetical order from each agency, and hence those far down the alphabet are not paid as promptly as others, yet no wrong arises from this.

The expedition in the payment of pensioners is not the only consideration. Large expense and some delay in making payments result from agencies being away from the seat of Government. I quote on this point from a letter of the Commissioner of Pensions:

sioner of Pensions:

All pension checks must now be printed in this city and forwarded through the mails to the various pension agencies throughout the country. All vouchers to be executed by the pensioners are printed here in this city by the Government Printing Office and are forwarded through the mails to the various pension agencies, to be prepared and forwarded to the pensioners. More than 100 different forms of vouchers are now required for the eighteen pension agencies. As an illustration: Fifty-four different forms of vouchers are now required for pensioners under the act of February 6, 1907, three forms for each different agent, one at the $12 rate, one at the $15 rate, and one at the $20 rate. If all pensioners were paid by one disbursing officer, only three forms of vouchers would be required under this act instead of fifty-four. All certificates issued by the bureau must first be forwarded to the pension agency, there to be reentered upon a different set of books and mailed to the pensioner from the agency. If all pensioners were paid from this city, the certificates would be issued by the bureau and mailed to the pensioners upon the same date they are now mailed to the pension agency. The pensioners would therefore receive the new certificates much more promptly than they do now. All vouchers, after being paid by the pension agent, must be again mailed to this city, to the Treasury Department, where the accounts are audited. This bureau can not furnish the latest post-office address of a pensioner or state when the pensioner was last paid without first securing a report from the pension agent upon whose rolls the pensioner's name is inscribed. If all pensioners were paid from this city, all such information would be immediately available, which would greatly assist in the prompt dispatch of the correspondence of this bureau. All pension claims, as you are aware, are adjudicated here in this bureau; and if all payments were made here, a complete history of each case would be readily available and th

It seems impossible to exhaust the many substantial rea-ens—economy and the pensioners' interests being kept steadily in view-in favor of a consolidation of the pension agencies.

The Topeka agent paid over one-ninth (109,579) and the Columbus agent about one-tenth (93,969) of the pensioners on the rolls in the fiscal year 1908 each paying month or quarter, while, if all had been paid from Washington, one-twelfth (317,229) would have been paid each month in the year. It follows that one set of paying clerks and a less number would be required at Washington to make the payments as promptly as they are now made at the several agencies.

No other agency now pays as much as one-twelfth of the pensioners, and about one-half of the agencies pay less than onetwentieth of them, and each of two pays less than one-fiftieth of them, while the average of all pensions paid at all the agencies is one-eighteenth. Unless each of sixteen of the agencies employs a relatively larger number of clerks than the two large pension agencies, or than would be necessary at Washington after the consolidation, they fail to pay the pensioners within their respective districts as promptly as pensioners are now paid at the two named agencies or as they would be paid at one agency, and all clerks have to be retained throughout the whole year, though no payments are made in eight of the twelve months of the year. And the salaries of the pension agent and his chief clerk and the cost of an addressing and of adding machine outfits at each agency is still to be added.

It seems reasonable to conclude that the Secretary's and commissioner's estimate of a reduction of the now average cost each year of paying each pensioner will, if the change is made, be more than realized, and that the maximum estimate of the annual reduction made by the Secretary of the Interior of $350,-000 will at least result. Should this prove to be the case, the saving would be sufficient to pay about 2,900 soldiers, sailors, or their widows each a pension of $12 per month, or that much increase on the pensions they are now drawing under existing law. If there is a reason for great liberality in disbursing the public moneys, there is more justice in giving it to those who bore the heat and burden of campaigns and battles, and to the dependent widows of those who are dead, than there is in unnecessarily keeping up local pension agencies.

The demands on the Republic for payment of pensions alone are too great to warrant any extravagance or liberality in the cost of paying them. And the maintaining of useless and ex-pensive agencies for disbursing pension money merely because local parties will be benefited, or because worthy people will be thrown out of employment if they should be dispensed with, is not warranted either on the ground of necessity or on the ground of justice to the places of their location. If agencies should be maintained, because of local interests, where they are now located, then their number should be very largely increased in the interest of other equally necessitous and worthy localities.

Why should not all great cities, with their vast numbers of pensioners residing therein and in their vicinages, be given pension agencies? The cities of Baltimore, Cleveland, Cincinnati. St. Louis, New Orleans, Kansas City, Denver, St. Paul and Minneapolis, Omaha, Los Angeles, Portland (Oreg.), Seattle, and other large cities, in some of which and in their immediate vicinity reside more pensioners than reside in some agency districts, are now and have always been without a pension agency, and pensioners of some of these places and many others in the States and Territories receive, uncomplainingly, their pension checks from agencies located outside of their States more than a thousand miles away. Thirty-one of the forty-six States of the Union and all the Territories, Arizona, New Mexico, and so forth, have no pension agency located therein. From Knox-ville the army pensioners of ten States are paid, and other agencies pay pensioners of several States and Territories. The San Francisco agency pays the pensioners of eight States and three Territories and of the Philippines. The States and Ter-ritories of this agency are divided by the Rocky Mountains range, and are vast distances apart and from San Francisco. And the San Francisco agency pays the pensioners as regularly and promptly in the States of Idaho and Montana and in the Territories of New Mexico and Hawaii as it pays those residing in the Pacific coast States or in San Francisco. Remoteness from the paying agency is not a material factor.

And there is no rule of equitable division of work at the agencies. New York and Pennsylvania have each two pension agencies located therein. The two New York agencies disbursed in the last (1908) fiscal year $1,058,864.66 less than the Columbus (Ohio) agency and $1,740,251.68 less than the Topeka (Kans.) agency, and the two Pennsylvania agencies disbursed in the progress $511,705.00 less than the Topeka (Kans.) bursed in the same year $511,795.90 less than the Columbus agency and $2,452,053.58 less than the Topeka agency. Greater disparities with other agencies appear by the figures. If the equitable distribution of the public funds alone is sought, it will best be accomplished in paying pensioners who reside in all parts of the United States.

Neither the revenues of the Government nor good economic business methods justifies the continuance of an expensive system of paying pensioners that is clearly now unnecessary and in no way beneficial to them.

The manifest attempts to magnify a few special instances of inconvenience to pensioners in having their pensions promptly paid into a general detriment to all pensioners has long since spent its force in the light of the facts. The pensioners, especially those who desire in the future an increase of the pensions now being paid them, are willing that economy and good business principles should be applied in paying pensioners.

I would hesitate long before I would favor any plan of paying pensions, even though economy demanded it, that would work serious delay in paying pensioners generally. There is no clamor for pension agencies in 31 States and in all our Territories where there are now none, as in each pensioners residing remote from all pension agencies are paid as regularly and promptly as in any of the other States. So as to pensioners residing in the Territories.

The facts warrant the conclusion that no pensioners will be seriously delayed in receiving their pensions under the proposed plan of reducing the agencies to 1; that there would be prompter payments made on original and increase pension certificates and on allowances of accrued pensions to widows and orphans, and that there would be at least $350,000 saved annually in the cost of paying pensions. I regret exceedingly that certain pension agents would be dispensed with under the consolidation plan, and that worthy clerks would, in some instances, lose their places. Some of them would doubtless be transferred to the Washington agency or to the Pension Bureau to continue the work they are now engaged on. There would necessarily have to be a gradual disestablishment of the agencies by the President.

Mr. STAFFORD. Has not the President the power to-day to discontinue the agencies if he so elects?

Mr. KEIFER. Yes. Mr. TIRRELL. Mr

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman in the course of his remarks stated that there was delay in the payment of pensions in the local offices. Now, will the gentleman tell us whether that delay is caused by an inadequacy of clerical force in the local offices?

Mr. KEIFER. There is always some delay necessarily in all the offices. I did not speak of any extraordinary or unnecessary delay. I was speaking of a fact that the pensions were not paid, generally, on an average earlier than ten days after the day of payment came.

Mr. TIRRELL. If there is no inadequacy of the clerical force in the local offices, will the gentleman tell us, they being supposed in the local offices to work during the hours of quiet, how the pensions could be paid more expeditiously and cheaply by having an office here in Washington? I mean, to any considerable extent. There is no rent paid in these offices, is there?

Mr. KEIFER. Yes; $4,500 is paid for rent at the New York agency

Mr. TIRRELL. Mo Mr. KEIFER. Yes. Most of the places have a federal building?

TIRRELL. Where there is no rent. Now, is there any additional expense, will the gentleman tell us, outside if there is no more clerical force throughout the country to pay these pensions? Is there any more expense except the agents in charge, at $4,000 a year?

Mr. KEIFER. The Commissioner of Pensions stated to us in his testimony something like a year ago that he could start off by reducing the number of clerks from 425 to 300. very obvious to the gentleman, if he will reflect, that if these clerks are engaged with the proper addressing and adding machines, it would do away with a large number of people in one place, and if they are engaged in paying pensioners every month in the year, that they would pay vastly more than they would otherwise pay if they were located at the several agencies with simply a proper number to commence paying pensions every three months. There are two months of every three months that they do not pay anybody or are not required to pay anybody.

Mr. DALZELL. I would like to call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that a year ago the Commissioner of Pensions testified that he would want the same number of clerks.

He said:

We would bring a majority of them from each agency here with their records, so as to have them go right to work. In the Pension Bureau proper we have no more clerks than we need, and we have no one to spare to put in the agency to do that work.

That is to say, bring clerks from San Francisco here, for

Mr. KEIFER. Did the gentleman want to ask a question?

Mr. DALZELL. I asked if that is so.

Mr. KEIFER. No.

Mr. DALZELL. It is not so? Mr. KEIFER. The testimony taken before the subcommittee at that time shows that he stated that 125 clerks could be dispensed with. Now, he did say something about wanting a sufficient number of clerks to make up a force to pay pensions from one office, but I think the connection in which the gentleman reads it leaves a wrong impression.

Mr. DALZELL. If my friend will permit— Mr. KEIFER. Certainly. Mr. DALZELL. Did not he use exactly this language:

We will want the same clerks. We would bring a majority of them from each agency here with their records.

Did he say that or not?

Mr. KEIFER. That is just exactly what he said, that he would take of the number of other clerks such number of them as he could use. He said he would use the same clerks they are now using somewhere else and bring part of them to the city of Washington, and that is the effect of the statement you have just read.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. May I say to the gentleman from Ohio that in the claim they could use a majority of the clerks the gentleman from Pennsylvania would seem to feel as though a majority meant all; but a majority might be 55 or 60 per cent of them and yet have a very great reduction in the aggregate number of clerks.

Mr. DALZELL. The majority, my friend will observe, is used in connection with the number that would be brought to Washington, not to the number that would be used.

Mr. KEIFER. He is speaking of the same clerks that are employed in other agencies to be brought here, and the context shows clearly that they were only going to bring part of Mr. STAFFORD. Has the committee taken any additional testimony this year concerning the adequacy of quarters here in case all these agencies were consolidated at Washington?

Mr. KEIFER. I think there has been no formal testimony I have talked with the Commissioner of Pensions to-day over the phone at his instance, and I have understood from him, as well as the Secretary of the Interior, that the quarters would be adequate, and they so testified a year ago, and there has been no change since.

STAFFORD. I beg to challenge the last statement that they so testified a year ago, because I have in my hand the hearings of a year ago, in which the commissioner used this language:

We will have room in the event that we are allowed the entire Pension building for pension purposes; that is, if they surrender us the whole building. We have the board of appeals in there now, of the Secretary's office, and one room is occupied by the Indian Office. If these rooms were restored to us, we would have plenty of room.

So that statement is predicated upon the idea they have not sufficient room, but these offices would have to seek other quarters and place an expense upon the Government.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Chairman, it is just exactly the reverse of what the gentleman suggests.

Mr. STAFFORD. Well, I am only taking the language of Mr. KEIFER. At the time the commissioner testified they were contemplating moving a large part of the Patent Office models in the Pension building, and they were using one part of the Pension building for the Bureau of Indian Affairs; and when he spoke of having sufficient room for paying the pen-sioners, of course he did not mean that he would adopt the Patent Office and the Indian Office and give them room.

He expected to have the Pension Bureau devoted to the payment of pensions as well as the other things which properly belong to it.

Mr. STAFFORD. Provided the offices that are now in use in the Pension building are vacated, then there would be sufficient room?

Mr. KEIFER. That is, such as have no connection whatever with the pension business.

Mr. STAFFORD. They are still occupied, and would have to be vacated, or other quarters would have to be provided?

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. KEIFER. Yes; I will yield for a question.

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. The gentleman stated that a number of men were housed in the Pension building that had no connection in their official duties with the work of pensions?

Mr. KEIFER. A number of offices there.

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. Where would these men go if this building were vacated by them?

Mr. KEIFER. Go to their proper offices, where they came from.

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. And would not they have to get the quarters, and then would not that be an expense to the Government?

Mr. KEIFER. I suppose the gentlemen think that we could defeat this very economical proposition by assuming that we might use the Pension Office for any other business that we pleased, although it was built for the purpose of accommodating the Pension Commissioner and all his forces and every other thing connected with pension duties. We are not going to say that we will not have room there because somebody wants to become an intruder with his office that does not belong there.

wanted to say one word-

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. Mr. Chairman-

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Ohio yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. ALEXANDER]?

Mr. KEIFER. Certainly; if I have the time.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. On what does the gentleman base his assertion that the proposed consolidation would be cheaper than the present plan of agencies?

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Chairman, I have spent more time than I intended to in order to demonstrate that, and the gentleman will have to read my speech in the RECORD in the morning.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. Mr. Chairman-

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman The CHAIRMAN. To whom of

To whom does the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Keifer] yield?

Mr. KEIFER. I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. ALEXANDER

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. I have listened very carefully to the gentleman's very interesting speech, but I have failed to hear anything which would be received as evidence in a court of justice in support of the statement that it is more economical to consolidate than to continue under the existing plan. Now, if the gentleman will summarize, it may enlighten.

Mr. KEIFER. It is sufficient to say, at least, in answer, that it has been shown in every instance that where there were a few paid at a pension agency it cost more than at a place where there was a larger number paid, and that applies all through.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. KEIFER. Yes, sir.

Mr. MADDEN. Is it not a fact that there are about a million pensions

Mr. KEIFER. Nine hundred and fifty-one thousand and some hundreds.

Mr. MADDEN. Is it not a fact that to consolidate the pension agencies would save 25 cents per capita in the cost of distributing pensions?

Mr. KEIFER. On the average.

Mr. MADDEN. A million pensions at 25 cents would be $250,000, would it not?

Mr. KEIFER. Yes, sir. Mr. MADDEN. Per annum. That is one way that you would save something. Now, is it not a fact that the people who would be employed to distribute the pensions in the central office would be at work all the time, while those who are employed in the various offices now are only at work one-third of Mr. KEIFER. I have stated that fully in my remarks.

Mr. MADDEN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. ALEX-ANDER] seemed to think that there was no evidence of economy by the consolidation, and I simply wanted to call this to his attention.

Mr. TIRRELL. Upon that point-

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Ohio yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Tirrell]?

Mr. KEIFER. Yes. Mr. TIRRELL. Did it not appear in the discussion last year, or the year before, that it cost more per capita among the old veterans and those entitled to pensions to distribute the money from Washington than from any of the other agencies in the

Mr. KEIFER. There did not appear any such thing at all. It costs more than it did in the larger agencies, and I want to say, for the benefit of the gentleman from New York [Mr. ALEX-ANDER], that in making some of the calculation last year as to the cost of paying the pension here in the city of Washington they made it on the basis of the number of resident pensioners paid, and omitted to include the foreign pensioners paid, and omitted to include the number of pension surgeons that are all paid from here, no matter whether they are located in this city or in the most remote parts of the United States. And if the calculation had been in all cases fairly made, treating each one of the examining surgeons, and so forth, as a pensioner, it would have reduced the average cost very much below the average as stated in the RECORD last year.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the time of the gentleman may be extended for ten minutes.

Mr. KEIFER. I do not care on my own account to have an extension

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. LANGLEY. I understood the gentleman from Ohio said he did not desire an extension, and therefore I think we are ready to proceed. The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Ohio desire to have his time extended? Mr. KEIFER. I am not going to occupy any part of the time extended to me unless it is to answer some questions.

Mr. HAUGEN. I will ask the gentleman is it not a fact, by reason of recent legislation, the work of the Pension Office has been largely increased in the Bureau of Pensions?

Mr. KEIFER. It was for a time, but it is now lower than it ever was before.

Mr. HAUGEN. And that the force has not been decreased in proportion?

Mr. KEIFER. I can not answer that.

Mr. HAUGEN. I understood the gentleman to make that statement before the committee.

Mr. KEIFER. We are not talking about the Pension Bureau, but the pension agencies.

Mr. HAUGEN. We understood from the statement made before the Committee on Expenditures in the Interior Department that a large number of the clerks now employed in that bureau will be detailed to do this very work, and a large number of clerks will be dispensed with.

Mr. OLLIE M. JAMES. I am heartily in favor of curtailing the number of these agencies, but is it not true that that has twice passed through the House, and each time that it went to the Senate has not the House yielded? Can the gentleman give us any assurance that it will not be the same the next time?

Mr. KEIFER. You are making a prophecy. I do not know. Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman stated a moment ago that there was an error in the computation last year, wherein it was stated that the Washington agency cost 10 cents more per capita than the other agencies with the same number of pensioners enrolled.

Mr. KEIFER.

Mr. STAFFORD. I have the figures right before me, if the gentleman disputes that fact. I can state to him instances from the record giving the cost per capita at Washington at 63.17 cents, which was the highest amount of any excepting four other agencies-and three of these are paying the smallest number in the country-Concord, Augusta, Louisville, and New York exceeding the pro rata amount, the increase for the latter being partly accounted for by the large rental which we are obliged to pay for quarters in that city. I desire to ask the gentleman if he has found from the revised estimates of this year, taking into consideration the four places to which I have referred where the per capita expense is larger, that from the figures compiled a year ago, if all the agencies had been consolidated, there would have resulted an increase of $100,000.

Mr. KEIFER. The gentleman is mistaken. The testimony fixed the average cost in Washington for the fiscal year 1907 at 51 cents per capita, and I am unable to answer the part of the question which relates to the revised estimate, because only this afternoon I was called to the telephone by the Commissioner of Pensions to enable him to tell me of the error that I have just spoken of, that would reduce the per capita of paying pensions in Washington now provided, that included pension surgeons or examining surgeons and others which properly should have been included and treated as though they were pensioners.

Mr. STAFFORD. Then the gentleman has just been informed this afternoon by telephone from the commissioner, showing the cost?

Mr. KEIFER. What I have just stated was communicated to me this afternoon by telephone.

Mr. STAFFORD. Has the gentleman anything to show what it really costs to dispense this service in Washington?

Mr. KEIFER. The expense was 51 cents per pensioner, and that was much lower than many of the other agencies-quite a number of them-and still higher than the cost of paying the pensioners at Columbus and Topeka agencies, because they did not pay so many pensioners, and they have included these extras.

Mr. STAFFORD. In the report of the Secretary of the Interior for the year ending June 30, 1907, the total expense of the Washington agency is given as $33,865.41, and the number of pensioners provided for by this agency 53,640, making an average of 63.13 cents cost per capita for the payment of pensions at the Washington agency, whereas in Milwaukee the cost is only 54 cents-almost 53 cents-and so on down the list.

Mr. KEIFER. I do not care to occupy any further part of my time.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Lest a wrong impression be left on the House by the gentleman from Wisconsin, and I am sure the gentleman does not mean to leave any such impression as his figures would imply, although he might have heard the gentleman from Ohio say that all of the examining surgeons are paid from the Washington office, and no credit whatever is given in the per capita estimates for that.

Mr. STAFFORD. I heard the gentleman, and asked him further, because of that remark, whether he could give the expense so that the committee would have some information as to just how much it does cost to do this work here in Washington. The gentleman from Ohio said he had no such information.

Mr. KEIFER. That is the fact.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Then just a moment on this

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like to ask the gentleman from Ohio whether he yields any time to the gentleman from Michigan?

Mr. KEIFER. I yield time, if I have it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time for general debate is entirely exhausted. The Chair understands there is no more time for anyone to consume. The Chair will therefore direct the Clerk to read the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

For army and navy pensions, as follows: For invalids, widows, minor children, and dependent relatives, army nurses, and all other pensioners who are now borne on the rolls, or who may hereafter be placed thereon under the provisions of any and all acts of Congress, $160,000,000 - Provided, That the appropriation aforesaid for navy pensions shall be paid from the income of the navy pension fund, so far as the same shall be sufficient for that purpose: Provided further, That the amount expended under each of the above items shall be accounted for separately.

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

At the end of line 4, page 2, add the following:

"And provided further, That every widow otherwise entitled on the 19th day of April, 1908, to have her pension increased to $12 per month by reason of the act approved on said day, shall be granted said increase from said day notwithstanding the fact that her pension had theretofore been increased by special act of Congress on account of a dependent child."

Mr. MANN. I reserve the point or order.
Mr. KEIFER. That is new legislation, and I think we ought not to take it up on this appropriation bill. I make the point of order that it is not in order, because it is new legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Ohio make the point of order against this amendment?

Mr. KELEER 1.22

Mr. KEIFER. I do. Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. I ask the gentleman to reserve it.

Mr. KEIFER, I will reserve it. Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. The gentleman from Vermont understands perfectly well that this amendment is subject to a point of order. I regret that I had no opportunity to take it up with the Committee on Appropriations before offering it here. I took the matter up Saturday with the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions [Mr. Sulloway], and so surprised was he to find what the ruling of the Pension Office was that I at once took the matter up over the telephone with the Pension Office. Only a short time ago I was informed over the telephone that the Pension Office felt bound to abide by the decision made some months ago.

This is the situation. Suppose a widow was drawing $8 per month prior to April 19, 1908. Suppose that she had a dependent child and that Congress granted the child, by special act, a pension of $12 per month, making the pension payable to the mother during her lifetime, but continuing the pension as long as the child lives. We have a provision in the pension laws to the effect that no person on the pension roll by virtue of a special act of Congress shall receive the benefit of any general pension legislation without giving up the pension granted by the special act.

The Pension Bureau holds that the widow above described, inasmuch as her pension has been increased by the special act of Congress, can receive no benefit from the widows' pension act of April 19, 1908. That is to say, while it is true that she was drawing only $8, and while it is true that the entire purpose of Congress in passing the special act was to provide a pension for the child, nevertheless, in view of the fact that the child's pension is made payable to the mother during her lifetime, she can not have her own pension raised to $12, as was done in the case of all the other widows of her class. This is not just. This is not what Congress intended, either, when it provided the pension for the child, or when it passed the general widows' pension law of April 19 last. While this amendment is therefore subject to a point of order, I sincerely hope that upon reflection that point will be overlooked.

Mr. MANN. Just what does this amendment do? Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. It enables the widow, whose case I have described, to enjoy the benefit of the law of April 19, 1908, by having her pension of $8 increased to $12, notwithstanding the fact that in addition to her own $8 she was being paid, under the special act of Congress, $12 per month on account of her dependent child. This amendment would give her the increase of $4 per month, which Congress undertook to give to every widow of a soldier who had served ninety days.

Mr. MANN. I did not listen very attentively to the reading of the amendment. The gentleman just said where a widow had her pension increased

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. On account of this helpless and dependent child.

Mr. MANN. Well, I know; but if she was getting this $12, how much more would she get under the amendment?

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. Under this amendment she would get $4 more. Mr. MANN. Bills are not passed giving the existence of a helpless and dependent child as the reason for paying pensions, as I understand it. Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. Why, certainly; we frequently, by special act, grant a pension of $12 per month to the helpless and dependent child of a veteran. I yield to the gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. Sulloway].

Mr. SULLOWAY. I will try and state it to the gentleman from Illinois. Widows were receiving $8 a month. is a helpless and dependent child, it has been the habit of Congress to grant by special act $12 for the support of that child, which gave to the widowed mother a total pension of In that class of cases where the widow was receiving $8 in her own right and receiving $12 for the child-

Mr. TAWNEY. During the child's minority?

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. No; during her lifetime. At her death the $12 go to the child or its guardian.

Mr. KEIFER. Up to 16 years of age. Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. No; pardon me, the $12 pension is made payable to the mother during her life, and at her death it is paid to the guardian of the child.

Mr. SULLOWAY. The widow receives no benefit from the act of April last, whereas all the other widows get $12. The gentleman from Vermont [Mr. Foster] is exactly correct in his statement as to the result to that widow. What is proposed by his amendment is to give to the widow who is getting $8, the $12, which you intended to give her, I suppose, or at least I did, when we passed the act.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Vermont has expired.

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. Mr. Chairman, I ask that my time be extended five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Vermont asks that his time be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. I yield to the gentleman from

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from New Hampshire said it was the practice to pass a bill for $12 a month where there was a dependent child. To whom does the pension run?

Mr. SULLOWAY. To the mother. The bill reads something like this: Pension to the widow, giving her name, is increased $12 by reason of her having this child who is dependent and helpless.

The gentleman is still in error. Mr. MANN.

Mr. SULLOWAY. I think I should know, I have read many hundreds of them.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman's statement does not agree with himself.

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. Let me give you the exact language used in these private acts:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Aurelia E. Willard, widow of George S. Willard, late of Company G, Fifth Regiment Vermont Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $20 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving: Provided, That in the event of the death of Alice L. Willard, helpless and dependent child of said George S. Willard, the additional pension herein granted shall cease and determine: And provided further, That in the event of the death of Aurelia E. Willard the name of said Alice L. Willard shall be placed on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, at the rate of $12 per month from and after the date of death of said Aurelia E. Willard.

Mr. EDWARDS of Georgia. Did I understand the gentleman to say the pension would be continued to the child during its minority, or during its lifetime?

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. During its lifetime. This is the case of dependent or crippled children. It seems to me that it was the purpose of Congress all the time, that where the widow, because of her widowhood, was receiving $8 and was simply being paid the additional $12 by the act of Congress for the benefit of the child, she should not be deprived of the increase which we gave to the other widows.

Mr. COX of Indiana. And the gentleman proposes to give her that $12?

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. I propose to give her $12 a month from the time the bill went into effect last April-that is, to give her the increase of $4 provided for in the act of April last.

Mr. TAWNEY. The effect of the gentleman's amendment would be this: She would have a pension in her own right of $12 a month, and a pension on account of her child of $12 a month.

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. That is the idea exactly.

Mr. TAWNEY. She would be receiving the pension of $24 a

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. Yes; she would draw $12 just as every other widow does, and in addition to that she would receive, or there would be paid her, $12 a month which is now being paid her on account of the helpless or dependent child.

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman explain how the law we passed, increasing the pensions of widows, discriminates against the widow who has received $12 a month by special act?

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. We have a very wise provision that if a person by special act of Congress is drawing a pension, that person shall not profit by any general pension legislation without surrendering the pension granted by the special The Pension Office holds that the widow's pension is increased by the special act granting the $12 per month on account of the helpless child, and that therefore it can not grant her any increase under the general law so long as the $12 per month continues to be paid to her.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Vermont has expired.

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. Again, Mr. Chairman, I will ask for an extension of five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Vermont asks that his time be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. BOWERS. Mr. Chairman, inasmuch as I intend to make the point of order which the gentleman from Ohio reserved, I think I will object now.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order. The Clerk, proceeding with the reading of the bill, read as

For fees and expenses of examining surgeons, pensions, for services rendered within the fiscal year 1910, $500,000.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend this paragraph by striking out the word "five" in line 7, page 2 of the bill and inserting in lieu thereof the word "four."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment. The Clerk read as follows:

On page 2, line 7, strike out the word "five" and insert the word "four," so that the amount will read "$400,000."

Mr. KEIFER. This amendment, Mr. Chairman, I make because I have ascertained from the Commissioner of Pensions since the committee reported this bill that in consequence of the age pensions reducing the number for examination required to be made by the examining surgeon, in the opinion of the Commissioner there will not be needed for the next fiscal year more than $400,000. That is a saving of $100,000 over that recommended by the Commissioner some weeks ago,
The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to. Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. Butler, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 26203 (the pension appropriation bill) and had come to no resolution thereon.

ADMISSIONS TO CITIZENSHIP.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (S. 388) to conform and legalize prior admissions to citizenship of the United States where the judge or clerk of the court administering the oath to the applicant or his witnesses has failed to sign or seal the record, oath, or the judgment of admission, and to establish a proper record of such citizenship, with a House amendment thereto disagreed to by the Senate.

Mr. BENNET of New York. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do insist upon its amendment to the Senate bill, agree to the conference asked for by the Senate, and that the Chair do appoint the conferees.

The motion was agreed to.

The Chair announced the following conferees on the part of the House:

Mr. Howell of New Jersey, Mr. Bennet of New York, and Mr. BURNETT of Alabama.

NATIONAL ACADEMY OF SCIENCES.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States (H. Doc. No. 1337), which was read and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed: To the Senate and House of Representatives:

In compliance with the provisions of section 8 of the act of Congress making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1909, approved May 27, 1908, I transmit herewith for the consideration of the Congress the report of the National Academy of Sciences relating to the conduct of the scientific work under the United States Government.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, January 18, 1909.

ONE HUNDREDTH ANNIVERSARY OF BIRTH OF ABRAHAM LINCOLN.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States (H. Doc. No. 1345). which was read, referred to the Committee on the Library, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I have received from the committee of the Grand Army of the Republic, with the approval of its commander in chief, a communication running in part as follows:
"Pursuant to the recommendation of the committee authorized by the Forty-first National Encampment, Grand Army of the Republic, and appointed to take into consideration the fitting celebration of the one hundredth anniversary of the birth of Abraham Lincoln, which was made a report to the Forty-second National Encampment that was unanimously adopted, the undersigned have been appointed a committee to prepare a programme for the occasion, met in New York City October 19, 1908, and submit the following as the result of its deliberations:

"I. That the commander in chief be requested to invite the Presitions:

"1. That the commander in chief be requested to invite the President of the United States, governor of States and Territories, and mayors of cities to participate with the Grand Army of the Republic in public recognition of the centennial anniversary of the birthday of Abraham Lincoln, February 12, 1909, and by proclamation, as far as practical, recommend that the day be observed as a special holiday."

I regard the proposal as eminently proper. It will be from every standpoint desirable to observe this hundredth anniversary of the birth of Abraham Lincoln as a special holiday. I recommend that Congress pass a law authorizing me to issue a proclamation setting apart this day as a special holiday.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, January 18, 1909.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. WILSON of Illinois, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bill of the following title, when the Speaker signed the same:

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL.

Mr. WILSON of Illinois, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that this day they had presented to the President of the United States, for his approval, the following bills:

H. R. 23351. An act for the relief of the owners of the Mexican steamship Tabasqueno;

H. R. 14343. An act to correct the naval record of Randolph W. Campbell; and

H. R. 8615. An act to correct the naval record of Edward T. Lincoln.

PUBLIC SCHOOLHOUSE CONDITIONS, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I present a re-port concerning the public schoolhouse conditions in the District of Columbia, coming from the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, and ask unanimous consent that it be received and printed as a public document (H. Doc. No. 1346).

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent to present a report from the Commissioners of the District of Columbia concerning public school conditions in the District of Columbia, and that the same be printed as a public document. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

EULOGIES.

Mr. GILL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the following order, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Order No. 16.

Ordered, That there be a session of the House at 2 p. m. Sunday, February 14, for the delivery of eulogies on the life, character, and public services of the Hon. WILLIAM PINKNEY WHYTE, late a Member of the United States Senate from Maryland.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.
The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the order. The question was taken, and the order was agreed to.

ADJOURNMENT.

Then, on motion of Mr. Keifer (at 5 o'clock' and 3 minutes p. m.), the House adjourned.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials of the following titles were introduced and severally referred as

By Mr. FULTON: A bill (H. R. 26462) establishing the age of those applying for a pension under an act entitled "An act granting pensions to certain enlisted men, soldiers and officers, who served in the civil war and the war with Mexico," approved February 6, 1907—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. SMITH of Michigan: A bill (H. R. 26463) to amend an act entitled "An act making it a misdemeanor in the District of Columbia to abandon or willfully neglect to provide for the support and maintenance by any person of his wife or of his or her minor children in destitute or necessitous circumstances," approved March 23, 1906-to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. JENKINS: A bill (H. R. 26464) for the validation of certain certificates of naturalization-to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

By Mr. HOWELL of Utah (by request): A bill (H. R. 26465) to provide for the exportation of distilled spirits other than those contained in distillers' original packages—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. KENNEDY of Iowa: A bill (H. R. 26466) authorizing the city of Burlington, Iowa, to construct a bridge across the Mississippi River at Burlington, Iowa—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. HUFF: A bill (H. R. 26467) to amend an act to amend the pension laws by increasing the pensions of soldiers and sailors who have lost an arm or leg in the service, and for other purposes, approved March 3, 1883—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

SENATE.

Tuesday, January 19, 1909.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. Edward E. Hale. The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on request of Mr. Kean, and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Journal stands approved.

REPORT OF NATIONAL ACADEMY OF SCIENCES.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States (H. Doc. No. 1337), which was read and referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

In compliance with the provisions of section 8 of the act of Congress making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1909, approved May 27, 1908, I transmit herewith for the consideration of the Congress the report of the National Academy of Sciences relating to the conduct of the scientific work under the United States Government. THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, January 18, 1909.

CENTENARY OF THE BIRTH OF ABRAHAM LINCOLN.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States (H. Doc. No. 1345), which was read and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I have received from the committee of the Grand Army of the Republic, with the approval of its commander in chief, a communication running, in part, as follows:

"Pursuant to the recommendation of the committee authorized by the Forty-first National Encampment, Grand Army of the Republic, and appointed to take into consideration the fitting celebration of the one hundredth anniversary of the birth of Abraham Lincoln, which was made a report to the Forty-second National Encampment that was unanimously adopted, the undersigned have been appointed a committee to prepare a programme for the occasion, met in New York City October 19, 1908, and submits the following as the result of its deliberations:

"1. That the commander in chief be requested to invite the President of the United States, governors of States and Territories, and mayors of cities to participate with the Grand Army of the Republic in public recognition of the centennial anniversary of the birthday of Abraham Lincoln, February 12, 1909, and by proclamation, as far as practical, recommend that the day be observed as a special holiday."

I regard the proposal as eminently proper. It will be from every standpoint desirable to observe this hundredth anniversary of the birth of Abraham Lincoln as a special holiday. I recommend that Congress pass a law authorizing me to issue a proclamation setting apart this day as a special holiday.

The White House, January 18, 1908.

THE WHITE HOUSE, January 18, 1909.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

   Mr. FULTON. I am directed by the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 9969) for the relief of George J. Miller, of Wenatchee, Wash., to report it favorably without amendment, and I submit a report (No. 789) thereon. I call the attention of the Senator from Washington [Mr. Piles] to the bill.
   Mr. PILES. I ask for the present consideration of the bill just reported by the Senator from Oregon.
                      Let us have the regular order, Mr. President,
   The VICE-PRESIDENT. The regular order is demanded.
The bill will go to the calendar.
Mr. CLAPP, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 3760) for the relief of the creditors of the Deposit Savings Association, of Mobile, Ala., reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 790) thereon.
   Mr. PILES, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred certain bills granting pensions and increase of pensions, submitted a report (No. 791), accompanied by a bill (S.
8629) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the civil war and to certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors, which was read twice by its title, the bill being a substitute for the following Senate bills heretofore referred to that committee:

Mr. LODGE, from the Committee on the Philippines, to whom was referred the bill (S. 8023) for the relief of Pedro Mangalindan, Basilio Baltazar, and Julio Lacsamana, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 792) thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 8478) to provide for payment of the claims of certain religious orders in the Philippine Islands, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report (No. 793) thereon.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming, from the Committee on the Ju-diciary, to whom was referred the message of the President of the United States relative to the celebration of the hundredth anniversary of the birth of Abraham Lincoln, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on the Library; which was agreed to.

LINCOLN POSTAGE STAMP.

Mr. CARTER. From the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, I report back favorably without amendment the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 216) for a special Lincoln postage stamp, and request unanimous consent for its present con-

The Secretary read the joint resolution; and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It authorizes the Postmaster-General to design and issue a special postage stamp of the denomination of 2 cents in commemoration of the one hundredth anniversary of the birth of Abraham Lincoln.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland introduced the following bills, which were severally read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on Pensions:

A bill (S. 8604) to equalize the pension of Edward D. Bates from March, 1883, up to the time of the special act granting him $24 per month; and

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States (S. Doc. No. 666), which was read and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

The inclosed letter from the Secretary of State with the accompanying documents in reference to Liberia explain themselves. I very earnestly hope that the recommendation of the Secretary of State will be approved and that Congress will grant the appropriation of $20,000 to pay the expenses of a commission, who shall go to Liberia to examine into the situation, confer with the officers of the Liberian Government, and with the representatives of other governments actually present in Monrovia, and report recommendations as to the specific action on the part of the Government of the United States most apt to render effective relief to the Republic of Liberia under the present critical circunstances. The relations of the United States to Liberia are such as to make it an imperative duty for us to do all in our power to help the little Republic which is struggling against such adverse conditions. I very earnestly hope that the action proposed will be taken.

PANAMA CANAL PURCHASE.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The morning business is closed, and the Chair lays before the Senate a resolution coming over from yesterday, which will be read.

The Secretary read Senate resolution 254, submitted yesterday by Mr. RAYNER, as follows:

Whereas it is currently reported that the Attorney-General of the United States, at the instance and under the direction of the President, has ordered the district attorneys in several of the federal districts to institute an investigation in connection with various publications lately appearing in the press in relation to the purchase of the Panama Canal; and to institute an investigation in connection with various plately appearing in the press in relation to the purchase of the Panama Canal; and

Whereas in the progress of said investigation a number of witnesses connected with the papers in which said publications were made have been summoned to appear and testify before the grand juries of said several districts; and

Whereas the federal districts outside of the Territories and the District of Columbia are not invested with common-law jurisdiction, and have only such jurisdiction as arises under the Constitution of the United States and under the laws made in pursuance thereof, and the supreme court of the District of Columbia has only such jurisdiction as is now contained in the codification of the laws made under authority of Congress, and such further jurisdiction under the acts of Congress, as is particularly conferred upon it by said code; and

Whereas it is provided in the first amendment to the Constitution of the United States, among other things, that Congress shall make no law abridging the freedom of the press: Be it

Resolved, That the Attorney-General of the United States be, and he is hereby, directed to inform the Senate whether the investigation aforesaid has been ordered by the President; and if it has been ordered, under what statute of the United States, if any, the proceedings has been instituted, and by what right and authority the process of said courts is being employed in the premises.

Mr. RAYNER. Mr. President, I desire to submit to the Senate

Mr. RAYNER. Mr. President, I desire to submit to the Senate a few additional remarks, supplementary to those of yesterday. in connection with this resolution.

There is no reason why the Senate should not pass the resolution framed as it is. There is no objection to it. It has been done over and over again. It is in the line of precedent. I do not know upon what ground the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Lodge] is opposing the passage of the resolution and asks to send it to the Judiciary Committee, where it will be of no avail; because if it goes to the Judiciary Committee there will ing the Government or libeling the President as President or be a subcommittee appointed, and it will take some weeks to consider it, and it will come back to the main committee, and by the time it gets back into the Senate the evil complained of will have culminated and we will be perfectly remediless in the premises.

This resolution asks precisely the same thing that the resolution of the Senator from Texas [Mr. Culberson] asked a few weeks ago. There have been passed by the Senate hundreds of resolutions asking a public officer of the United States for information. It is not an attack upon a public officer. It does not embody any attack against the President of the United States. It does not ask the Attorney-General to disclose information that we have not a right to receive from him. As I said yesterday, it does not ask for the names of his witnesses or the testimony before the grand jury. It simply asks under what law of the United States he is proceeding.

I want to show the Senate now how important this matter is. If the Attorney-General says, "Well, I will not give you the information," then it becomes a question as to what the Senate will do. The Senate might say, "We will not exact the information from him." Then, again, it may say that it will do it. But let the Attorney-General reply to the resolution of the Senate as to the law he is acting under.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. RAYNER. I yield.
Mr. CLAPP. I desire to ask the Senator a question.
Mr. RAYNER. Certainly.
Mr. CLAPP. It seems to me that sometimes in these proceedings we ought to stop long enough to see where we are liable to land if we continue. While it may be premature, I should like to ask the Senator, in good faith, if he cares to express an opinion, as to the idea of any method we would have, any process we could adopt, any plan we could employ to require the Attorney-General to furnish the information in case he saw fit not to respond directly to the resolution and declined to furnish it. Unless we can require him to furnish it, it seems to me that we are discussing a very barren, academic subject.

Mr. RAYNER. 1 think the Senate has the power to enforce The same question came up the other day and its own orders. was discussed under the resolution we passed here that the President and Attorney-General give certain information. They declined to give the information. The President said that he instructed the Attorney-General that the Attorney-General should not furnish the reasons why he permitted the consolidation of the two companies referred to in the resolution of the Senator from Texas. Under a subsequent resolution that matter is now being inquired into by the Judiciary Committee. What the Judiciary Committee will do about it I am not able to say, but I am under the impression that when either the Senate or the House of Representatives asks a public officer to give it information and he declines to do it there is some process by which the public officer can be brought before it and compelled to perform his duties. That is a matter that we are not anticipating. Let us wait. I feel that the Attorney-General will give us this information. I feel pretty confident that he will not object to the passage of this resolution, and will give us the information.

Now, why? I want it distinctly understood that I am not concerned about any criminal proceedings for individual libel in the District of Columbia. I know, as every other lawyer upon this floor knows, that if a man is criminally libeled in the District of Columbia he can appeal to the criminal courts of the District of Columbia. That is not the question at all. Mr. Cromwell, who I understand is here in Washington, claims that the New York World, or the Indianapolis News, or any other paper has criminally libeled him, he has the right to appear, I apprehend, at the instance of the district attorney not of the Attorney-General but of the district attorney-before the grand jury of the District of Columbia and give his testi-mony. Then it is for the grand jury to say whether it is a criminal libel; whether it will present it.

That is not the question. Everybody admits that. The point I want to get at is only emphasized by what took place in the federal circuit of New York yesterday. It is not the district federal circuit of New York yesterday. It is not the district attorney for the District of Columbia; it is the district attorney of New York, who is proceeding under the order of the Attorney-General of the United States and trying to indict people in the federal circuit outside of the District of Columbia. know under what law he is proceeding to do this, under what statute of the United States the Attorney-General of the United States, acting through the district attorney of the New York circuit, is proceeding to indict anyone for libel, either for libellibeling anyone else, because my contention is that the federal circuits have no jurisdiction of the matter at all. I want it distinctly understood that I am not now justifying these publications. I am not making any attack upon the President of the United States or the Attorney-General. I know that as to anything I may say here in debate under the Constitution I can not be questioned for it. It is for that very reason that I do not propose to abuse the privileges of this floor. I am not making an attack of any sort upon the President or upon the They may be proceeding in strict perform-Attorney-General. ance of their official functions. It is a simple request, and I can not understand why the Senate should object to it. I simply want the information from the Attorney-General under what law or statute he is proceeding. If he gives us the law, if he gives us the statute, I apprehend we might undertake the repeal of it, if there is any law in existence under which you can either libel the Government of the United States or libel the President as such.

If he answers us that the proceeding is merely a question of individual libel, certain persons appearing before the grand jury of the supreme court of the District claiming that they have been libeled here in this District, that is a matter we have nothing to do with. The point is being made that if there is a libel committed upon any of the Government reservations that gives the circuit court of the United States jurisdiction.

Mr. CLAPP. Just a moment, if the Senator please. Mr. RAYNER. I yield.

Mr. CLAPP. I simply ask the Senator to repeat his last re-

There was noise and I could not hear it.

Mr. RAYNER. I want to show the Senate the extreme importance of this proposition. The point is being made now that if a libel-let us call it the crime of libel-if the crime of libel is committed in any of the government reservations, that gives the district or the circuit court of the United States jurisdiction over it. For instance, let us take the case of a student at West Point, we will say from California. He receives a paper from San Francisco that has a libelous communication in it. The idea is that you can indict the editors of that paper in the federal circuit, because it is circulated on a government reservation; and having indicted the proprietors, or the editors, you can by requisition or extradition bring them over from California to be tried in the federal courts of the United States. Is it not an important question to find out whether or not the Attorney-General, acting through his district attorney, is proceeding to accomplish any such purpose?

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, if the Senator will pardon me, if the Attorney-General is proceeding to do that, it seems to me that the remedy, and the only practical remedy, would be a law of Congress prohibiting it. I do not see how, by dealing with the Attorney-General, we can effectuate any remedy or result in the matter.

The remedy is to pass a repealing statute Mr. RAYNER. providing that that shall not constitute a libel. But it is utterly impossible for us to do that unless we know how the Attorney-General is proceeding in this matter.

Will the Senator pardon another interruption? Mr. CLAPP.

Mr. RAYNER. Certainly.

With due deference to the Senator from Mary-Mr. CLAPP. land, it does seem to me that he is mistaken. If we feel that such a law should be passed, we never for one moment would think of conferring with the Department of Justice, or any other department; we would proceed to pass it. The question whether the Attorney-General deems that that is the law is something that we have nothing to do with; it has nothing to do with the law itself. Either it is the law or it is not. If it is the law, and we want to change it, we should repeal it without any reference to his view.

Mr. RAYNER. I submit to the Senator from Minnesota there is a necessity for getting at the facts before we determine whether there is a necessity to pass a law. The Senator from Minnesota has not the information, I have not the information, as to whether the law covers a government reservation; but there is one thing sure. This case is now being argued before the district court of New York. It was argued yesterday; it is argued to-day; and I understand the proposition will be contended for that a libel is constituted wherever the paper circu-For instance, a paper circulates here in the District of Columbia. That paper is published in Indiana. The Indiana editors can be brought here to the District of Columbia and tried for libel. As I said just now, the paper circulates in a government fort, at a government arsenal, at a government academy, upon a government reservation. If the paper makes its appearance upon a government reservation and there is a libel published in it, it is claimed that that constitutes the crime of libel and gives the federal court jurisdiction over the matter.

If that is the law, I apprehend we want to pass a statute repealing that law. I do not know whether it is the law. The Attorney-General does know whether he is proceeding under a law of that sort; and that is all that this resolution asks him. do not care for the balance of the resolution, whether the President has directed him to do it. We can guess who has directed him to do it. That is a matter not of any very serious importance. But I want to know under what law he is proceeding in the federal circuit in an investigation for a criminal libel.

Mr. CLAPP rose.

Mr. RAYNER. Does the Senator want to ask me a ques-

Mr. CLAPP. Well, Mr. President, I certainly do not want to be captious in interrupting the Senator.

Mr. RAYNER. I do not object to it at all. We want all the light on this subject that we can get. Mr. CLAPP. I should like to ask this question: The court of New York now has this matter under consideration. court will probably hold that it can be done or can not be done. If the court holds that it can be done, it then is the law in the contemplation of that court; but I can not for the life of me see what difference it makes as to what the Attorney-General's view of that law is. That is what I should like to have the Senator point out. If it is the law, it should be repealed, perhaps; it is for us to judge whether it should be repealed, and the only authority upon the question whether it is the law or not will be the decision of the court and not the opinion of the Attorney-General.

Mr. RAYNER. Mr. President, I think without any assumption I can easily answer that question. By the time the New York courts decide this question I think it will be too late for us to do anything; it goes through a long process of delay and postponement; there is a motion made to quash the subpænas, and by the time the court gives an opinion upon the question and the question gets before the grand jury and there is a presentment or indictment the time will have passed for us to take any steps about it.

Now, suppose there is no indictment; suppose there is no presentment, and suppose the summonses or subpænas are quashed, what then? We do not know any more then than we We want to know from the Attorney-General under what law he has been proceeding. Therefore I think I have There would be such a delay that it answered the question. would be impossible for us to do anything. If there is no indictment and no presentment, then we do not know under what proceeding the Attorney-General has undertaken this investigation, and we are entitled to know that from the Attorney-General. We are entitled to have the information now, so that we can act on it.

Now, what is the objection to getting this information from the Attorney-General? He is not asked to make any disclosures. I will ask the Senator from Minnesota what is the objection? Is it not a perfectly harmless and inoffensive resolution, worded in the most respectful and reverential way, asking a public officer whether he is not abusing the trust that has been committed to him? I do not charge any abuse of that trust. I do not charge him with misuse of his power. He may be acting in pursuance of law. Have we not a right, as a branch of the legislative department, to demand of any public officer whether or not he is acting in accordance with a law that Congress has passed, and if he is so acting to give us the law under which he proceeds?

Mr. CLAPP. The Senator has asked me questions. I agree with him that it a harmless resolution, and I go a step further with the suggestion that it is absolutely an ineffectual resolu-In the first place, of course we may demand it, but I do not believe the Attorney-General is required to tell us what law he is proceeding under. I do not think he is required to answer this resolution. It seems to me it is a mere barren inquiry.

That is my objection to passing it.

Mr. RAYNER. Will the Senator from Minnesota permit me to ask him whether the inquiry of the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] the other day was a barren inquiry, whether or not the Attorney-General had advised the President that the Steel Company and the Tennessee Coal and Iron Company had a right to consolidate? Was that a barren inquiry? It is now before the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. CLAPP. In my humble judgment it was a barren inquiry.

Mr. RAYNER. I do not agree with the Senator from Minne-

Mr. CLAPP. I voted to send it there for certain reasons, which some day I propose to put in the RECORD. It struck me then that it was a barren inquiry, and I believe the experience, when we hear from the committee, will further support that suggestion.

Mr. RAYNER. I am on the committee, and I can not anticipate what the action of the committee will be. I know what my action will be. It will never be a barren inquiry if I have anything to do with it, I assure you; never.

Do you tell me that the Senate can not compel an officer of the United States to give legitimate information to this body? This was argued in full by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON] the other day, and an unanswerable argument was presented by him in this body on that subject. Are we perfectly powerless in dealing with officers virtually of our own creation, so that we can not ask them any questions-lawful questions? And if they decline to answer them, have we not any power over them to compel them to do anything? Are we perfectly powerless in the premises? When we ask any officer of the Government, high or low, in any of these departments, any question in connection with the performance of his public functions, can he come here in defiance of this body and say he will not answer you, and are we perfectly powerless to make him give an answer? I will never accede to that proposition until the Senate so determines.

Mr. CLAPP. I would not want to remain silent under the suggestion, so broadly made, that the the Senate has no right to make any inquiry of an officer, and would in all cases be powerless if an officer refused to respond to such an inquiry. My point is that there are inquiries which can be made, and have been made, which the officer is not obliged to answer, which he could treat just as President Cleveland treated the request for papers in the case referred to the other day in the argument of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON]. This falls, in my judgment, within that classification. We can not compel the Attorney-General, in my humble opinion, to tell what passed between him and the President, nor can we compel him to give us his opinion as to what particular law he is proceeding under. That is why it seems to me it is a barren inquiry.

Mr. RAYNER. Mr. President, I am not asking for any information as to what took place between the Attorney-General and the President. There is no such provision in this resolution. I am not asking for any reasons. I avoided the controversy that is now pending in the Judiciary Committee. I think the Senator from Texas [Mr. Culberson] had a perfect right to ask that question, and I do not think the President had any right on earth to tell the Attorney-General not to answer. That is my judgment, but, nevertheless, I avoided that contro-I am not asking the Attorney-General for any reasons. I am simply asking him for a perfectly harmless piece of information as to what law of the United States he is proceedingunder in the circuit of New York when he is bringing witnesses from all over the country in the investigation for libel in the federal circuit. Does not the Senator from Minnesota agree with me that the federal courts have no jurisdiction in cases of libel outside of the District of Columbia, aside from the reservation question they are now raising? Is there any doubt about that proposition?

Mr. CLAPP. Offhand, perhaps I am rather inclined to think the Senator may be correct on that proposition.

Mr. RAYNER. The Senator will be better satisfied after he has examined the authorities, because there never has been any controversy about it. They have no jurisdiction. What law is he proceeding under in New York? He is proceeding because these papers have been circulated upon a government reservation, I suppose. If there is such a law, that is the only law that he is proceeding under. Let us have the law, and then we will see what to do with it. What is the objection? I will accept what the Attorney-General tells us. I am satisfied he will give us this information. I am satisfied you will get the informa-tion. Therefore, Mr. President, I simply ask for the passage of an order that is in line with precedent. That is all. there is anything objectionable in the order or resolution, I am willing to eliminate it, but it has been done over and over again in the Senate. Public officers have been called upon to furnish information to the Senate, and this is the first case of which I know that there has been any refusal. I say, therefore, that the Senate has the right. It is not a partisan question; it is not a political question at all. I have no feeling in the matter and surely no partisanship. It does not embody any attack upon the President, so that it might divide the President's friends and the President's enemies. I make no attack whatever upon the Attorney-General. He may be proceeding in the strict line of his official duty. I am asking him simply in a respectful way for information, but if he does not give us the information, then the Senate can afterwards determine what to do about the matter. That is the question which is now under discussion by the Judiciary Committee of the Senate.

Mr. DOLLIVER. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. RAYNER. I do. Mr. DOLLIVER. I should like to ask the Senator if the matters to which he refers would not come out very speedily on a motion to quash the subpœnas?

Mr. RAYNER. I did not hear the last part of the Senator's question.

Mr. DOLLIVER. I understood the Senator from Maryland to say that motions were already pending in these courts to quash the subpænas by which these witnesses had been summoned before the grand jury. Now, would not the whole question of the statute under which the Government was proceeding, or the district attorney was proceeding, be developed at once in such a proceeding?

Mr. RAYNER. Not at all; and if it would, I would immediately withdraw this resolution.

I want to say to the Senator from Iowa that the question raised on a motion to quash is a question as to the form of the subpœna.

Mr. DOLLIVER. I understand the Senator from Maryland to simply desire the Attorney-General to advise the Senate what the statutes of the United States are in such cases.

Mr. RAYNER. If there are any, and if there are not

Mr. DOLLIVER. When did it occur that the great lawyers of the Senate had to go to the Attorney-General of the United States to inquire into the contents of the Revised Statutes of the United States?

Mr. RAYNER. It never occurred before, because there has never before been a proceeding that I know of that has not been justified by the Statutes of the United States. That is the answer to that proposition. It never occurred before in the history of the United States.

Mr. DOLLIVER. I will add that it looks to me as though this were a matter entirely for the courts; and I think that a fair consideration of the relations between the judicial and the legislative departments of the Government would not only suggest but would require us to allow the courts to attend to their own matters.

Mr. RAYNER. That would be an unanswerable proposition I were attempting to invade the jurisdiction of the courts, if I were asking the Attorney-General or any district attorney to disclose any information that we have not any right to; but my proposition is that he is proceeding-I will not say it is my proposition--but I believe that he is proceeding outside of the statutes of the United States for the purpose of gaining information that he has not any right to acquire as Attorney-General of the United States.

Mr. DOLLIVER. Then, Mr. President, that matter will appear very speedily in the proceedings before the courts.

Mr. RAYNER. It will not appear at all. If the Senator from Iowa had followed the proceedings of the courts as I have tried to do, he would know that a motion to quash a subpæna because the subpœna or summons is in improper form does not raise the constitutional question that I am raising in the Senate; and that is, whether, under the Constitution of the United States, the district or circuit courts of the United States have any jurisdiction. That motion can be determined without the slightest reference to the constitutional question, and will be so determined.

Mr. DOLLIVER rose.

Mr. RAYNER. One moment; let me finish the answer, if the Senator please. If the court sustains the validity of the summons, or if the court sets aside the summons, it does not at all raise the question that I am discussing.

Mr. DOLLIVER. But it will dispose of the whole contro-

Mr. RAYNER. Exactly. Then, we want to know why the Attorney-General undertook to use the courts of New York and if there was any law to justify him; why he did it, and for what purpose he did it. That is the answer to the Senator's suggestion just now. Now, I want to conclude. Senators will have ample time, and I think I have discussed this proposition as much as is necessary.

This resolution simply asks for information, and it asks for nothing else. It is in the line of precedents in this body. I do not see why a government should be afraid of its own Attorney-General. Why not let the Attorney-General answer this question, instead of letting other persons answer it for him? If the Attorney-General says, "I will not answer your question," very well; we will see what we can do about it; but I apprehend that he will answer it, and I apprehend that just as soon as this resolution goes to him he will give us the process through which he is proceeding.

I therefore say this is in line with hundreds of precedents which the Senate has made by passing resolutions asking for information from public officers. I ask the Senate to maintain its immemorial privileges and to stand by its ancient rights.

That is the proposition here in this case.

Mr. DOLLIVER. Mr. President, I do not desire to be wanting in the wish to maintain the privileges of the Senate, but I believe that a larger question than that is here, and that is to maintain the mutual confidence, respect, and cooperation that is required in this Government between the coordinate branches

Mr. RAYNER. Will the Senator from Iowa allow me to interrupt him'

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. DOLLIVER. I do.

Mr. RAYNER. Just one suggestion, which I forgot and which I now desire to make. The importance of the last point that I made I wish to emphasize just by reading a line. Here is what the President says about it in his message of December 15:

While the criminal offense of which Mr. Pulitzer has been guilty is in form a libel upon individuals, the great injury done is in blackening the good name of the American people. It should not be left to a private citizen to sue Mr. Pulitzer for libel.

I apprehend the word "sue" was inadvertently used, although he had a right to sue him, but-

He should be prosecuted for libel by the governmental authorities.

The President further states:

The Attorney-General has under consideration the form which the proceedings against Mr. Pulitzer shall be brought.

There is the President's message, and we have a right to ask what form has the Attorney-General under consideration in which these proceedings can be brought.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President, I hope the Senate will not pass this resolution; not because the Senate is without power, not because of the terms in which the resolution is couched-for the terms are most respectful and in entire accordance with the precedents of the Senate-but because I think we would be establishing an exceedingly dangerous and troublesome precedent if it should pass.

After all, it amounts to this: The Government of the United States is proceeding in one or more courts in a matter which charges some citizens of the United States with a violation of law. It is not necessary for me to call the attention of Senators to the fact that the duty and function of enforcing the law rests upon the President of the United States, and in order that his hands may be strengthened and that his judgment may be enlightened, Congress has provided an Attorney-General, upon whom it casts the duty of advising the President in relation to the execution of the law; furthermore, putting under the control of the Attorney-General all prosecutions and proceedings in which the United States are interested.

Mr. President, I have listened attentively to the distinguished and capable Senator from Maryland [Mr. RAYNER], whose opinions upon questions of law always challenge my interest and respect; but so far as I have been able to gather from what he has said it amounts to this, that in his opinion, as a lawyer, the Government of the United States is proceeding without adequate authority, and that in order to clear up his mind upon this subject he would like to have information from the Attorney-General of the United States as to the exact legal basis of his case.

I am very free to say, Mr. President, that if I were acting in the capacity of Attorney-General of the United States I would feel constrained to say that it was contrary to the interest of the public to discuss in advance of a trial in court the question as to what the Government's plan was, especially in a criminal case.

Mr. President, if we were to pass this resolution, I can see in my mind's eye how in any case in which any prominent defendant or any very prominent interests were involved some one might raise the same question, and we would be compelled to thrash out here on the floor of the Senate whether or not such case were firmly grounded in the law. I can recall that on one afternoon some five years ago it became my duty as I then saw it—and I have never had any reason to change my mind upon that subject—to announce to the people of the United States, and to all of them at the same time, that it was the intention of the Government to proceed to dissolve what up to that time was the greatest combination of capital that ever was gotten together in the history of the world in order to control the competitive business of the two great railroads of the Northwest. The next day's papers brought from many of the leaders of the bar of the United States a statement that such a prosecution would not lie. It was said that the act upon which the Government proposed to base its proceedings did not apply to the situation; that such a combination was made upon entirely different lines and along lines upon which the great railroad interests of this country had been operating for many years.

Now, imagine, Mr. President, some one introducing a resolution in the Senate of the United States stating that here is a misuse of the power of the Government and the functions of the courts in order to break down and cripple the great railroad interests of the West; imagine the possible effect upon the ultimate decision of that case if, upon a partial argument and acting probably upon sentiment, the Senate of the United States had declared in some form or other that such a proceeding was ill advised and badly founded! Why, Mr. President, we know well enough that there were four justices of the Supreme Court who held that opinion, and the possibility of such action affecting a vote in that court is not very remote.

I understand, Mr. President, the Senator from Maryland yesterday advanced-and he advanced them with great force and with great eloquence—certain propositions, certain reasons why prosecutions such as he referred to do not lie. I had curiosity enough to examine with some care the questions he has raised, and I find authority-and I propose to send it in a memorandum to the desk to be read as a portion of my remarks-I find authority apparently contradicting every one of those legal propositions. Mr. President, I am not alleging-and I want to be distinctly understood on this point—that these authorities and statements correctly state the law; neither am I alleging that the Senator from Maryland has incorrectly stated the law; but what I do allege is that there are authorities on both sides of the propositions the Senator has enunciated; or, in other words, they seem to cover debatable ground.

It is not difficult to understand that the Attorney-General of the United States takes the views expressed in the authorities expressed in this paper to be read from the desk, and has advised the President accordingly. If he has, he is acting well within his rights, and I think it would be an entirely superfluous thing upon the part of the Senate to pass the resolution that has been presented by the Senator from Maryland, which seems to originate in the idea that if he holds such view he may be mistaken.

I ask that the paper I send to the desk may be read. The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

Punishment for libel in the District of Columbia is fixed by statute, section 815 of the code.

The definition of libel is taken from the common law, which is in effect in this jurisdiction by virtue of section 1 of the code. The laws of Maryland are no longer the laws of the District of Columbia; all acts and parts of acts of the general assembly of Maryland, general and permanent in their nature, being repealed by section 1636 of the code, the exceptions contained in that section having no relation to libel and permanent in their nature, being repeated by section 1636 of the code, the exceptions contained in that section having no relation to libel.

The authorities are numerous where officials have been libeled and indictments have been returned therefor.

Even the Government can be libeled, although indictments of that kind are rare in this country. (Newell on Slander and Libel, sec 940.) On page 989 of the same book you will find a precedent taken from Odgers on Libel and Slander, for such an indictment.

In the case of United States v. Hudson and Goodwin (7 Cranch, 32), the Supreme Court of the United States held that the circuit courts in the States had no common-law jurisdiction in cases of libel against the Government of the United States. In that case they tacitly treat the indictment as one good at common law.

In the District of Columbia—the courts here, which are federal courts, have jurisdiction of common-law offenses. (U. S. v. Deforrest, 11 D. C. App., 458.)

This case draws the distinction between the jurisdiction of our courts and the jurisdiction of the circuit courts in the States, as defined in United States v. Eaton (144 U. S., 677.)

The case of In re Dana (7 Benedict, 1) is no longer law, for the reason: First, that the removal of Dana was refused solely on the ground that there was no court in which he could have a trial guaranteed to him by the Constitution of the United States. This was remedied by statute so far as the police court of the District of Columbia is concerned—the police court at that time had no jury system—and the case never could have applied to where an indictment was returned in the supreme court of the District of Columbia, And further, that at that time libel was not punished by statute.

The right of removal to the District of Columbia, has been decided in the case of United States v. Wimsatt (161 Fed. Rep., 586), where the indictment charged a common-law offense in the district court for the southern district of New York; held, that the right of removal rofenses, the for Baltimore County, and that the same was published of and concerning the said David Fowler, judge as aforesaid, and of and concerning the administration of justice by the said Fowler, judge as aforesaid. The court of appeals of Maryland held the indictment good, stating, however, that it was not necessary for them to decide whether or not a person could be indicted for composing and printing scandalous matter of and concerning the administration of justice.

In Maryland libel is not defined by any statute, but the definition of libel is the common law of that State.

There being no question under English authorities that it is an offense at common law to libel the Government, there can be no question that in the State of Maryland it is a criminal offense to libel the Government.

Government.

Mr. KNOX. Now, Mr. President, I want to add to what I have already said—and I only do it again for the purpose of emphasizing my point—that I do not wish the Senate to understand that the propositions of law advanced in the document that has just been read are ones for which I stand, but they emphasize the fact that I could get up an argument between the lawyers of this Senate on any one of those propositions, which would go to demonstrate the absurdity of passing this resolution. Suppose-and this is not an unlikely supposition-that by the force of the eloquence and the logic of the Senator from Maryland we could unanimously be convinced that every one of those propositions of law is erroneously stated and that the ones he stated yesterday were accurately stated and would solemnly so resolve. What would it all amount to if the courts in which the proceedings in question are to be tried should determine otherwise? The court has the power to enforce its de-We have no power at all in the premises. It would not only be a brutum fulmen, but it would make the Senate ridicu-

Mr. RAYNER. Mr. President, I think I can convince the Senator from Pennsylvania in a very few moments that not one of the authorities cited in the document read at the desk has the slightest bearing on the proposition now before the Senate.

Mr. KNOX. That is what I thought.

Mr. RAYNER. I am satisfied that I can assure him as to that. There is no one-and I say this without intending any flattery, because the Senator from Pennsylvania does not require it-there is no one at the American bar whose legal opinion I respect in a higher degree than I do that of the Senator from Pennsylvania, but he is on a line of cases that have no bearing whatever upon the proposition that I discussed before the Senate

Mr. KNOX. May I ask the Senator from Maryland just one question?

Mr. RAYNER. Certainly.
Mr. KNOX. I would rather make a statement to him and then follow it by a question, but I will ask the Senator did he not understand me to say that I do not stand for any of those propositions?

Mr. RAYNER. I did understand the Senator to say that, and I know he does not stand for them. [Laughter.] Now, take this case from my own State with which I am a little familiar. A man named Richardson published a paper and he issued a most infamous publication against a judge of one of our circuit courts. He was indicted, tried, convicted, and imprisoned. I think the court imprisoned him for three years, but the governor afterwards pardoned him. That was an indictment for libeling a judge, not for libeling the State of Maryland, nor for libeling the Government.

The other case that is quoted here, if I recollect arightfor I am answering the cases now upon the spur of the moment, and the Senator from Pennsylvania will correct me if I am wrong-was one of the sedition cases. That was a case of a conviction under the sedition laws, Mr. President. There were half a dozen such cases. I am speaking now from recollection. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Lodge], who knows all about the history of those days, and he will correct me if I am wrong, remembers there were a half dozen convictions under the sedition laws.

Lyons, a Member of the House of Representatives, was tried, convicted, and sentenced to prison. A man named Cooper, if I recollect the name aright, was tried, sentenced, and convicted. We all know what those laws were, and we know how the operation of those laws broke up the Federalist party, and, if recollect aright-and the Senator from Pennsylvania can correct me if I am wrong—the case he quotes was a conviction under the sedition laws. There are no sedition laws now in the United States. I ask the Senator from Pennsylvania, is there any statute now in the United States-for if there is, he knows it, and I will respectfully take his opinion—under which you can punish men for libeling the Government of the United I ask that question of the Senator from Pennsylvania, if he will answer it.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President, I want to be consistent, and shall answer by saying that I am not now practicing law.

Mr. RAYNER. I understand the Senator has answered many a question here without practicing law, and if there was any statute of the United States under which a man could be punished for libeling the Government of the United States, it would be immediately forthcoming. The very fact that the Senator from Pennsylvania answers me that he is not practicing law is a tacit admission that there is no statute of the United States under which a man can be prosecuted for libeling the Government of the United States. I will treat that as an admission from the Senator from Pennsylvania that there is no such law, for the Senator has looked up this question, and if there were any such law as that, he would have furnished it to the Senate this morning. Therefore, if there is no law like that, where do the federal circuits get hold of the common law?

This is another question I will put to the Senator from Pennsylvania, provided he will not give me the same answer: Have the circuit courts of the United States any common-law jurisdiction to punish for libeling the Government? That was an offense under the British law. Would the federal circuits take hold of that proposition? Is the law of Great Britain imported into the federal circuits? Are not the federal circuits governed by laws that have been passed under the Constitution of the United States, and have they any jurisdiction except the jurisdiction conferred upon them by the Constitution of the United States?

The Senator from Pennsylvania can not stand on these authorities, because there is no authority here that contradicts the propositions that I am making.

In the District of Columbia you can indict an individual just the same as you can indict him anywhere else. But I was not arguing this case upon the proceedings in the District of Columbia. There is where the Senator from Pennsylvania, I respectfully submit to him, has made a mistake. I was not arguing this case in reference to the proceedings before the courts of the District of Columbia. I am arguing this case upon the proceedings before the federal districts in New York, and if there is any case which has ever held that the federal districts of the United States have jurisdiction in any case of libel, either against the Government, against the President as such, against any officer of the Government, or against an individual, I should like to see it. It is not upon the authorities which the Senator from Pennsylvania has kindly furnished to the Senate that these propositions depend. If the Attorney-General depends upon these cases, he can be put out of court in about five minutes. It would not take very much of a lawyer to dispose of those cases as not applicable to proceedings in the southern district of New York.

Therefore, Mr. President, I still maintain the original proposition, and I will put it a little stronger than I put it at first. Leaving out the District of Columbia now, for the Senator from Pennsylvania and myself agree upon the fact that you can indict an individual for libel in the District of Columbia-I say that from anything we have heard in the Senate there is nothing whatever to justify the Attorney-General of the United States, at the instance and under the direction of the President, in pursuing the unwarranted investigation that he is pursuing in the federal districts of the State of New York for the purpose, not of getting the indictment of that court, but for the purpose of doing something not embraced in the proceedings which he is undertaking.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, I ask the indulgence of the Senate for a moment. The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX] submitted the case of the Northern Securities Company, as I understand, as a parallel case to this.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. CULBERSON. Certainly.

Mr. KNOX. I can hardly allow that statement to go unchallenged. That was not my intention. What I said in reference to the Northern Securities case was in illustration of what might have happened in another case—not another kind of a case, but another case of a dissimilar kind, of course. I did not think it was necessary to make that statement, because it is apparent upon its face.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, I do not think there is any difference between the Senator and myself with reference to what I stated, or was about to state, and that is that he undertook to liken the statement made by him as Attorney-General as to the procedure he intended to take in the Northern Securities case to the procedure in the case at bar, if I may use such a term in this Chamber.

The Attorney-General in that case, as I understand him, announced to the public that he would take this action. That was a full and frank statement of all the facts necessary for the public and for the Congress, because everyone knew under what law he would proceed and did proceed. But, Mr. President, it might have been inquired in this Chamber, and it might have been inquired by the public, and I have often wondered myself what distinction the distinguished Attorney-General at that time made between the Northern Securities Company merger and other mergers of great railways in the United States against which no proceedings were taken. I will be glad to have some explanation of it even now, if it is compatible with the public interest and the relationship of the Senator to the question.

But, passing from that, Mr. President, the inquiry of the Senator from Maryland [Mr. RAYNER] goes further than anyone has stated here, I believe. The question at the bottom of this whole controversy is whether the processes of the courts and the authority of the Government of the United States are not being used to prosecute people for political offenses. That is the question, or one of them, at least.

Now, let me call the attention of Senators to what the President says about this matter in his message to which the Senator from Maryland a moment ago adverted, and let us see how the President regarded this offense of a great newspaper proprietor, if, indeed, there be any offense:

prietor, if, indeed, there be any offense:

It is therefore a high national duty to bring to justice this vilifier of the American people, this man who wantonly and wickedly and without one shadow of justification seeks to blacken the character of reputable private citizens and to convict the Government of his own country in the eyes of the civilized world of wrongdoing of the basest and foulest kind, when he has not one shadow of justification of any sort or description for the charge he has made. The Attorney-General has under consideration the form in which the proceedings against Mr. Pulitzer shall be brought.

The President not only says that this is an offense against individuals, but that it is an offense against the "American people" and against the "Government" of the United States to have made the publications referred to. Under which of these phases is the Attorney-General of the United States proceeding? Is he prosecuting in good faith a charge against Mr. Pulitzer for defaming private individuals only, as alleged, or is he proceeding against him for the double purpose of attempting to protect individuals and to punish him for libeling the American people and the Government of the United States represented, of course, as we deal with those things here now, by the President?

The Senator from Maryland stated yesterday that libeling the Government was not an offense at common law, and he was right. It was made an offense by statute in England, commencing, I believe, in the reign of George IV. I have here the authorities, which could be cited. The District of Columbia is excluded by general consent in this discussion. They are proceeding in Indianapolis; they are proceeding in New York under the style of the case of "The United States v. Some Publishing Company." What are they attempting to do? is what we want to know. Are they attempting to prosecute Mr. Pulitzer for an offense against individuals, or against the whole American people, or the Government?

In the case of Hudson, reported in 7 Cranch, it was decided that the courts of the United States have no common-law jurisdiction in cases of libel against the Government of the United States; and the reasoning in that case further goes to the effect that there is no law in the United States, common or satutory, by which the Government can be libeled. No statute exists in this country on the subject since the repeal of the sedition act.

So, Mr. President-and that is all I rose for-I suggest that the Senator from Maryland may be probably correct in his suggestion yesterday that the processes of the courts of the United States and the authority of the United States are being used under the impression that there is some law in this country by which men uttering honest convictions of a political character may libel the Government or may be arrested and prosecuted for libel against the Government, and we are entitled to have a frank statement from the Attorney-General upon this question as to what law he is proceeding under. Let him give the Senate the information, in order that, if he is attempting to establish a proceeding of the latter kind, we may know it and take whatever steps may be necessary to arrest it by repealing any law that may be in existence on the subject.

Mr. RAYNER. Mr. President, I wish to ask the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. Knox] if he has not made an entirely wrong quotation from the Maryland case? I find no such quotation. Is the Senator from Pennsylvania on the floor? I find no such quotation at all. This appears to be a statement of law, by whom I do not know. There is no such quotation that I can find in the Maryland reports. In the case of Richardson, I think that is a mistaken quotation. I thought so when I

I want to say only one word, and then I shall be through.
I saved myself from all these authorities yesterday. They have no bearing upon the case. Now, let me get to the final proposition, and this answers everything that the Senator from Pennsyl-I admit that the court of the District of Columbia has jurisdiction if the President goes before it as an individual. If the President as an individual, either personally or in the performance of his duty, conceives that he has been criminally libeled, he can go to the supreme court of the District of Columbia and ask for an investigation before the grand jury just in the same way that any other individual can. Any man can do so if he is falsely charged with crime or corruption in or out of office. The Maryland case held that it could be so charged where he was in office-he was a judge of one of the courts. His office gives him no special standing in court, and he has not by reason of his office the least right to invoke the jurisdiction of the court, and there is not a single authority that has been quoted which affects a single proposition that I have submitted to the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Lodge] to refer the resolution to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. RAYNER. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. LODGE (after having voted in the affirmative). I ask if the Senator from Georgia [Mr. CLAY] has voted?
The VICE-PRESIDENT. He has not voted.

Mr. LODGE. I have a general pair with that Senator—Mr. KEAN. I suggest to the Senator from Massachusetts that he transfer his pair to my colleague [Mr. Briggs], who is necessarily absent.

Mr. LODGE. I understand a pair has been transferred to the junior Senator from New Jersey. I transfer my pair to the Senator from Washington [Mr. Ankeny], and will let my vote stand. Mr. KNOX (after having voted in the negative). I desire to

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WARREN. I ask the Senate to resume the consideration of House bill 23464, being the legislative, and so forth, appropriation bill.

By unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 23464) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1910, and for other purposes.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, the Committee on Appropriations considers the vote of yesterday a significant one, and that committee, not only willing but anxious always to construct a bill and so conduct it as to receive the approval of the Senate, or a majority thereof, feels that before proceeding further the Senate should know its intentions.

In view of the vote upon the salary of the Speaker, it is presumed that those who voted to reduce it desire also to reduce those salaries which lie parallel with it; for instance, those of the Vice-President, the Chief Justice, and the associate justices of the Supreme Court. For that reason the committee feels that it should offer amendments reducing the salary of the Vice-President to $15,000, of the Chief Justice to $15,000, and of the associate justices to $14,500 without any intention of moving to reduce the salary of the President or of the judges of the circuit and district courts.

In view of this reduction, and in view of the fact that the Cabinet officers and the President are provided with horses and carriages, I earnestly hope that the Senate may allow to the Speaker and the Vice-President the sum proposed by the committee, $5,000 added to this salary of $15,000, for the purchase of horses, carriages, and other vehicles.

Mr. BAILEY. I did not, perhaps, correctly understand the Senator from Wyoming, but I understood him to say that the committee has no purpose of moving to reduce the proposed committee has no purpose of moving to reduce the proposed salary of the President from $100,000 to $75,000. Did I correctly understand the Senator?

Mr. WARREN. That is correct. Of course it is with the Senate to change it if it sees fit. But the committee do not think it best to offer any reduction to that sum at this time.

Mr. BAILEY. The only suggestion I have to offer in reply to that statement is that the President's proposed salary can better stand a reduction than any of the others, because the President is the only official concerned by these increases who has been able to save anything out of his salary, and it seems to me he could better submit to a reduction than the other officials.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the next amendment passed over.

The SECRETARY. On page 30, after line 7, it is proposed to

For purchase, driving, maintenance, and care of carriage or other vehicle, and of horses, for use of the Speaker, $5,000.

Mr. BAILEY. I move to strike out the words "or other vehicle."

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Texas proposes an amendment, which will be stated.

Mr. BAILEY. One moment. The Senator from Idaho has a motion to submit, and I yield to him.

Mr. BORAH. I understand that the question is on the adoption of the amendment contained in lines 8, 9, and 10, on page 30, as a whole.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That is the pending question. Mr. BORAH. Upon that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Texas proposes an amendment to the committee amendment.

Mr. BAILEY. My motion of course would take precedence of the other motion, because if the clause is to remain in the bill, it ought to be perfected before a motion to strike it out is I therefore renew my motion, intending if it is adopted to vote against the whole paragraph.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Texas proposes an amendment, which will be stated.

The Secretary. In the committee amendment, in line 9, strike out the words "or other vehicle."

Mr. WARREN. With reference to the amendment, I will say that I yield to no one, not even the Senator from Texas, in love of the horse. I always drive a horse where I can.

The Senator alluded yesterday to some ranch possessions in which I am interested where we raise horses. I may say to him that it has become necessary in the ranch business to use automobiles for many purposes, including that of hunting lost horses, because it is a matter of speed and economy. At the present quotation of prices of automobiles given us for the next season they are relatively cheaper than horses, cheaper to maintain, and it is in the interest of the Government that so fast as we may be able to use automobiles to advantage in place of horses we should adopt them.

As to the part of the remarks of the Senator from Texas regarding danger, there certainly would be no more danger in the hands of the Speaker and Vice-President than there is now from their use by men and women who now own automobiles and are bound to continue using them.

Mr. CARTER. I should like to ask the Senator if he finds automobiles useful in herding sheep? [Laughter.]

Mr. WARREN. That is rather a personal question, but I may say that when sheep get scattered in a storm and we would wear out and possibly kill horses in finding them, we drive in a day an automobile 150 or 200 miles (away beyond the capacity and strength of the horse) and discover them, thus saving them, where otherwise they would become the prey of wolves or would perish for lack of care.

Mr. BAILEY. The Senator from Wyoming has a perfect right, if it suits either his taste or his pocketbook, to buy and use automobiles on his own ranch, and if his horses, either hitched or loose, take fright, that is their owner's own concern. But the suggestion I made yesterday, and which seems pertinent here and pertinent everywhere, is that no man has a right to use a vehicle on a public highway that is calculated to jeopardize the safety of other people who have a right to use that highway. I think there is not a Senator here or anyone elsewhere who does not know that it is a matter of daily occurrence for horses to become frightened and many serious accidents to occur in consequence of using automobiles on the public highways.

I do not complain very much where they are used in a city, because horses which are also used in our cities become ac-customed to them and seldom take serious fright at them, and yet in this city, and in every other one, it is an occasional occurrence that a serious runaway is produced by some horses taking fright at automobiles.

I am not myself inclined to have the Government patronize any particular line of industry, but if the argument which the Senator from Wyoming has advanced here in opposition to the motion which I have made is to prevail, then the Government of the United States must send all of its horses to pasture to die of neglect and old age and must supply every need it has to go and come by the automobile. In other words, the Senator from Wyoming serves notice on the American farmer that this is to become a horseless age-

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President— Mr. BAILEY. Let me finish the sentence. Because if the Government of the United States finds it to its interest and to its convenience to employ the automobile instead of the horse, then every citizen of the United States must ultimately find it to his interest and to his convenience. Now, I yield to the Senator.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator must not undertake to misrepresent me on that point.

Mr. BAILEY. The Senator from Texas does not undertake to misrepresent anybody, and the Senator from Wyoming ought not to suggest that the Senator from Texas does so.

Mr. WARREN. I withdraw that, and say that the Senator has evidently entirely misunderstood what I said. There perhaps is just as much necessity for horses now as heretofore, and this fact is best proved by the condition of the horse market. As against all the growing use of automobiles, horses get higher and higher in price every year. I would take nothing from the horse except that part of the business that can be better and cheaper done with an automobile. I would certainly do nothing against the farmer, as I am one and always have been, and as to his product, the horse, I have always taken pride in furnishing what little money I could get to propagate and raise the best, and oftentimes to my loss rather than profit.

So I must not be understood by the Senator from Texas as meaning that we are infringing upon the use of the horse. The business of the country is increasing every day, and even if we are not employing horses to do all kinds of transportation business, the market is good for horses. The more automobiles we have put into use in recent years, the higher the market for horses has gone.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, that is a singular course of

Mr. WARREN. I may say that it was the same when the general use of electricity commenced. We use many times more gas now than we did before we had electricity, because there is more use accorded to the two. It is the same with automobiles and horses. If the Senator has bought horses lately, he knows that they are higher to-day than they were a year ago, and that they were higher a year ago than the year before.

Mr. BAILEY. The Senator from Texas has bought horses within a year, and the Senator from Texas does not recall a year since he reached his majority when he has not bought and The Senator from Texas can bear testihas not sold horses. mony to the statement of the Senator from Wyoming that he often sells them for less than it costs to raise them. The Senator says that is his experience. Then, Mr. President, with a loss chargeable against the industry, surely the Senator does not want to aggravate that loss to the American farmer by supplying demands with machines which are now supplied by horses

The Senator from Wyoming has suggested what to my mind is the most remarkable argument ever advanced in a legislative assembly. That argument is that the more rapidly you can displace an article the higher its value advances. He says the more automobiles you employ the higher the price of horses

Mr. WARREN. I do not state it in theory; I state the fact, and the Senator will not controvert it that it is the fact. It is not the theory but the fact. We had horses on street cars until a few years ago. Now, it is all electricity, and yet horses have not gone out of general use, and are higher in price now than they were before they were displaced as the motive power for street cars.

Mr. BAILEY. But they are not so high as they would be if the use which they formerly supplied was not now supplied by other kinds of motive power. If it were still true that we had a demand against the horse supply of the country to provide for all the street cars and the other uses which electricity now supplies, the price of horses would be such that the Senator from Wyoming would not be compelled to admit in the Senate that he has been unwise enough to raise them at a loss; but, on the contrary, the Senator from Wyoming and all other farmers like him would be able to calculate a profit on the horse department of their farms

Mr. WARREN. Has the Senator from Texas always made money in raising horses?

Mr. BAILEY. The Senator from Texas has not always made money raising horses. The Senator from Texas spends all of his spare time and all of his spare money-and sometimes spends money he can not well afford to spare-in trying to improve the horse stock of his State. The Senator from Texas believes that next to the dog the horse is man's best friend. The Senator from Texas believes that the horse is the noblest of God's dumb creatures, and he does not want to see him supplanted with a senseless machine.

As far as I am concerned, I think the people had better travel a little slower and go the old way, rather than to travel so fast and not go the safe way. If gentlemen want to use an automobile and take the risk of what it may do, for sometimes I understand it turns upside down and sometimes catches the occupant in the turn-

Mr. WARREN. And sometimes horses run away. Mr. BAILEY. Horses run away, I grant that; but the horse only runs away when a man mistreats him or does not know how to use him. All the accidents with a horse are traceable to the folly or mismanagement of the man. But I am told that the accidents of these machines are sometimes unavoidable. I am told that they sometimes "skid." I do not know exactly what that means, but I have an idea. Then I am told that they sometimes "turn turtle," by which I understand that the topside goes down to the bottom and the bottomside comes up top.

If the Senator or a citizen chooses to use them on his own ranch or on his own premises, I would be the last man to interfere with him; but I do not think he has a right to go on the public highway and endanger the lives of men, women, and children by the use of a machine that frightens the means of locomotion employed for a thousand years.

The horse has an ancient and a prescriptive right to the highway, and I do not think he ought to be driven from it by these machines. I know more than one man who has been compelled to sell his horses and carriages because their wives were afraid to use them on the highways where these machines are

I have read one of the articles in one of the magazines which seems to be devoted to advertising automobiles that they are going to emancipate the horse from the drudgery of the great cities. It may be that they will, but when they do it will increase the drudgery of the farmer in the country. When the farmer has no market for his horse which he has raised, and has no market for his corn and his oats and his hay to feed him, the horse may be emancipated from drudgery, but what is to become of the American farmer?

I believe that at least the Government ought to set the example of traveling the old way, and let us travel by things that I breathe and feel rather than by machines that neither breathe nor feel and yet produce much mischief in the world.

Mr. DIXON. Mr. President, before the vote is taken on this special item regarding horses and carriages for the use of the Speaker, I should like to ask the Senator from Wyoming to what extent in the pending legislative appropriation bill carriages and vehicles and means of transportation are provided for other officials here in the city of Washington. What other government officials have an appropriation to cover matters of this kind?

Mr. WARREN. All of the heads of departments have provision for the purchase and maintenance of horses and vehicles, and the President, of course, and I think some of those who are not heads of departments, but busy men of the departments.

Mr. GALLINGER. The District Commissioners and the Commissioner of Pensions.

Mr. WARREN. Yes; the District Commissioners and the Commissioner of Pensions, and a number of others. It seems to me rather singular that we have not heretofore provided for the Speaker and Vice-President, considering the amount of work they have to do in traveling, and considering, on the other hand, the number of vehicles that we furnish for the departmental work.

Mr. FLINT. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. DIXON. I do. Mr. FLINT. I wish to ask the Senator from Wyoming one question before he takes his seat, if he will permit me. there any carriages or vehicles other than those for the Vice-President and the Speaker contained in this bill that have not been in previous bills?

Mr. WARREN. Oh, no. In answering the Senator I will say that those are the only two. All the others have been in former bills, and for that matter I found them there when I came to the Senate over eighteen years ago, and I assume it is a very old practice to accord horses, carriages, and so forth, to Cabinet officers and others.

Mr. DIXON. This is what I wanted to say. I do not believe in the Government being cheap or niggardly in the matter of the payment of its public officials, but I do believe that items providing for payment outside of the regular salaries certainly lead to abuse and to just criticism. I think if we are going to pay the Vice-President and the Speaker and the other officials enumerated in the bill more money than they are now receiving, it should appear on the face of the salary. I believe it is open to just criticism to pay carriage hire and automobile hire for officials in Washington. I think it is open to just as much criticism as if we paid house rent and grocery bills and servants' wages. If we are going to increase salaries, let us give it to them in a lump sum on the face of it and cut down these appropriations which are used in a different way from that on the face of the law.

As I notice around the city, I think the civil list fund that is being gradually built up from year to year on these appropriation bills, not only for high officials, but for those lower in the scale, is becoming quite an item. I remember that four or five years ago the House on one of the legislative appropriation bills inserted a provision that carriages and automobiles used in the departments should have letters printed on the side 4 inches long.

Mr. HEMENWAY rose.

Mr. DIXON. I think the Senator from Indiana was chairman of the Committee on Appropriations of the House at that time.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I had the honor, if it was an honor, of drafting the provision that carriages for the heads of departments should have no letters on them, but carriages used by government officials other than heads of departments should have printed the particular department to which the vehicle belonged. There are quite a number of carriages other than those used by heads of departments.

Mr. WARREN. By the Library, for instance. Mr. HEMENWAY. We found, for instance, the Library. The law requires the lettering on a carriage for the use of the Library and on a carriage for the use of the Treasury Department or the Interior Department or whatever it might be. There are quite a number of carriages used by others than heads of departments. The carriages used by heads of departments, of course, have no lettering of any kind on them. is no statute requiring such lettering of them.

Mr. DIXON. At the suggestion of one of the Senators on this side, and I think it is very pertinent, I should like to ask the Senator from Indiana why Congress in its wisdom provided that this thing should be done? What was the occasion for it?

Mr. HEMENWAY. There were so many carriages in use. The Senator remembers that we had great difficulty in ascertaining how they got them, the fund out of which they were paid for, and where we got below the head of a Department we made them brand the carriages belonging to the Government used for official purposes. As I remember the statute, we required that they should be used only for official purposes, so that in the case of anyone using them for social purposes it would be seen in a minute that it was a carriage intended only for official use.

Mr. DIXON. I should like to ask the Senator whether or not in good faith that act of Congress was carried out by these officials, it providing that the carriages should not be used for social purposes?

Mr. HEMENWAY. I could in turn ask the Senator if other acts of Congress were carried out in good faith by heads of departments. The Senator possibly has been here long enough to know that in the departments they have a little scheme that they call "short-circuiting" Congress, and if there is a department of the Government that does not try to short-circuit Congress every year I have never been able to discover it.

Mr. BACON. What does "short-circuiting" mean?

Mr. HEMENWAY. That is their term for it. It means to use money appropriated by Congress for some purpose other than the purpose for which it was appropriated.

Mr. DIXON. In connection with what the Senator from Indiana has just said, notwithstanding that prohibition in the legislative appropriation bill four or five years ago, I think it is a matter within the common knowledge of every Senator in this Chamber that there is hardly a social function or a reception when up and down the streets of Washington you do not notice from half a dozen to a dozen carriages with the government brand on one side, used purely for social purposes, not for the official work of the heads of the departments or the other officials for whom these appropriations are made. I think it leads to a bad condition of affairs. I do not speak of the President, who is the official head of the Nation. If in this case we are going to give the Speaker increased compensation, let us do it, but not in this roundabout, circuitous manner.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I want to say that I entirely agree with the Senator from Montana [Mr. Dixon] in regard to this matter. If we are to vote to give $5,000 additional to the Speaker, I would very much prefer that it should be given to him as salary

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. BACON. I do. Mr. WARREN. Will the Senator allow me to make a statement?

Mr. BACON. I will. Mr. WARREN. Of course, he has no horses and carriages now; and this appropriation is for purchase and maintenance. Hereafter it will be only for maintenance. It will be a small sum; it would not be an addition of $5,000 to the salary except in one year.

Mr. BACON. What the Senator says does not go to the root of the matter with me. I have never favored the giving of carriages and horses to public officials. I am saying nothing now about the President. There may be reasons why there should be an exception made in that case. I suppose the law has existed for a long time. The practice of making appropriations for carriages and horses for heads of departments and other officials which will be stated by the Secretary.

The Secretary. A bill (S. 6484) to establish postal savings banks for depositing savings at interest, with the security of the Government for repayment thereof, and for other purposes.

Mr. CARTER. I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Montana asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily The Senator Without objection, it is so ordered. from Georgia will proceed.

Mr. BACON. I have never, myself, favored it. 1 think, of course, there are certain vehicles which are needed in the business of the Government. We need certain vehicles in the legislative department, but not for the individual use of Senators and Representatives, and none have ever been provided for Senators and Representatives. We have to have vehicles in carrying documents and delivering the mail and other matters connected with the business of the Senate and House. In the same way I am not only willing but desirous that the departments shall have vehicles necessary for the transaction of their business. But carriages for the riding of the heads of the departments is nothing more than simply a distinction. It is practical, of course, but it is not given to them because of business. The head of a department does not need a carriage to transact his business. His business is in his office and there is where he stays. The only time when he has need of a carriage in his official business, so far as I know, is when he goes to a Cabinet meeting, which is within a very short distance of his

A Senator or a Representative has ten times as much need for a carriage as the head of a department, because we have to go continually, and I go, paying 25 cents for six tickets on a street car. I presume that is what most of the Senators do when they go on business, I mean. Of course, there are Senators who have other means of transportation, but I believe nine-tenths of the Senators and nine-tenths of the Representatives, doing ten times as much traveling about on official business as the head of a department, travel on a street car when I say, while these appropriations have been the custom ever since I have been in the Senate, it has been one which has never I do not believe myself, in this republican met with my favor. Government in setting up an officer and equipping him with something to indicate the importance of his office, or to put around him the badge of position. If he has not enough salary, I am ready to give him more. I do not say that with reference to the Speaker of the House of Representatives in particular. I would vote against each one of the appropriations for a carriage for any official other than the President of the United States.

I agree with my friend the Senator from Texas [Mr. BAILEY] to a large extent in his criticisms on automobiles. I am not my self partial to them, and I think there is great truth in the fundamental proposition that automobiles or anything else ought not to be allowed upon the public highways to endanger those who are in the common use of the public highways. At the same time, we can not stand in the way of the march of events. If the Senator from Texas were proposing to regulate automobiles in this city, as I think they ought to be regulated, to keep them within a proper rate of speed, I should be with

I am going to vote against the entire proposition, and therefore I do not think I will vote against the proposition for the use of automobiles by the Government if the vehicles are going to be allowed. The elimination of the few, or one possibly, which would be used by the Speaker, would not affect the general question. I want to go to what I consider the material matter. I shall vote against the amendment which gives any sort of vehicle—horse vehicle or machine—and I would be very glad of an opportunity to vote against giving it to any other officer of the Government for his personal use.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Mr. President—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. BACON. I do.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I do not know that an amendment has been offered to the bill striking out all carriages. I tried very hard as a Member of the House of Representatives to strike out all carriages. Now that we give them to Cabinet officials and various other officials of the Government, the sole question on this bill is whether we are going to put the Vice-President and the Speaker of the House of Representatives in possession of a carriage, making them equal with the various Cabinet officials, or whether we are going to continue to allow the heads of the departments to enjoy the luxury of a carriage and the Speaker and the Vice-President either to buy carriages of their own or walk or ride on street cars?

I do not remember of any very energetic effort on the part of either the House or Senate in the last three or four years to strike out carriages from this bill. I do remember very distinctly that an active effort was made to do it some five years ago, and that we could not secure the assistance and cooperation of either body of Congress, and carriages for the various heads of departments were continued in the bill. So, speaking for the committee, I simply call attention to the fact that I believe that the presiding officer of each body, the House and the Senate, are of equal importance, in fact more important, with greater duties to perform than the various heads of the departments, and that the time has come when they ought to be treated with the same consideration the heads of the departments are treated.

I shall be very glad to vote for an amendment to strike out all carriages if you want them stricken out. On the other hand, if they are not stricken out, I shall vote to give the Vice-President and the Speaker of the House of Representatives a carriage. Am I taking too much of the Senator's time?

Mr. BACON. No; the Senator is speaking to the point. I shall not interrupt him.

Mr. HEMENWAY. The question of salaries, questions of entertainment, and so forth, have been discussed. I am not prepared to say whether it is right or wrong. If nobody got dinners until I gave them, we would be a little shy on dinners. I have been here some fourteen years. I think I have given two dinners in that time. Some other Senators, more fortunate, have given many dinners. We know that our Cabinet officials give dinners. We know that they are expected to give them, right or wrong. We know these things have grown up by

I am not prepared to say that our constituents do not like to have it done. It is very nice to say to the people that we want to live the simple life, and go back with our stories as to how we live here. I think they question our statements when they read the newspapers, and think that possibly we are simply trying to play to some one's prejudice.

I insist that we either ought to vote in these carriages for the Vice-President and the Speaker of the House of Representatives, or we ought to vote out the carriages for the various heads of the departments.

Mr. CLAY. Mr. President, will the Senator let me ask him a question?

Mr. HEMENWAY. Yes. Mr. CLAY. Will the Senator point out in this bill any amount that it carries for carriages for Cabinet officers and other department officials?

Mr. HEMENWAY. The Senator is upon the Committee on Appropriations, and no doubt is just as well informed as I am. Mr. CLAY. I am talking of this bill.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I am answering the Senator's question. He is upon the Committee on Appropriations. He is a very active, energetic, intelligent member of that committee, and I have no doubt he knows just as well where the appropriation for carriages is carried as I do, and he also knows that an amendment of this bill prohibiting their use altogether would be just as effective as it would be in the sundry civil bill, the deficiency bill, or any other bill you may want to put it on.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President—
Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I have yielded to the Senator from Indiana [Mr. Hemenway] for an inquiry, and I have not had the question propounded, as I understand it.

Mr. SCOTT. Will the Senator from Georgia yield to me for

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from West Virginia?

Mr. BACON. For a question, I will; but if the Senator wants to discuss the matter, I think he ought to take his own time

Mr. SCOTT. I simply want to make a statement. Does the Senator from Georgia know that we appropriate for horses and carriages for the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, and that one of them stated before the District Committee that he used one of the carriages for his own use?

Mr. BACON. Then he ought not to have done so.
Mr. SCOTT. Now, does the Senator want to make the VicePresident and Speaker of the House of Representatives walk, when we furnish carriages to the Commissioners of the District of Columbia?

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I hope I may be allowed to proceed, at least for a moment. Then I will yield to the Senator. Mr. BAILEY. Before the Senator from Georgia proceeds

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Texas?.

Mr. BACON. I yield for an inquiry.
Mr. BAILEY. I really intended to interrupt the Senator for correction instead of an inquiry.

Mr. BACON. That is always in order.
Mr. BAILEY. The Senator from Georgia complained a while ago that by insisting that the Government should use horses instead of automobiles I was standing in the way of progress.

Mr. BACON. No, no. Mr. BAILEY. Well, the Senator said we could not resist the march of progress. I simply want to file a protest against any suggestion that a country is making much progress when it is taking from the farmers one of the chief articles of value produced by them and concentrating that operation in the great cities. I do not believe that is progress. I do not want to be put in the attitude of standing in the way of the march of

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I quite agree with the Senator from Texas in his view in regard to this matter. Possibly the word "progress" was not the proper word. I meant we could not stand in the way of those things which seem to be the trend of public opinion and public action and practice. Automobiles seem to have come to stay; I am sorry for it. I wish one had never been invented or manufactured. The Senator from Texas can not go further than that I am sure. I mean. While I would be very glad to debar the automobile, there seems to be such a general concensus of opinion in favor of it, such a general use of it, that it seems to be impossible to That is the progress I mean, and the only progress to which I refer.

Now, Mr. President, to come back to the matter of carriages, I want it most distinctly understood that in the opposition which I make to this amendment there is no disposition on my part to in any manner depreciate the office of the Speaker or to deprive him of anything which anybody else of his rank ought to have. If it be true that the granting of vehicles for their personal use-I am not talking about business use, but personal use—if it be true that the granting of vehicles for their personal use to heads of departments is an improper thing to do, then we ought not to say that for that reason we ought to give one to the Speaker of the House, or half a dozen to the Speaker of the House, as the case may be. The thing to do is to correct that which is improper, and not say that an equality must be secured by doing another thing to make it correspond to something that is admitted to be improper, but let us do away with that which is improper.

I repeat, Mr. President, that I am not opposed to either the District Commissioners or the heads of departments having vehicles which they need in their official work. It may be that the District Commissioners, having to cover a great deal of territory and to look after a great many things, have need for vehicles in their work; and if so, it is proper that they should have them; but it is not proper that, having vehicles furnished to them for their official work, they should be used in their personal work. If that is true as to the Commissioners of the District, why is it not also true of the heads of departments? If for their official work vehicles are given to heads of departments, why should they use them for their personal convenience any more than the commissioners should do?

I should like to ask the Senator from Indiana [Mr. HEMENway] one question. The Senator from Indiana was formerly the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations in the other House, and I suppose it was at that time that the movement was begun to put labels on government carriages. Why was it that the labels should be put upon the carriages for a subordinate official, but not for the head of a department, if it was true that the carriage was needed for his official work and not for his personal use?

Mr. HEMENWAY. It was generally understood that the carriage of a Cabinet official was to be used for social as wellas business purposes under the prevailing rule in the departments that the Cabinet officer had to make certain social calls, while the other vehicles were to be used purely for official business, and we undertook to make them use them for official business.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, that emphasizes the point I am making, that they are not for their official use, but for their personal use

Mr. HEMENWAY. If the Senator will permit me, that depends on whether we construe the calls which they make upon the various representatives of other governments as official duties or social duties. That is a question which has been much discussed in Congress. I am not an expert; I am not on the Committee on Foreign Relations, and so I will not undertake to determine whether it is a part of their official duties or not to make these various calls.

Mr. BACON. That may be true as to the Secretary of State, but I do not think it is of any other official, any more than it is of a Senator.

I quite agree with the Senator from Indiana that the head of a department ought not to have a carriage and at the same time a carriage be denied to the Speaker of the House of Representatives. I will go a little further. I will say that the head of a department ought not to be allowed a carriage unless a Senator is allowed one. I think a Senator is the equal in every particular in rank, importance, and dignity with the head of a department. I am not, however, in favor of giving carriages to Senators, and for the reason that I am not in favor of giving carriages to Senators, I am not in favor of giving them to the heads of departments.

Why is it, Mr. President, that the executive department should be the one which should have all the badges and insignia of office in every particular to a greater degree than any other department of the Government? I should like for any Senator here to tell me why the head of a department should have a carriage and a judge of the Supreme Court not have one. should like for anyone to tell me why the Speaker of the House should have a carriage and the Chief Justice have none; and, Mr. President, if we are to run this thing out to its logical conclusion, there must be one of two things, either none ought to have them or all ought to have them, and as all ought not to have them, then, in my judgment, none ought to have them. make the only exception in the case of the President of the United States, and I am ready—the Senator from Indiana says that the requisite votes can not be had—I am ready, and have been ready ever since I have been on this floor, to say that no other official should be provided with a carriage.

I am in favor, Mr. President, of good salaries. I do not think any Senator here will say that in my course in this Senate I have ever been distinguished by as much desire for economy as possibly I ought to have manifested, but I am not in favor in this republican government of setting up an officer and surrounding him with badges and insignia of office. Of course, you ought to know that he is an officer, but I am not in favor of setting him upon a pedestal; I am not in favor of putting him in a chariot and sending him around. He is there in office, not for his benefit. Office is not created in this country for the benefit of the officeholder. He is there to perform certain duties; he ought to be liberally paid for performing them; and that is all. A Cabinet officer ought to be paid a sufficient sum to enable him to have his own carriage, and he is paid enough to have his own carriage. The Speaker of the House ought to be paid enough to have his own carriage, and with a salary of $15,000 he is paid enough, and the same will be true of the Vice-President. In this bill we raise the Speaker's salary, according to the amendment, 25 per cent. I myself did not vote for it, but I acquiesced, of course, in the action of the Senate, and I am not in favor of going further. I think that, instead of adding more carriages to other officials, the thing to do is to return to what I consider to be the proper course-to furnish all the carriages that are needed in official work, let them be branded as official carriages, and then let every officer who wants a carriage or an automobile for social purposes furnish it at his own expense or out of his own salary.

Mr. DIXON. Mr. President, I merely want to add to what I have said that I do not want to be misunderstood as objecting to an item for the Speaker of the House of Representatives and at the same time agreeing to allow the appropriation to stand for 20 other officials in Washington. I notice in this same bill that the Secretary of State is allowed $8,000 for horses and carriages. I notice for another Cabinet officer $3,500 is appropriated. I think the whole plan is wrong. I do not think I overestimate when I say there are 25 horses and carriages with drivers for these different departments used every day in the city of Washington by government officials, from Cabinet officers down to second lieutenants, with footmen and drivers paid for by the United States Government. The practice is all wrong, and I think all these items ought to go out of the

Mr. WARREN. I want to say to the Senator from Montana that I think he is mistaken about those amounts. They are included with other incidental expenses. The $8,000 would be the total appropriation from which that item would be paid.

Mr. DIXON. I read from the bill, on page 47, under the head of "Secretary of State:"

For miscellaneous expenses, including the purchase, care, and subsistence of horses, to be used only for official purposes, repair of wagons, carriages, and harness, rent of stable, telegraph and electrical apparatus and repairs to the same, and other items not included in the foregoing; in all, $8,000.

Mr. WARREN. Those are miscellaneous expenses, of which portion goes to the purpose to which the Senator refers. There are other items.

Mr. DIXON. But the whole purpose of the provision is to appropriate for horses and carriages for the Secretary of State.

Mr. WARREN. The only reason why that is mentioned particularly is because of the misunderstanding that has some-times existed by reason of the fact stated by my colleague on the committee with reference to certain regulations put on by the other House. This was for the purpose of bringing that out prominently, so that it might be seen; but out of that amount of money there are a great many other things to be paid for.

Mr. DIXON. I would say that does not alter the proposition known to every Senator in this Chamber, that every day not one but dozens of government equipages, driven by paid men, are used, not for official purposes, but in doing the social and society "stunt" in the city of Washington.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I want to say that this has not always been the policy of this Government. It has not always been recognized as the right thing. Senators will resember that before possibly a pright that proper that before possibly a pright that the pright this flow. member that before possibly any one of them now on this floor was a Senator a very distinguished man who had been Attorney-

General of the United States was defeated on a nomination for Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States because he had made improper use of a vehicle, using that official vehicle for his personal use, and a sobriquet was attached to his name which, I suppose, will cling to him forever—the word "cabriolet," or something of that kind, which I have forgotten.

Mr. HALE. "Landaulet."
Mr. BACON. There is such a word, though I thought the particular sobriquet was of the class I have mentioned, but possibly the Senator is correct and the word is "landaulet." But I should like to know how many officials of this day would survive the test if that criticism were made upon everyone who uses for social purposes the vehicles furnished by the Government.

Mr. President, I want to emphasize the statement I made in the beginning, that these officers do not need carriages for their official work to one-tenth the degree that any Senator upon this floor needs one for his official work; and while I am not in favor of giving to Senators carriages for their official work, for the same reason I am utterly opposed to giving carriages to the heads of departments, not simply for their official work, but for their social pleasures and uses.

Mr. MONEY. Mr. President, I want to say just a word on this matter. A bill increasing the salaries of the President, the Vice-President, and the Speaker of the House of Representatives was introduced and referred to the Committee on Finance, of which I am a member. I could not see why it went to that particular committee; but it was said it was necessary to have the approval of some committee that it might go as an amendment on the appropriation bill. I took the view in committee, and I have it yet, that we ought not to deal in this matter by indirection. I do not object to a salary of $15,000 for the Speaker of the House and the Vice-President; in fact, I believe that was my proposition in the committee, if I recollect aright. Originally the bill proposed a salary of $25,000. We compromised in the committee on $20,000, but there was no mention made in that bill of any allowance for carriages or anything else. In raising the salary of the President of the United States to $100,000 it was thought proper—and I think it was done on my motion—to add that there should be no further allowance. That was distixctly adopted by the committee on the ground that we should not deal indirectly with appropriations of the public money, but that we should say what the salary should be, and that should be sufficient to cover the other expenses.

Now, as I said, I will very cheerfully vote to give these officers a salary of $15,000, but I will not vote for any extra allowances. On the contrary, I will move at the proper time that no further allowance shall be made to any of these officers, during their incumbency at least. We all know that during the incumbency of the present President we granted him $25,000 for traveling expenses. I recollect that the plea was made that he simply had to have that money to get along, and I recollect also—and I do not believe that there was a solitary man who voted for the appropriation who claimed that it was constitutional. I think they admitted very freely that it was an unconstitutional act; but what are you going to do about it? He had to have more money.

Now, it is said that our President-elect is a very poor man and ought to have $100,000, and that much has been recommended, with the provision that there should be no further allowance. f it takes $20,000 to enable the Vice-President of the United States and the Speaker of the House to perform all their duties, social and professional, let us give them the $20,000 and have none of these extra allowances which lead to repeated innova-tions upon our system and upon the law, which ought not to be tolerated by the Senate, which should deal directly with all questions that come before it.

The pending bill ought to be amended by striking out every provision for carriages and things of that sort. Of course if you wish the salary of the Vice-President and the Speaker to be $20,000, let it be fixed at that amount; but I myself think when these officers get twice as much as any man who sits before them, that ought to be sufficient.

I can not help agreeing with the junior Senator from Texas [Mr. Balley] in the remarks he made yesterday, that there is among officials a great deal too much of this attempt at mere ceremony and ostentatious show in this town. Of course we are progressing. We have progressed with the "Four Hundred," and we have got into a position, socially speaking, where large expenditures are required of rich people; but there is no law in the world, social or otherwise, that calls upon an official, if he is a poor man, to make extravagant expenditures enter-taining. That is not necessary to maintain the dignity of his office; in fact, it rather detracts from than adds to the dignity of the Chief of a great republic like this to say that he must entertain in a style that is suited more to the royalty of Europe.

I am aware that there is a gradual change of opinion going on in the country; that people do not regard the President of the United States any longer as a public servant; and in the current number of a New York weekly magazine the statement is made by the editor in the leading editorial of that journal that there are two great rulers in the world-one of them is Theodore Roosevelt and the other is Wilhelm, the Kaiser. The article goes on to say that both have been rebuked, one by the Reichstag and the other by his Congress; that Wilhelm tamely submitted to his rebuke, but the "ruler of America" did not submit to his rebuke, and was going to resent it; and the editor went on to say that, so far as he was concerned, he was with the ruler. That is getting to be very much the case everywhere. A year ago I said here that from all I could learn a coup d'état by the President of the United States would be welcomed by a large number of newspapers, by some admirals in the navy, and by some generals in the army.

It is time we were getting back, if possible, to something like republican simplicity. I was struck by a remark made by the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. Aldrich] the other day, though not in the Chamber here, that in trying to get access to the President of the French Republic, M. Fallieres, he had to go through more different groups of soldiers and saw more uniforms, more ceremony, and more state than he found at the court of any crowned head in Europe. That is true; but France is not a republic in the genuine sense of the word. It is a militarism, as I have attempted to state forty times when it was brought up as a parallel or as a precedent of anything that is asked for here.

But, Mr. President, it is a singular thing that all over the Christian world to-day and, even farther, in the Mohammedan world also, there is a tremendous tendency toward the freedom of the people, a tremendous effort being made to withdraw from the rules of the country that part of liberty that ought by right to belong to the people; and at the same time in the republics of the world there is a tremendous tendency just the other way, to make continual encroachments upon the power and authority of the people by the executive, the judicial, and sometimes by the legislative branches of the several govern-

This tendency is well recognized.

I will say, in passing, that quite a distinguished English writer upon matters of diplomacy and statecraft has written an article, in which he congratulates the American people that they are shaking off the teachings of George Washington and the trammels of the Constitution, in order to get abreast of the other nations of the world and become a world power with the prominence and, you might say, the preeminence demanded by our enormous resources and population. But that is not a matter of congratulation for an American; and I am very much afraid that some gentlemen quite near the court in this city have had a great deal to do with drawing us away from the teachings of George Washington and from the trammels of the Constitution.

It is quite common now for a state judge to say that it rests with the court to so interpret the Constitution as to make it possible to do the useful and necessary things that have arisen from our progress in civilization; in other words, to sap and undermine it by judicial interpretation and not to consider the Constitution as a strait-jacket for the General Government to prevent its doing what might be considered useful and neces-By whom? By the man who happens to be in the executive chair, whose sole business is to carry out the law, make recommendations from time to time, and inform Congress upon the condition of the country. Whenever the Executive begins to think that the Constitution need not be regarded, there is dislocation somewhere and it is time he should be brought to his

I listened with great interest this morning to the speech of the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. RAYNER] in regard to the resolution which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary. It is out of time now to speak of that; but it is worth while, I think, for me to say what is on my mind while I have gotten to it.

There is no law that anybody here can mention which defines the crime of libel against the Government of the United It can not be said that the American people have been libeled when only three names have been mentioned out of its ninety million. It can not be said that there is any law pre-scribing punishment for libeling the Government, for it does not exist. It can not be said that there is any common-law juris-diction of the United States courts in such cases; and it can not be said that any such common law exists in regard to libel, because it came up after we had seceded from Great Britain, rebelled against her authority, and set up for ourselves.

So I was curious to know, and I wanted the information to see where the Attorney-General could get his authority. But I think, Senators, he would have said that he was forbidden by the Chief Executive to reply. I do not know whether the Chief Executive can construe correctly a statute of the United States or a clause of the Constitution, but if he should be accused of ability properly to do it, I think a fair trial before a competent jury would acquit him of any such offense.

There was also a pleasing rumor going around the Senate here about a month ago, that when this administration had ended the Attorney-General was going to Baltimore to study law [laughter]; but hopes of that have been dashed, I understand, by later declarations. It is very unfortunate that he did not do that some years ago, and certainly it is to be hoped that when he does undertake the study of law he will get a better teacher than he has had for the last four years.

Mr. President, I have gotten off from the pending subject, which I ought not to have done, and I have trespassed upon the indulgence of the Senate. But now, returning to the point, I do not care what the amount of the salary is. I do not want to be illiberal. If you say $20,000, it is all right; but let us not have anything else. This thing of going outside the regular salary in order to give the officeholder a sum of money which he can handle is all wrong. Nobody knows what he is going to do with it, except that he is going to spend the whole sum. Does anybody suppose that $25,000 was spent by the Executive in traveling expenses last year? I do not presume anybody thinks he spent that much. Nobody knows that he has; nobody knows what he has done with it; but there is a supposition that the President spends money very freely whenever he can get his hands on it. I do not say that he does it improperly, but the allowance was made unconstitutionally. I can not say that he knew it was unconstitutional, because I do not believe he knows anything about that, and that would acquit him, I think.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I simply want to say, in answer to the suggestion made by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. HEMENWAY], that there is no disposition upon the part of anyone that I know of to discriminate between the Vice-President and the Speaker, or between the Vice-President and the Speaker and anyone else, so far as these expenses for carriages are concerned; but if those having charge of the bill, knowing where these items are, will give us some information, I will promise that they will have the same opportunity to pass upon all of the items

Mr. HEMENWAY. If the Senator wants the information now—I am sure he understands it as well as I do—a general provision prohibiting the use of carriages by any head of a department or anyone connected with a department, and requiring the return to the Treasury of all unexpended balances of appropriations for that purpose, would reach the kernel.

Mr. BORAH. I will have plenty of time to draw that amendment, and it will be offered.

If the Senator will allow me-Mr. HALE.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Maine?

Mr. BORAH. I do. Mr. HALE. If the Senator will say that no money appropriated by this bill shall be expended for such purposes, coupled with the provision suggested by the Senator from Indiana that unexpended balances of amounts heretofore appropriated shall be returned to the Treasury, that will cover it.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. BORAH. I do.

Mr. WARREN. I do not rise to question the statements made by colleagues on the committee; they are perfectly correct; but I desire to make a suggestion as to the wisdom of the proposition. When the Senator has offered an amendment of that kind and it is adopted, every carriage employed by the Senate, by the Library, and by the departments will be cut out; the mail will have to find its way on foot, and the same is true of the books of the Library.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, there ought to be some way, and that within the minds and knowledge of the committee who are so well experienced and informed on this subject, by which we could detect and individualize and specialize and get at those features which we want out of the bill, and if they are not taken out, it will be because the information is not given to the body and an opportunity given to it to vote on them.

Mr. President, it is not alone because we donate $5,000 to the Vice-President or the Speaker, but it is the principle which is involved in the proposition and the extent to which it will be carried and the result as a matter of final legislation and effect non the history and upon the welfare of our people. We are now to donate $5,000 for carriage hire alone to one officer of this Government, an amount which was paid to a United States Senator for yearly service for twenty-five years in the history of this Republic. We are to donate another $5,000 to another single officer, an amount equal to that which was paid per annum to a United States Senator for years in the history of the Republic. We know very well that these officers can not and will not use that amount of money in the discharge of their official duties. We are simply to donate it for the purpose of enabling them to perform certain social functions, which we are glad to have them perform, if they desire to do so, but which should be performed at the expense of their own purse and not at the expense of the United States.

The Senator from West Virginia suggests that a certain donation was made for the benefit of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia and that they did not utilize it properly, and he says, therefore, Shall we discriminate between the District of Columbia Commissioners and the Speaker or Vice-President? That illustrates the vice of this kind of legislation. When it once gets a foothold, the man who establishes a bad precedent has his precedent in time ratified by law and another precedent established alongside of it in order to equalize all those who propose to do wrong; and after we have established the proposition of carriages for one man we must continue to provide carriages for every single individual engaged in the service of the government of the District of Columbia upon any reasonable basis or fair relationship of one officer to another.

So we must take the commissioners, the Secretary of State, the Secretary of War, their assistants, and all the different Secretaries, and then go to the Representatives and the Senators, for every officer in the employ of the Government in the District of Columbia is just as much entitled to a vehicle to carry him to his place of business or to carry his family to a social function as is any other officer. Where shall we stop? What reason can we assign for stopping? There is only one principle upon which to proceed, and that is to eliminate from this bill and from all other bills which come before the Senate all items appropriating for this purpose money which is in the United States Treasury as the money of the people of the United States and not of the United States Senate.

It is a notorious fact that while we are sitting here legislating $400,000 of the people's money out of the Treasury there is a bread line being fed day by day within the shadow of this Capitol. It is by reason of the fact that the necessaries of life have been raised to such a point that those people are unable by means of anything which is afforded them in the way of an industrial effort to secure the necessaries of life. Yet we vote away $400,000 as if it was money which they did not have to raise and which did not have to come from their efforts and which was not at last visited upon them as a bunden

I am utterly opposed to every part and parcel of this appropriation, both for carriage hire as to the Vice-President and the Speaker and as to all other officials who have been availing themselves of this provision of the law.

ing themselves of this provision of the law.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Mr. President, I have just sent for the last statute enacted on this question.

We have had an annual performance ever since I have been in Congress on the question of carriages, usually at both ends of the Capitol. I think fourteen years ago there were possibly three times as many carriages used by officials of the Government as there are to-day. About six years ago when we passed this legislation we reduced them to a limited number. They are increasing again. I am not prepared to say that the Secretary of State should not be furnished a carriage at the expense of the Government or that the various heads of departments ought not to be furnished with them. That is a question on which we can very well differ. As a rule, I have opposed the use of carriages for anything but official purposes, and I oppose them now for anything but official purposes.

In this great Government of ours, where we are appropriating billions of dollars, I see no reason why on the question of the salaries of judges and other public officials, which is less than a drop in the bucket, there should be so much of discussion, while items covering millions of dollars go through here with very little discussion. We expended on traveling expenses for the forest reserves in one year $250,000, and yet that man who stood up here to object to it was criticised by the public press as being opposed to the preservation of the forests. You can take any item in connection with that service—

Mr. HEYBURN. Before the Senator leaves that question— The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. HEMENWAY. I do.

Mr. HEYBURN. It may be proper—I hope it is—to inquire as to who it was that was so criticised by the public press?

Mr. HEMENWAY. Well, there were several Senators included. I think two of them are on the floor at this time.

Mr. HEYBURN. I just wanted the fact to appear. When the Senator shall have concluded his remarks, while I will not speak upon the forest-reserve question, I will submit a few remarks pertinent to this matter.

Mr. HEMENWAY. The expenses of the various departments of the Government have doubled and trebled, and when the items come before the Senate there is fifteen minutes of discussion. Here, on a question involving a very limited amount of money, we have had two or three days of discussion. I think if the Senate and House would show a little more courage when some of these other items come up, where millions are rolled out of the Treasury, and discuss bread lines, it might save millions and millions of dollars.

Now, unfortunately, the first item appearing in this bill for discussion—

Mr. FLINT. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. HEMENWAY. I do.

Mr. FLINT. I should like to ask the Senator from Indiana a question. He has had considerable experience both in this body and in the House of Representatives. He has stated that there have been many discussions in reference to carriages by various Members of both bodies. I should like to ask him if he ever heard any of those Members of either House who were asking for the elimination of carriages make any suggestion that the pay of the Members of this body and of the other body should be reduced? On the contrary, I think he will state that we have voted here to increase our own salaries and have then criticised those in other positions in the Government when it was sought to place them on a like level with us.

Mr. HEMENWAY. There are a few of us who voted against the increase of salaries to ourselves. I am free to say that I voted against it, but I voted against it purely upon the theory that the salary was to be increased for the term I was then serving. I believed that the salaries of Members of Congress ought to be increased, and I do not remember whether or not I explained my vote at the time, but that was the sole reason why I voted against it. It was on the ground that we were increasing the salaries for the term that we were then serving. If I could vote now—I am willing for the public to have my judgment on it—I would make the salary of Members of Congress $10,000 for the term commencing when I go out. I believe they are entitled to it.

But I want to get back to this question. Now, unfortunately—

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. HEMENWAY. I do.

Mr. BORAH. I should like to ask the Senator why, in view of this bill, it should not be $15,000, and why we should not have $5,000 carriage allowance also?

Mr. HEMENWAY. If the Senator wants to vote for that he has the privilege.

Mr. BORAH. No-

Mr. HEMENWAY. I should not want to. I have no doubt the Senate would give it consideration. He would have the right to move to make it $15,000 and have a carriage at $5,000, if he thought that was the proper thing.

Now, unfortunately, on this bill the item affecting the Speaker of the House of Representatives was reached first. The point of order was raised by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. Borahl] upon the increase of the salary of the Speaker of the House of Representatives. A motion is made to strike out the carriage for the Speaker of the House of Representatives.

The Speaker of the House of Representatives, I think, lives the simple life just as much as any official of this great Government of ours. He has asked for no increase of salary. He has asked for no carriage. It is true he is now 48 years of age [laughter], but he can walk as far as the average man of that age. It is not for Joseph G. Cannon, Speaker of the House of Representatives, that an increase of salary was requested. It is not for him as Speaker of the House of Representatives that a carriage has been asked, because he has nothing whatever to do with either proposition. The first suggestion of an increase of his salary came from the Committee on Finance. The proposition for a carriage came from the Committee on Appropriations, after the House of Representatives had placed upon the bill a provision for a carriage for the Vice-President of the United States.

Now, then, I have simply this to say, that these bodies—the Senate and the House—should maintain their dignity. If Cabinet officers are to have carriages, then the Speaker of the House of Representatives and the Vice-President of the United States should have carriages. I do not know whether Congress is going to give the carriage or not. I do not care. I can speak at least for the gentleman who is now Speaker of the House of Representatives, and say that he does not care. So, from a personal standpoint, no one need care whether he votes for or against a carriage for the Speaker of the House of Representatives or votes for or against an increase of salary for the Speaker of the House of Representatives.

The provision as to carriages which we last enacted, found in the act of February 3, 1905, with which I had something to do, provides:

Sec. 4. No part of any money appropriated by this or any other act shall be used for purchasing, maintaining, driving, or operating any carriage or vehicle (other than those for the use of the President of the United States, the heads of the executive departments, and the Secretary to the President, and other than those used for transportation of property belonging to or in the custody of the United States), for the personal or official use of any officer or employee of any of the executive departments or other government establishments at Washington, D. C., unless the same shall be specifically authorized by law or provided for in terms by appropriation of money, and all such carriages and vehicles so procured and used for official purposes shall have conspleuously painted thereon at all times the full name of the executive department or other branch of the public service to which the same belong and in the service of which the same are used.

After thrashing this out during two or three sessions this law was enacted. I think I am safe in saying there are fewer carriages now being used by public officials than at almost any other time, at least in recent years.

Now, you go into the navy and army and you find there that officers are using carriages. I do not know just how they get them. Possibly the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs knows how the carriages are secured for officers of the navy. Congress has gone into this matter. It has tried to limit it in the best way it could. But whenever my distinguished friend from Idaho votes to increase the navy to the extent of four battle ships, or two battle ships, or any other number of battle ships, he adds more to the expense of carriages for the officers who are to sail upon those vessels in one vote than he would add by voting for a half dozen bills like this.

Mr. BORAH. There is some difference between adding a battle ship to the navy and providing that somebody may ride at the expense of the Government to go to some social function in Washington.

Mr. HEMENWAY. But when the Senator adds a battle ship to the navy, he adds more carriages to the list, in connection with that vessel, than he would add if he should vote for two bills like this.

Mr. BORAH. If that is true, it is because the Senator from Idaho has labored under a want of information with reference to the peculiar kind of legislation which has crept into these I did not know that we were voting for things of this kind when we vote for battle ships, but it seems now that whenever you vote for anything, there is an automobile attached to it.

Mr. WARREN. Will the Senator from Indiana allow me?

Mr. HEMENWAY. Certainly.

WARREN. Knowing how little the total amount expended for carriages aggregates and how pusillanimous it is as compared with some amounts, I should like to ask the acting chairman of the Committee on Appropriations and the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs to state, as near as he can, what it costs per annum to run a battle ship after it is

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, of course the purpose of the Senator from Idaho is to save the money of the people—a very proper object-but while this discussion has been going on I have made some figures. While we are very sensitive—I will not say about carriages, for I will not discuss that, but about the increase of salaries—the interest at 4 per cent upon the cost of a battle ship is largely more than the entire programme reported from the Committee on Appropriations for all the in-creases of salaries; and when the Senate confronts the question of adding tens of millions of dollars to the expenditures of the Government to increase our already immense military establishments, very little sensitiveness is likely to be shown here as to increasing the burden of the taxpayer.

The annual expense of maintaining a single one of the big battle ships proposed by the Navy Department-26,000 tons; 50 per cent larger than the original English Dreadnought-will be four times as much as every increase in this bill as reported by the Committee on Appropriations. And yet we shall be asked to add not a few hundred thousand dollars, not a few million dollars, but many million dollars, tens of millions of dollars, before this session ends, to increase the military estab-lishments of the Government. When I say the military establishments I mean the army and the navy; and one reason why I have not been disturbed by these moderate increases of salary is that they are so small in the aggregate, in the levy which they make upon the taxpayers of the country, that they do not arouse in me any marked objection.

We shall never reduce the expenses of the Government, which are becoming alarmingly large; we shall never be in the condition of a thrifty man, who cuts his garment according to his cloth and keeps his expenses somewhere near in range of his income; we shall never reduce the alarming and dangerous deficit that will stare use in the face at the end of this Congress, a deficency which will probably amount to more than $120,-000,000, with the revenues constantly falling off and other expenditures under our legislation constantly increasing—we shall never meet this grave question, the gravest which confronts this Congress in its waning days, until we take in hand, not simply this small matter of salaries and a few hundred thousands of dollars, but the enormous expenditures that we are asked to make for the military side of the Government.

So, Mr. President, I repeat that I have not been unduly alarmed by the small increase of salaries asked in this bill. Already the Senate has reduced the scale and set the fashion, which I suppose will be followed applicable to other officers, in reducing from what the committee has reported.

I do not look upon it as a matter of much importance whether we give a carriage or do not give a carriage to the Speaker or the Vice-President. It is not a very important matter, in my mind; and as the Senator from Indiana has so well said, it is not a subject that has crossed the minds of the incumbents of either of those places. It will do no harm if the carriages are stricken out of the bill. I do not fancy that much harm is done by the heads of executive departments having carriages-wagons is what they really have, rather modest equipages-in which they go about when they are called to come before committees and when they are called to meetings and other places. The aggregate is small. There is very little pomp and display and splendor in these modest wagons that Congress has vouchsafed to the heads of departments and a few of the subordinate officers, and the evil in it does not, in my mind, rise to a great one. But I shall hope, Mr. President, that before this Congress closes it will set itself in sober fashion to the consideration of the matter of reducing some of the enormous expenses of the Government in other directions.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Mr. President, I am very glad, indeed, that I was interrupted by the Senator from Maine [Mr. Hale]. Just briefly I want to close by saying that I think it makes little difference whether this item stays in or goes out. Certainly in a great government like ours-the greatest on earththe people of the United States are not going to complain when the heads of the various departments of the Government are furnished with a carraige to haul them to the Cabinet meetings, and if they do occasionally use the vehicle for social purposes I do not think the broad, strong, intelligent American people are going to fall out with Congress for allowing them to have the convenience. Upon the other hand, if we should give to the Vice-President and the Speaker a carriage, I do not think we convenience. shall have committed any great wrong or taken any very great sum of money out of the Treasury. I sincerely hope that the same zeal and energy will be continued, looking to the real question of appropriations, where millions of dollars do go out of the Treasury and where, in my judgment, a great saving could be made if all Senators and Members of the House would look as carefully into those appropriations as they are looking into this

to this debate at each recurring appropriation bill, and it has seemed to me that if the Government is going to run a livery stable it should do it on a little different plan. Instead of assigning horses and drivers and carriages for the individual use of particular public officers, let the Government keep them all. and when a public officer has occasion to use one, let him ring up on the telephone like other people, and say, "Send a carriage up here for John Smith, Assistant Secretary So-and-so.' will then mark it and they will know where it is going and they will simply send it up. That is the way for the Govern-ment to keep a livery stable. Then it is open to all government officers who are entitled to use it.

Do you suppose for a moment that a member of any department of the Government would use any team to the extent of $5,000 or $1,000 during a term of office? I am not inclined to be penurious about these things. There is, however, a principle behind it that does appeal to one when we for a moment remember the character of our Government, Men forget sometimes and think they are governing the people. I have heard it charged that men were governing somebody else in this country. There is no man in the United States who governs any other man. We all govern in this country. We are merely representatives of the people for the purpose of carrying their government into operation, and we should not forget it.

I always inwardly rebelled against the idea of assigning a carriage to a man because he held some office at the will of the people in order that he might use it for his own pleasure. My mind rebels against it.

I am not in favor of this item or any other item like it. would pay such salaries to our public officers as that the burden of maintaining their carriage and its equipment would not be heavy upon them. What nation on earth furnishes its members of parliament or its cabinet officers or its ministers of state a private carriage? What nation on earth does it? None except this Republic.

Furnish a state carriage to the President of the United States as in the days of the founders, and let it be a state carriage that shall be recognized as the state carriage of the Chief Executive, not the chief ruler, but the Chief Executive of the will of the American people, and let him ride in the state coach; and I, as every other American citizen, would take pride in the fact that we furnish the coach and that it was an American President riding in the coach of the people. I would stop right there. would furnish no other state coach for any man, but I would give them free livery and a livery stable of the Government of the United States paid for as other, what we might call "bunch," institutions are supported, out of a fund to maintain carriages and horses for the use of the officers of the Government in the performance of public duty.

I can not overlook the polite invitation of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. Hemenway] to a discussion which I shall not indulge in, but I have the official figures before me. They were placed on my desk just a few minutes before the suggestion was made. He drew a comparison between those who objected to a pay roll of the Forestry Service of $250,000. That pay roll, according to the official figures, the past year was $1,442,252.94, and in the estimates for the year, upon which we are to appropriate in a few days, for salaries it is $3,500,961.

Mr. HEMENWAY. But the Senator must understand that that conserves the forests.

Mr. HEYBURN. I am going, probably, to have an epportunity to consider that question briefly in a few days.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Texas [Mr. BAILEY] to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. What is the amendment?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The Secretary. On page 30, line 9, of the committee amendment, strike out the words "or other vehicle."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment as amended.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. What is the amendment as amended?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the amendment as amended.

The SECRETARY. On page 30, after line 7, insert:

For purchase, driving, maintenance, and care of carriage and of horses for use of the Speaker, $5,000.

Mr. CULBERSON. On the adoption of the amendment as amended I ask for the yeas and nays.

The year and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DAVIS (when the name of Mr. Clarke of Arkansas was called). My colleague [Mr. Clarke of Arkansas] is paired with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. Aldrich], and would vote "nay" if present.

Mr. McENERY (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from New York [Mr. DEPEW]. If he were present, I would vote "nay."

Mr. TAYLOR (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. Briggs] to the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. McCreary] and I vote "nay." The roll call was concluded.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I again announce the transfer of my pair, and I vote "yea."

The result was announced-yeas 21, nays 40, as follows:

Bourne Bulkeley Clark, Wyo. Crane Cullom du Pont	Elkins Foraker Guggerheim Hale Hemenway Kenn	Kittredge Lodge Long Page Perkins Scott	Teller Warren Wetmore

So the amendment as amended was rejected.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will report the next amendment passed over.

The Secretary. The next amendment passed over is the paragraph in the House bill on page 35, beginning with line 10, the item under the subhead "Law library."

Mr. WARREN. I ask that that may be passed over until we finish the consideration of the salaries.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be further passed over. The next amendment relating to salaries will be reported.

The Secretary. On page 41, under the head of "Executive," the Committee on Appropriations proposes, in line 14, to strike out "fifty" and insert "one hundred;" and after the word "dollars," to insert "this sum to include all transportation expenses now otherwise provided for by law, and this provision

Arc CLAY. Mr. President, I move to amend the committee amendment by striking out "one hundred" and inserting "seventy-five" before the word "thousand," and on that motion

I call for the yeas and nays.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment

The Secretary. In line 14, page 41, strike out "one hundred" and insert "seventy-five," so as to read:

For compensation of the President of the United States, $75,000.

Mr. DAVIS. I move as a substitute for the amendment to insert the word "fifty" in place of "seventy-five."

Mr. CLAY. I call the attention of the Senate to the fact that we now pay the President of the United States $75,000.

Mr. WARREN. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Arkansas would be in the third degree. It can not be considered now.

Mr. CLAY. I was going to say to the Senator from Arkansas that we give the President $50,000 as salary and $25,000 for traveling expenses; and in the event we place it at $75,000, it will give $75,000 for salary and traveling expenses. If you cut it down and deny him all traveling expenses, he would then have for his salary hereafter less than it is at the present time.

Mr. HEYBURN. I wish to ask a question. I call the attention of the Senator from Georgia to the language in line 15 of the amendment for the purpose of determining whether or not his statement is correct that this would cut out the present allowance of $25,000 for traveling expenses. This is the lan-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will call the attention of the Senator from Idaho to the fact that the word "not," in line 15, has been stricken out and "now" inserted.

Mr. HEYBURN. "This sum to include all transportation

Mr. HEMENWAY. "Now otherwise provided for by law." Mr. WARREN. It was amended in the early consideration of the bill.

Mr. HEYBURN. I was not here at that time. My copy did not indicate it. I withdraw the suggestion.

Mr. CLAY. I think, clearly, in the event we adopt this amendment and make it $75,000, taking into consideration the amendment which was made in line 15, then the President can only use $75,000 for his salary and traveling expenses and all other expenses

Mr. HALE. Undoubtedly.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. May I ask the Senator a question for information only?

Mr. CLAY. Undoubtedly.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Do I understand that in voting upon the Senator's proposed amendment, if it should be carried, it gives to the President $75,000 for all purposes?

Mr. CLAY. That is true.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. It excludes the $25,000 now specially awarded him?

Mr. CLAY. That is right.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. If that is the effect of the amendmentspeak merely for my own vote-I should vote for it, but otherwise I should be compelled to vote against it.

Mr. CLAY. If I understand it, and I think I do, $75,000 is to be the total salary, which shall include traveling expenses. Mr. BEVERIDGE. So it amounts in one definite appropria-Mr. BEVERIDGE. So it amounts in one definite a tion to precisely what the President now gets in two?

Mr. CLAY. That is correct. It will not interfere, as I understand it, with any other expenses of the White House provided heretofore or that may be provided hereafter.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Except traveling expenses.

Mr. CLAY. The President will probably be benefited if it is adopted, for, as I understand the act which we passed giving him $25,000 for traveling expenses, it provides that it shall be paid out on his certificate, and I have been informed, and I think correctly informed, that the President at this time has used only about $6,000 of the $25,000 appropriated for traveling I do not know that to be correct, but I have been informed by those who ought to know. I am sure that under the law, if that is the case, the balance of the amount appropriated for traveling expenses has been converted back into the Treasury.

This would allow the President, if he used $10,000 for traveling expenses, and there was $15,000 left, to apply the remainder to his own use. I think it proper, and I am perfectly willing to go that far in regard to the salary. It does not involve the amount that we appropriate now. The President at this time could use $25,000 for traveling expenses, if he saw fit and proper to do so.

Mr. PILES. I should like to ask the Senator from Georgia how much under his amendment the President would receive as the sum total of his salary?

Mr. CLAY. Seventy-five thousand dollars, clear. Mr. PILES. That includes the amount for mile That includes the amount for mileage, or railroad fare?

Mr. CLAY.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. CLAY] to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. CLAY. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. OWEN (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS] to my colleague [Mr. Gore], and vote "yea."

Mr. CULBERSON (when Mr. Taliaferro's name was called). The Senator from Florida [Mr. TALIAFERRO] requested me to state that he has a general pair with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. Scorr], and that if present he would vote "yea" on this proposition.

Mr. SCOTT (after having voted in the negative). I will attend to it before the roll call is through. I did not notice that the Senator from Florida is absent. I have no intention at all of taking advantage of my pair.

Mr. CULBERSON. I am certain the Senator from West Virginia intended to take care of the matter, if it was called to his attention. I am simply announcing, in my place, properly what the Senator from Florida asked me to announce.

Mr. TAYLOR (when his name was called).

I am paired with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BRIGGS].

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. SCOTT (after having voted in the negative). without noticing that the Senator from Florida [Mr. Talia-FERRO] was not in his seat. I will transfer my pair to the senior Senator from New York [Mr. Platt] and allow my vote

Mr. CLAPP (after having voted in the negative). In voting against the amendment of the Senator from Georgia my position might be misunderstood.

Mr. LODGE. Is there anything in order until the vote is announced?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Not until it is announced.

Mr. CLAPP. I desire to change my vote. Mr. LODGE. Oh, pardon me.

Mr. CLAPP. I wish to make an explanation. In voting against the amendment, if that amendment were lost, the salary would be left at $100,000, and, being opposed to any increase, I wish to change my vote and vote "yea" on the amendment.

The result was announced—yeas 32, nays 33, as follows: YEAS-32.

so Mr. Clay's amendment to the amendment was rejected. The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment

Mr. CULBERSON. On the adoption of the amendment proosed by the committee to make the salary of the President $100,000, I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. HALE. Let that clause of the bill be read as reported by the committee.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment as requested by the Senator from Maine.

Mr. BACON. Before the vote is taken I desire to make an inquiry. I will wait, however, until after the reading of the amendment has been had.

Mr. HALE. Let the clause be read so that the Senate may understand it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The Secretary. On page 41, under the heading "Executive," after the words "United States," in line 14, the Committee on Appropriations propose to strike out "fifty" and insert "one hundred," so that if amended it will read:

For compensation of the President of the United States, $100,000.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Maine desire the next amendment stated?

Mr. HALE. Yes; the entire clause.
Mr. WARREN. Let the whole clause be read.
The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the next amendment.

The SECRETARY. And in the same line, after the word "dollars," it is proposed to insert:

This sum to include all transportation expenses now otherwise provided for by law, and this provision to take effect on March 4, 1909.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment, Mr. CLAPP. The word "now" ought not to be there. This ought not to be continuing legislation.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I had indicated a willingness to yield to the Senator from Minnesota in order that he might make his suggestion.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Georgia yields to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. BACON. If the Senator from Minnesota desires to pur-

Mr. BACON. It the Selator From Anniesotal desires to pursue that matter, I yield to him.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, the entire language, it seems to me, is somewhat complicated. As I understand, the provision for traveling expenses runs out at a given time, and then there will be no expenses "otherwise provided for." So it is meaningless if that is the intention. If there is to be a continuing provision as against other expenses, it seems to me that, instead of putting the word "now" in, it should simply read "transportation expenses otherwise provided for by law." I am not particular about it, however.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the adoption of the committee amendment.

Mr. BACON. I hope that Senators will respond to the suggestion on the part of the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. Clarr]. in order that we may know how the matter stands.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, it is this way: The $25,000 now provided for this purpose is contained in the sundry civil appropriation act, and if not repealed here it would be available until the 1st of next July. What we seek to do is to increase the salary of the President from the 4th day of March next to $100,000 per annum and cut off the balance of that appropriation which is due him for traveling expenses.

Which is now provided by law

Mr. WARREN. Yes; which is now provided by law. What is now provided by law is not a continuing appropriation. It was merely put in each year for two years, if I am correct; but we now propose to cut it off from March 4 to the end of the fiscal year.

Mr. BACON. I understand that; but the point, as I got it from the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. Clapp], is this: That while this provision will cut off the $25,000 now provided by law, it will not prevent the devotion of other sums hereafter to a like purpose.

Mr. CLAPP. But, if the Senator will pardon me-

Mr. BACON. If the Senator from Minnesota will pardon me

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Georgia has the

Mr. BACON. If the Senator from Minnesota will pardon me for a moment, he will see this: This is a constitutional provision for paying the salary of the President. We have a constitutional provision which has always been in effect, which, according to the view the Senate took of it two years ago, permitted the appropriation of an additional amount for traveling ex-penses for the President. If by the passage of this bill, if it becomes a law, we fix the salary at $100,000, the very same reason which induced Congress two years ago to say that they could legitimately during the term of the President give him an additional $25,000 for traveling expenses will permit Congress to do it again. As I understand the Senator from Minnesota, his purpose is to have this so framed not only that it will cut off the present appropriation of $25,000, but that it will be a barrier to the enactment of any such legislation in the future.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, it is impossible for us to prevent that.

Mr. BACON. It will not be. Of course, I understand that it does not prevent our passing the law. We can not bind a subse-quent Congress, but it would be in the nature of an indication of the purpose of this Congress which would not be disregarded.

Mr. WARREN. That is the intention of the amendment as it stands, Mr. President.

Mr. BACON. Then why not so frame it? Mr. WARREN. It is a difficult matter to cover all of these things, but if Congress shall see fit hereafter to do as it has done before, provide for traveling expenses, it is impossible for us to prevent it by any terms in this bill.

Mr. BACON. Of course we can not prevent it. the slightest doubt in my mind, Mr. President, that the act we passed two years ago was an unconstitutional act. I so stated on the floor of the Senate at the time, and made a speech

Mr. WARREN. The best proof of that is that we have sought, on the first opportunity, to make it unnecessary to pursue what might be considered a questionable course.

Mr. BACON. I want to call the attention of the Senator to the fact that when we specify the particular thing which is now excluded, we give warrant for that which is not now included in the law.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Let me suggest to the Senator— The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. BACON. I do. Mr. HEMENWAY. It was the intention of the Committee on Appropriations and was the intention of the Committee on Finance to make the $100,000 salary of the President include all traveling expenses. There is no question but what that is the intention now-to give the President a salary of $100,000 to include all expenses of traveling.

Mr. BACON. Very well.
Mr. HEMENWAY. That statement made in debate will bind

Congress just as much as it would if it were put in the law.

Mr. BACON. Very well; but it has never been made as explicitly as the Senator now makes it, and with that I am now content.

Air. iiEMENWAY. I make it; and I assure the Senator that it is the intention of the committee in reporting the amendment to make the President's salary of $100,000 include traveling expenses and everything clse.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I desire to make an inquiry of Senators here more familiar with matters of appropriation than those of us who are not on the committee may be. My inquiry is this: I understand that there is a regular appropriation each year of $25,000 for contingent expenses of the President. Am I correct in that

Mr. HEMENWAY. There are a number of appropriations. Without having seen it myself, I have been in-Mr. BACON. formed by Senators who are upon the committee that there is such an appropriation of $25,000.

Mr. HEMENWAY. The appropriation is made in the following words:

For contingent expenses of the executive office, including stationery therefor, as well as record books, telegrams, telephones, books for library, furniture and carpets for offices, horses, carriages, harness, automobiles, expenses of stable, including labor, and miscellaneous items, to be expended in the discretion of the President, $25,000.

Mr. BACON. Very well. That in some degree answers my quiry. The inquiry I was about to make was, whether or not the $25,000 contingent fund was applicable in any manner to the personal expenses of the President. It would seem that a very large portion of that $25,000 is applicable to the personal expenses of the President, so that, if this amendment is adopted, $100,000 will not really be the limit of the money that we will devote to this purpose.

Mr. HEMENWAY. The Committee on Appropriations in reporting $100,000 for the salary of the President do not include this item, but expect to continue to appropriate for contingent expenses as they have done in the past.

Mr. BACON. So that in addition to the $100,000, if we should adopt that amendment, there would be for the salary of the President so much of the $25,000 as in his discretion he may see fit to use for those personal expenditures which are mentioned here.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I do not see anything in this item for contingent expenses except office expenditures. The provision

For contingent expenses of the executive office, including stationery therefor—

Mr. BACON. That is all right. Mr. HEMENWAY (reading)- as well as record books, telegrams, telephones, etc.

Mr. BAILEY. It also says for horses, carriages, and automobiles.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Yes.

Mr. President, so far as the enumerations just made by the Senator from Indiana are concerned, of course there would be no possible suggestion that they could inure to the benefit of the President; but, as I understand, the provision goes on further and specifies carriages, horses, automobiles, and other things which are for the personal use of the President.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Yes; and it is intended—
Mr. BACON. Now, if it were limited to carriages, horses, and automobiles, I would have no objection, because, as I stated before, I am perfectly willing that the President shall have carriages and horses at the public expense. It is perfectly proper that he should have.

Mr. HEMENWAY. This all goes to the executive office and not to the President, except in the case of the horses and carriages. All of this appropriation of $25,000 is for the contingent expenses of the executive office. That is the language of the bill.

Very well. If the Senator will pardon me a moment, in addition to the expenditures of the executive office, carriages and horses are the only other items, are they?

Mr. HEMENWAY. Those are the only other items I see. Mr. BACON. If that is so, I think I shall have no more to

Mr. HEMENWAY. But in this instance the appropriation is for the executive office. If the Senator will look at the wording of the bill he will see that this appropriation is for contingent expenses of the executive office, not for the President.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, this item, which seems to be a matter of controversy between the Senator from Georgia and the Senator from Indiana, is, perhaps, with the exception of the provision with regard to automobiles, the same item that has been in the bill in some shape ever since I have been in public life. The amount has been sometimes less than it is now. The President could not expend for his personal use any of this money. He may buy a team and use the team, and that he has been doing from time immemorial.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I want to be understood. I was not objecting to that item. I was simply, for my information, desiring to ascertain whether, if we fixed the salary at $100,000, there would be anything in addition to the $100,000. and I desired to ascertain how much of the $25,000 would be enjoyed by the President.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, there will be no addition to the salary of the President by anything that is in the bill.

precedent has been established by Congress in the last two years in appropriating $25,000 for traveling expenses. Next year, if Congress sees fit to do so-although I think it would be in violation of the Constitution-it can add $25,000 more for traveling or other expenses, and no act that we can pass now will prevent that being done. We must rely upon the good faith of our associates here, who say that they intend that $100,000 shall be full compensation of every kind and character.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. There are two amendments in the paragraph on page 41, lines 13, 14, 15, 16, and 17; but they are so related to each other as to constitute practically one subjectmatter. Without objection, the two will be included in the vote. The question is on agreeing to the amendment. On that question the Senator from Texas has demanded the yeas and navs.

Mr. HEYBURN. I want to see if we understand just exactly what the effect of this provision will be. The amendment, or rather the provision which is submitted for the determination of the Senate, I understand, is as follows:

For compensation of the President of the United States, $100,000, this sum to include all transportation expenses now otherwise provided for by law, and this provision to take effect on March 4, 1909.

Is that provision for the salary limited to take effect March

Mr. HALE. Undoubtedly.

Mr. HEMENWAY. That is all.
Mr. HEYBURN. We have not been using that language in former appropriation bills. I have just examined them. bill under consideration provides that these appropriations shall be for the fiscal year. That would mean the entire fiscal year.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly. Mr. HEMENWAY. Mr. President, the provision is to take effect March 4, 1909, because the new President comes into office on March 4, and, under the Constitution, his salary can not be increased during his term of office. The object of the committee in making it begin March 4 is to have the increase of salary begin with the inauguration of the new President.

Mr. HEYBURN. Then, in effect, it repeals so much in the last appropriation act for the payment of the salary of the President as applies between March 4 and the end of the fiscal

Mr. HEMENWAY. That is the idea exactly.
Mr. HEYBURN. That is obvious.
Mr. HEMENWAY. And it strikes out the provision for traveling expenses, which would continue until July 1 next, unless repealed by this language.

Mr. HEYBURN. It repeals two things. It repeals the existing appropriation for the payment of the regular salary-

Mr. HEMENWAY. Yes.

Mr. HEYBURN. And it repeals the item in the sundry civil appropriation act of the last session of Congress, which provided for the payment of $25,000, or so much thereof as might be necessary, for traveling expenses.

Mr. HEMENWAY. That is the effect,
Mr. HEYBURN. It was in order that we might have some understanding that I raised the question.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, I did not object to the suggestion of the Chair a moment ago that this provision be voted upon as one amendment, but I desire now to make a special request that the question be divided, so that the two amendments may be voted on separately. The first amendment is the one to strike out "fifty" and insert "one hundred."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendments are separable.

What is the other amendment?

Mr. CULBERSON. The other is the italicized part. Some Senators might desire, if the salary is by vote of the Senate left at $50,000, to pay traveling expenses. Personally I am opposed to that and voted against it, but I think the two amendments are separable and ought to be voted upon separately.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator is entitled to a separate vote upon each amendment.

Mr. BURKETT and Mr. LODGE addressed the Chair.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Nebraska. Mr. LODGE. I want to be heard on the point of order before it is decided.

Mr. BURKETT. Mr. President, there is a question which I should like to ask the committee if they have considered. The point may have been raised by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON], but I could not hear all that he said. Of course the Constitution prohibits an increase in the salary of the President during his term of office. Does the Senator in charge of the bill believe that this provision as it is written will modify the law as it is now, which provides for the salary of the President, and be such a modification that from year to year we could appropriate $100,000, instead of $50,000, for his salary and not contravene the provision of the Constitution referred to?

Mr. WARREN. I do not know whether I understand the Senator correctly, but the intention of this amendment is simply to appropriate $100,000 for the President's salary, in place of $50,000, and cut out the $25,000 additional for traveling expenses

Mr. BURKETT. Would that be amending the existing law under which the President now draws his salary, so that you could appropriate the second year more than $50,000, as provided by the present law? For example, to get at what I mean, we have laws providing for the salaries of officers for whom we do not appropriate the full amount. I have in mind one officer for whom the law provides $4,500 salary, but Congress appropriated only $3,500. Some of these cases have been taken to the courts, and the courts have held that the plaintiff could not enforce a claim for the difference between what was appropriated and what the law provided, but that the failure to appropriate the full amount in any year did not repeal the statute providing for the salary. Now, if we simply appropriate in this bill $100,000 for the President's salary for the next fiscal year, would that alter the law under which the President draws his salary, so that we could appropriate $100,000 the second year without contravening the constitutional provision in regard to increasing the salary of the President during his term of office?

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, in my judgment it would.

The provision reads in this way-

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, if the Senator from Wyoming will examine the statute, he will find that the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. Burkett] is right. The present statute fixes the salary in accordance with the constitutional requirement just as it fixes the salary of Members of the House and of the Senate. The appropriation in the pending bill does not alter that statute; and next year you will find yourselves face to face with the proposition-and believing the increase was improper and unauthorized, I was willing to wait until that time—you will find yourselves face to face with the proposition that the salary of the President is fixed, and that you are not able to change it during his term.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I believe there is a good deal of force in the suggestion that has been made. I would suggest to the Senator in charge of the bill that, if it is the will of the Senate to fix the President's salary at $100,000 next year, we may well suppose the purpose is to fix it at that amount for all time to come. I think if the provision could be amended so as to read: "For the compensation of the President of the United States after the 4th of March, 1909"

Mr. WARREN. Or the clause could commence with the word "hereafter."

Mr. TELLER. Let it read, "The compensation of the President of the United States after the 4th day of March, 1909, shall be $100,000.

Mr. WARREN. Would this meet the views of the Senator from Colorado, "That hereafter the compensation of the President of the United States," and so forth?

Mr. TELLER. No; I think it would be better the other way. Mr. HEMENWAY. I suggest it could be amended so as to read, "From the 4th of March, 1909, and thereafter the salary of the President of the United States shall be," and so forth.

Mr. TELLER. Shall be annually $100,000.
Mr. BURKETT. Mr. President, I suggest a safer way—
Mr. WARREN. In answer to the question of the Senator from Nebraska, I will say that the object of the committee in presenting the amendment in this way is the same as in the case of the change in our own salaries. These matters have come up for appropriation each year. We do not contemplate that the President of the United States or a Senator has to go to law to get his salary, because we have to appropriate for it each year.

Mr. BAILEY. If the Senator will permit me just a mo-

Mr. WARREN. I desire to finish my sentence first; but I admit that if the Senate wishes to fix it for the future, and provide so much annually, we had better elaborate and change the section. For one, I am willing to do so.

Mr. BAILEY. I would suggest to the Senator that, so far as the compensation of Representatives and Senators may be concerned, we can increase that or decrease it from time to time. There is no constitutional limitation in that respect; but it is only in the case of the Supreme Court and of the President that there is a prohibition against a change. In the case of the Supreme Court it is provided that the salary shall not be diminished. Of course, that was to keep the Congress from subjecting the court to Congress's will by reducing their salaries. the case of the President the provision is that the salary shall be neither diminished nor increased, which obviously was intended to keep Congress from stripping the President and as obviously to keep the President from blandishing the Congress into giving him too much.

Mr. HALE. If the Senator will allow me, I believe he is entirely correct; that if the clause is left as now stated in the bill, at the end of this year we shall be confronted with the same situation, and the salary of the President would not be increased except for one year. But that can all be remedied if you add at the end of the clause "and hereafter the salary of the President shall be as provided in this section.'

Mr. BAILEY. Or "shall be $100,000 per annum."

Mr. McLAURIN. If the Senator in charge of the bill will allow me; if he will strike out lines 16 and 17 and insert the words, "after the 4th of March, 1909, the salary of the President of the United States shall be $100,000 per annum," it will accomplish it.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator from Indiana has an amendment to offer.

Mr. HEMENWAY. In line 13, after United States, add "from March 3, 1909, and annually thereafter."

Mr. BAILEY. That does not fix it.

Mr. HEMENWAY. So that it will read:

For compensation of the President of the United States from March 3, 1909, and annually thereafter, $100,000.

Mr. BAILEY. Of course, I hope the Senate will vote down the amendment; if it does not, I realize that the committee can arrange it in conference and state it carefully; but the suggestion of the Senator from Mississippi fixes his salary, first by striking out "and," where you limit it to the 4th of March, you might leave that there so as to avoid any question.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Let me again call the attention of the Senator to this reading:

For compensation of the President of the United States from March 3, 1909, and annually thereafter, $100,000.

Mr. BAILEY. That merely appropriates.

Mr. HEMENWAY. "And annually thereafter."
Mr. BAILEY. If the Senator will say, "And annually hereafter the compensation of the President shall be $100,000," then it will-

Mr. HEMENWAY. Would not that be a repetition?
Mr. BAILEY. No. The Senator knows the constitutional requirement that the President shall receive for his services a compensation that is fixed.

Mr. HEMENWAY. "And annually thereafter $100,000."

Mr. BAILEY. We do not want to make an appropriation. We want to fix the salary.

Mr. HEYBURN. I should like to hear it read.
Mr. McLAURIN. Put it in as I have suggested, and it will be right.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I think it is right as it is, and I move it as I suggested it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Indiana proposes an amendment, which will be stated.

The Secretary. After the words "United States," in line 13, it is proposed to insert "from March 3, 1909, and annually thereafter."

Mr. BURKETT. That makes an appropriation, a continuing appropriation for all time, the way it is worded—"$100,000 a -and it does not change the existing law under which the President draws salary. I submit the purpose could be accomplished by taking the law as it is and simply substituting $100,000 for $50,000.

Mr. HEYBURN obtained the floor.
Mr. CARTER. Mr. President—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. HEYBURN. I will yield in a moment. I want to direct attention to the language of the amendment. We can not appropriate money for this year and hereafter.

Mr. HALE. No.

Mr. HEYBURN. That is the language of the amendment. We can not do it. I ask that the amendment be read which contains that vice. We can provide what the salary shall be, but we can not appropriate $100,000 annually hereafter.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Idaho—

Mr. HEYBURN. I ask that the amendment be read.
Mr. HEMENWAY. As there seems to be much difference of opinion, I will follow the suggestion of the Senator from Maine and the Senator from Mississippi. In line 15—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Indiana withdraws the other amendment?

Mr. HEMENWAY. I withdraw the other amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Indiana withdraws the amendment heretofore proposed.

Mr. HEMENWAY. In line 15, after the word "and," strike out the present words and insert:

After the 3d of March, 1909, the salary of the President shall be $100,000 per annum.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. That is it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the proposed amendment.

The Secretary. In the committee amendment, after the word "and" at the end of line 15, strike out the remainder of the paragraph and insert:

After the 3d of March, 1909, the salary of the President shall be $100,000 per annum.

Mr. CLAY. Do we appropriate anything for his salary?
Mr. LODGE. That comes first, as it stands now.
Mr. CLAY. If we simply say his salary shall be $100,000 and do not appropriate, he would not have any money at all. Mr. BAILEY. I suggest to the Senator from Indiana that he strike out the word "salary" and insert "compensation."

That is the constitutional word.

Mr. HEMENWAY. We accept the amendment to strike out salary" and insert "compensation."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment in line 14, which will be stated by the Secretary.

The Secretary. In line 14, before the word "thousand," it is proposed to strike out "fifty" and insert "one hundred;" so that, if amended, it will read:

For compensation of the President of the United States, $100,000.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. On this question the Senator from Texas demands the yeas and nays.

The yeas and navs were ordered.

Mr. CARTER. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. President. Has the Chair held that the amendments are separable?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair is of the opinion they are separable. The Chair first suggested that perhaps the Senate would vote upon them both at once, as they relate to the same general subject-matter, but the Senator from Texas desired a vote upon each separately. In the opinion of the Chair the Senator is entitled to have a separate vote. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DAVIS (when the name of Mr. Clarke of Arkansas was called). My colleague [Mr. Clarke of Arkansas] is paired with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. Aldrich]. If he were present, he would vote "nay."

Mr. OWEN (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. Hopkins] to my colleague [Mr. Gore] and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. TAYLOR (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. Briggs] to the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. McCreary] and vote "nay."

Mr. CULBERSON (when Mr. TILLMAN'S name was called). The Senator from South Carolina is paired with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM]. If he were present, he would vote nav.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. CURTIS (after having voted in the negative). I desire to inquire if the junior Senator from Delaware [Mr. RICHARDSON] has voted?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. He has not.

Mr. CURTIS. I desire to withdraw my yote and announce my pair with that Senator.

Mr. GAMBLE (after having voted in the affirmative). voted on the roll call, but I discover that my pair, the senior Senator from Nevada [Mr. Newlands], has not voted. I will transfer my pair to the senior Senator from Washington [Mr. ANKENY] and will allow my vote to stand.

The result was announced—yeas 35, nays 30, as follows:

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan subsequently said: Mr. President, on the roll call with reference to the increase of the salary of the President, I voted on the first roll call to make the salary $75,000, and on the second roll call I was absent from the Chamber temporarily. If I had been present I should have voted "nay." I simply want the Record to show that.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. Hemenwayl to the committee amendment. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The Secretary. In line 16 it is proposed to strike out:

This provision to take effect on March 4, 1909.

And to insert in lieu thereof:

After the 3d of March, 1909, the compensation of the President of the United States shall be $100,000 per annum.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The next passed-over amendment will be stated.

The Secretary. On page 41, line 19, before the word "thousand," it is proposed to strike out "twelve" and insert "twenty," and after the word "dollars" to insert "to take effect on March 4, 1909," so as to read:

For compensation of the Vice-President of the United States, $20,000, to take effect on March 4, 1909.

Mr. WARREN. Agreeably with the notice I gave this morning, I move that the word "twenty" be stricken out and the word "fifteen" inserted.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next passed-over amendment was, on page 42, after line

For purchase, driving, maintenance, and care of carriage or other vehicle, and of horses, for use of the Vice-President, $5,000.

Mr. WARREN. I ask that the amendment be disagreed to. The amendment was rejected.

The next passed-over amendment was, on page 44, after the word "dollars," in line 26, to insert:

Under Secretary of State, to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, who shall perform such duties as the Secretary of State may designate and as may be provided by law, $10,000.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, the amendment just reported is under the head of the Department of State, and I note several other amendments under the same subdivision. The amendments taken together amount to the creation of additional offices of the Government, and consequently an additional appropriation of money. I would be glad to have some Senator (the Senator in charge of the bill, of course, prefer-ably, or some other Senator familiar with the subject) state ably, or some other Senator familiar with the subject) state what need, if any, there be for this increase of offices. I may mention incidentally that I notice the first new office is that of Under Secretary of State at a salary of $10,000. I am not familiar with the phrases of monarchy, but it strikes me that Under Secretary of State is a little bit out of the ordinary, in our country at least, and I would be glad not only to know what necessity there is for creating these additional offices, at an expense of thirty or forty thousand dollars a year, I believe, in the aggregate, but why we should use that term "Under Secretary of State?'

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I desire to say on the part of the Appropriations Committee that nearly all of the amendments that we have been considering yesterday and to-day were sent us by other standing committees-for instance, the Committee on Finance. The judiciary matters came from the Judiciary Committee, and this particular matter came to us from the great Committee on Foreign Relations. I presume we will hear from some member of that committee.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, the amendment was before the Committee on Foreign Relations, and the committee had the advantage in considering it of hearing in regard to it the statement of Mr. Root, who is just now leaving the department.

The case is, briefly, this: The Department of State has been insufficiently supplied with aids for the Secretary of State. I do not mean that the clerical force, the ordinary working force of the department, is insufficient, but I mean the Secretary of State has not had the assistance he ought to have had. Our foreign business everywhere has grown and expanded immensely of late years, and there has been no corresponding growth in the assistance given to the Secretary of State. If I may use the language of Mr. Root, he has been doing the work of two men. He has been endeavoring to deal with the very great and momentous questions that come before him as Secretary of State, involving our relations with other nations and which require the very best thought that the ablest man can give, and at the same time he is obliged to attend to the administration of the department.

I know that the work was so severe, the burden so heavy, that was a leading cause in the breaking down of Mr. Hay's health. I know how heavy the burden has been for Mr. Root to carry; and, Mr. President, at the beginning of the new administration I think there is nothing more important than to give to the Secretary of State the assistance that he ought to have. work is being gradually divided among the different assistant secretaries, so as to be properly organized. But more than that is needed. Some man is needed there who can take upon himself, in the absence of the Secretary, or when the Secretary is occupied in other work, the administration of the departmenta man who is fitted, if necessary, to be Secretary of State. We want a man in a higher position, at a larger salary than is awarded an assistant secretary.

What name we give him is unimportant. So far as I am concerned, I am perfectly willing if a better name can be found to see it taken by the Senate. But after some consideration in the committee, where the same objections were made, we came to the conclusion that it was as good a phrase as any. It is desired to differentiate the office from that of assistant secretary. The fact that it is used in England for convenience seems unimportant. The object is to get a position which shall be different from that of assistant secretary, of more importance, with larger salary, to be held by a man who will relieve the Secretary of State of duties which ought not to be imposed upon him.

I sincerely believe that no amendment has been suggested to the bill which will make more for the better transaction of the business of the Government of the United States than the amendment now before the Senate.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, there is something in names. It is perfectly natural that in a republican government we should not desire the names that are common in monarchical governments. For instance, I have always been opposed to the designation of the governor of the Philippines as "governorgeneral." We have never adopted it in the law. It was proposed once, and, I think, passed one of the Houses by that name, and was taken out.

Now, as a member of the Foreign Relations Committee, I, in common with all the other members of the committee without exception, I think I may state with propriety, favor this legislation, after having given it in committee the most careful consideration. I did not like the name "undersecretary," and I do not like it now for the reasons which I have already suggested.

I want to suggest—and I think I have good reason to believe that it will be acceptable to everybody—the use of the term "vice-secretary" instead of "undersecretary." I am quite sure it will be acceptable to those who are mostly concerned.

I want to say-for I was out of the Chamber a moment while the Senator from Massachusetts was on the floor, and I do not know whether he mentioned the fact—that it is intended that this officer shall be superior to the assistant secretaries and that in the absence of the Secretary he shall be Acting Secretary

Mr. CULLOM. That is right.
Mr. BACON. And the word "vice" carries the full meaning of it, and it is more consistent with the terms usually used in this country. I trust that that suggestion may be favorably

I will make a motion to amend by striking out the word undersecretary" and inserting "vice-secretary" in lieu

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Georgia proposes an amendment, which will be stated.

The Secretary. In the committee amendment, in line 26, it is proposed to strike out the word "under" and insert in lieu thereof the word "vice," so as to read "vice-secretary."

Mr. LODGE. I am not wedded to any particular title, if a suitable one can be found. "Vice," it seems to me, is used exclusively for presiding officers.

Mr. BACON. Not at all.
Mr. LODGE. It does not seem to me, if I may venture to say so, a particularly happy term for a secretary. I confess I am at some loss, because it is desirable to differentiate this office from that of assistant secretary, which is the natural term. "Second secretary" has been suggested, but I do not think it would be appropriate.

Mr. BACON. Throughout this country, not only in official life but in business life, the word "vice" is used where the person chosen is to stand in place of the principal officer. It is peculiarly an American title. I say peculiarly; that is not the proper word. It is one generally used, I should say. We say vice-president".

Mr. BEVERIDGE. It is distinctly monarchical, as "vice-regent" and "vice-gerent."

Mr. BACON. For that reason I changed my statement, and I said it was general. It is used in business corporations and everything else, whereas the term "under" is not used in this country in any connection.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. BACON. Certainly.

Mr. CARTER, I suggest to the Senator from Georgia the propriety of using the words "chief assistant secretary" instead of the word "vice."

Mr. BACON. The Senator from Montana is also a member of the Committee on Foreign Relations, and he will remember the fact that in the discussion the idea was brought out and emphasized that the particular grade of officer it was desired to secure the services of could be more easily gotten if the word "assistant" was not used.

Mr. CARTER. The words "chief assistant" would operate to differentiate, I should think. It would depart from the usual order somewhat, at least.

Mr. NELSON. I wish to say about the term "undersecreit is borrowed from the English, and it is in many portions of our common law. They have in the English system what they call "undersecretaries" in the various departments, and those undersecretaries are considered as permanent officers, who do not go and come with a change of administration.

Mr. LODGE. That is quite true.

Mr. NELSON. They are continuously there and are supposed to be familiar with all the intricacies of the department duties. We are simply adopting a well-known term that has been in existence for years and years in the British system of government, and I think it is very appropriate, because I can conceive that, in connection with our diplomatic affairs, it would be a good plan to adopt the system they have there. An undersecretary should be a permanent officer, who would not go and come with a change of administration.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, the suggestion made by the Senator from Minnesota is very apt. Undersecretaries of course are well known in England. They are the men who are always there and do not change with administrations. are also undersecretaries who do represent political parties, and if their chief is not in the House of Commons they usually sit in the House of Commons. The same phrase is used in France for undersecretaries of state and I think of other departments. I think it is used simply as a convenience. Of course it has been used in England, but a good many words that we use have been used in England, and I can see no objection on that ground.

I see the same difficulty confronting the Senate that confronted the committee and that confronted me. If I had had my choice and could have found a suitable name I should have preferred to have taken a distinct title not used in other countries, but when I was confronted with it I failed to think of a better one, and when the committee was confronted with it they failed to think of a better one than undersecretary.

started with the desire to get some other phrase.

I do not wish to seem critical. I do not think that the term "vice-secretary" is happy, and it seems to me that "second secretary" is misleading. "Chief assistant" is bringing in the very word where we want to make the distinction. My own opinion is that this is the most convenient term we can find for the office which we desire to create.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. Bacon] to the amendment of the committee, proposing to strike out the word "under" and to insert the word "vice."

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment as reported by the committee.

Mr. CULBERSON. I move to strike out "ten thousand" and to insert "seven thousand five hundred."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The Secretary. On page 45, in the committee amendment, lines 3 and 4, strike out the words "ten thousand" and in lieu insert the words "seven thousand five hundred."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Texas to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment as reported by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will report the next amendment passed over.

The Secretary. On page 46, after the word "dollars," in line 1, insert:

Said private secretary and clerk to the Secretary of State to be appointed by the Secretary of State; private secretary to the Under Secretary of State, $2,500; clerk to Under Secretary of State, $1,500.

Mr. WARREN. I have an amendment which I wish to offer. The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Wyoming proposes an amendment to the amendment, which will be stated.

The Secretary. On page 46, line 5, after the word "dollars," insert a comma and the words "to be appointed by the Secretary of State."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. CARTER. Has the amendment appearing in line 6, page 45, been agreed to?

Mr. WARREN. I understand that that was agreed to as we went along in the first day's consideration of the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It was agreed to when reached in the reading of the bill. The next amendment which was passed over will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 46, line 10, after the word "each," insert:

Private messenger to the Secretary of State, $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WARREN. I assume it is not necessary for me to call attention to the totals from time to time, as the Secretary has authority to change the totals to conform.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary has that authority by order of the Senate heretofore made. The Secretary will report the next amendment passed over.

Mr. WARREN. I think the next amendment passed over is

The Secretary. On page 167, under the heading "Judicial," in line 3, the committee proposed to strike out the word "thirteen" and insert "eighteen," so that if amended it will read: For the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States, $18,000.

Mr. WARREN. I move to strike out "eighteen" and insert

"fifteen" before the word "thousand."
Mr. BEVERIDGE. Do I understand the Senator to say that the committee itself and all the members thereof agreed to the amendment he is now moving, reducing the proposed increase as he has indicated?

Mr. WARREN. I gave notice this morning, after consulting with a part of the committee and in presence of the balance, that I would move that amendment when we came to it. So I think it is generally understood.

Mr. TELLER. As a member of the committee, I want to say that this is the first I have understood that the sum was to be changed. I wish to know from the chairman whether the proposed reduction includes all the judges.

Mr. WARREN. I think the Senator from Colorado was in the Chamber in the morning when we took up the bill. I said then the committee would move to reduce the salary of the Chief Justice to $15,000 and of the associate justices to $14,500.

Mr. TELLER. If I was in, I did not appreciate what was said.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Wyoming to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The next amendment passed over will be stated.

The Secretary. In line 4, page 167, before the word "thousand," strike out "twelve" and insert "seventeen," so that if amended it will read:

And for eight associate justices, at $17,500 each.

Mr. WARREN. I move to strike out "seventeen thousand" and insert "fourteen thousand," so as to read "$14,500 each." The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President, I understand we are now voting as in Committee of the Whole, and that hereafter when the bill comes into the Senate we may vote, if we please, upon any of these propositions, and there is no necessity for reserving them in advance. Is that correct?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. They will have to be reserved when the bill comes into the Senate, however.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Now?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. When the bill comes into the Senate.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. And then the last question we voted on may be voted on de novo.

Mr. HEYBURN. I do not know that there is any other provision the committee desires to take up before the matter is open to amendment. I should like to inquire of the Senator in charge of the bill as to whether the provision, on page 168, line S, has ever before appeared in an appropriation bill.

Mr. WARREN. We have not reached that point. Wi
Senator wait until we reach it?

Will the

Mr. HEYBURN. I will wait until it is reached. The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will report the next amendment passed over.

The Secretary. Under the subheading "Circuit Courts," beginning at line 12, page 167, the committee reports to strike out the word "seven" and to insert "ten," so that if amended it will read:

For 29 circuit judges, at $10,000 each.

Mr. BORAH. I move to strike out "ten," in line 13, and insert "eight," so as to read "$8,000 each."

I wish to call the attention of the Senator to one fact which probably has escaped him in the reading Under the law as it now stands these judges have $10 a day for expenses whenever they are holding court outside of their particular and immediate jurisdiction. this bill increases the amount of the salary, it cuts that off, does it not?

Mr. NELSON. It does not.
Mr. BACON. As it came from the committee it did. I am sure that was the design of the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. WARREN. If the Senator will allow me right there, that is true, but upon looking it over it would really be a reduction or at least not an increase of any importance on the part of certain circuit judges. Figures were before us. Therefore it was considered better to leave it as it was, because, as the Senator will remember, it is only a few years since that expense allowance was surrounded with proper safeguards, and it can only be used for actual expenses not exceeding $10 per day.

Mr. BACON. I know that we threw around such safeguards as we could. I do know also that it is at the present time the subject-matter of very grave abuses. Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President-

Mr. BACON. If the Senator will pardon me a moment, without any suggestion of any impropriety on the part of the judges, conceding that they keep themselves within the limit of the law, the fact has been brought to the attention of Senatorswill say of those who belong to the Judiciary Committee in the discussion of various measures-that it frequently occurs a judge lives across the line so near that he can go to the court in the morning and return in the evening, and yet under the law he is entitled to $10 a day for every day that he performs his duties in that particular way. I say that is a great abuse of the present law.

Mr. WARREN. Will the Senator allow a question there?

Mr. BACON. Certainly.

Mr. WARREN. Does the Senator think that among the some 30 circuit judges that practice prevails to any extent? I assume that he has some one judge in mind. I ask the Senator if he thinks it is a general abuse?

Mr. BACON. The Senator is mistaken in saying that I have one judge in mind. On the contrary, I have no judge in mind. I have some localities in mind, not the judges, because I really do not know the names of the judges in those particular

Mr. WARREN. Would it amount to many localities?
Mr. BACON. I think that it will amount to quite a number, not to all by any means, but wherever there are large cities it is very apt to be the case, because those are the jurisdictions to which the judges living in another jurisdiction go to hold court. I presume it will be found, in a greater or less degree, in the case of almost every large city that there are judges who live probably outside of that city who go to hold court there, and who are enabled to go to the court and return to their homes with almost as little inconvenience as judges who live within the jurisdiction go to their court rooms and return to their homes

I did not know the fact that the Appropriations Committee had made a change. I did know the shape in which the provision left the Judiciary Committee, and I do know the fact that the members of that committee-probably I ought not to say that. I will state for myself that I was largely influenced in my judgment in agreeing to these amendments by the fact that these expenses were cut off. I took the liberty of interrupting the Senator from Idaho to call his attention to what I thought was the status of the bill, because I knew the provision had come from the Judiciary Committee in that shape.

Mr. BORAH. I understand now that it is not.

Mr. BACON. I am corrected by the Senator from Wyoming, and I am told that the Committee on Appropriations did not retain the provision as it came from the Judiciary Committee.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I simply desire to say that when I voted for the amendment to increase the salary of the circuit judges to $10,000 a year, as I did in the Judiciary Committee, I did it with the express condition that they should be deprived of their per diem. They are now, under the law, entitled to $10 a day, and most of them draw it for most of the year. Most of the judges get from $1,500 to $2,500 a year out of that per diem. If that is the law, as it appears in the bill, $8,000 would be an ample increase, in my mind.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, just a word in relation to that. It may be true as to one or two districts; but take the district, for instance, in which the Senator who has just spoken resides, which, I believe, is the eighth. There are courts at St. Paul, St. Louis, and at Denver every year. They can not draw this $10 a day unless their actual expenses amount to that sum—that is, they can not legally draw it.

Mr. NELSON. Will the Senator allow me? That may be his interpretation; but as a matter of fact they draw the full $10 a day, and they "make no bones" about it.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator is certainly mistaken as to most of the judges. He may have some in mind to which that would apply; but surrounded, as I said before, with strict qualifications, they can not legally draw more than their actual expenses when they are away from home.

Take, for instance, the court at Denver. The railroad fare going and returning from either one of the other points, or from the home of the judge, added to the per diem expenses while he is there, amounts to more than he can possibly draw, because he can only draw $10 a day while absent upon that particular duty. The judges who attend the court in Denver have been short, I think, in every term of the court held there; they are not able to reimburse themselves from that fund the amount that they expend for long-distance railroad fare and hotel per diem because of this $10 a day restriction.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. Borah] to the amendment, which will be stated.

The Secretary. On page 167, line 13, in the committee amendment, strike out "ten" and insert "eight," so that if amended it will read:

For 29 circuit judges, at $8,000 each.

Mr. BACON. I will ask the Senator what is the present salary of the circuit judge?

Mr. WARREN. The present salary is $7,000 a year, and I certainly hope it will not be reduced from what is proposed in the bill, to $8,000.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, do I understand that they are to get the $8,000 and also their traveling expenses?

Mr. WARREN. They get the traveling expenses.
Mr. BORAH. And $8,000?
Mr. WARREN. When away from home, if the expenses do not exceed $10 a day, and $7,000.
Mr. BORAH. I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment to the amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. KEAN. Before the roll is called I should like to know what the question is.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will report the amendment and the amendment to the amendment at the request of the Senator from New Jersey.

The Secretary. On page 167, line 13, the committee amendment proposes to strike out "seven" and insert "ten." It is now proposed to strike out "ten" and insert "eight," so that if amended it will read:

For 29 circuit judges, at $8,000 each.

Mr. BACON. I understand the Senator from Wyoming to say that if the salary were fixed at $10,000 and all per diem cut some of the judges who now receive $7,000 in receiving $10,000 would receive less than they now receive with that per

Mr. WARREN. Perhaps I spoke a little loosely, but if there should be a trifle more business, we will say, in such circuits as the eighth, where they are spending now, perhaps, more than $2,000 a year for traveling expenses, it would make it less than the present salary and the per diem.

Mr. BACON. Very well. On the other hand, necessarily following that, we have the proposition that the $10,000 paid as the salary, with the per diem added, the circuit judges will frequently get $13,000.

Mr. WARREN. That depends upon the amount of business, but this amount of travel expense adds nothing to salary or income of the judge, nothing whatever, because it only covers away from home traveling expenses.

Mr. BACON. The probability of the amount is so great that the Appropriations Committee have changed the provision as it left the Judiciary Committee, believing that it would not increase the pay received by these judges if $10,000 were fixed as the amount and the per diem cut off. Now the proposition is to increase it $3,000, in the face of the probability as to the number of the judges, at least that their per diem will be $3,000 more.

Mr. WARREN. Will the Senator permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. BACON. With pleasure.

Mr. WARREN. Does the Senator think it is an entirely fair proposition to take a given salary and cut off the expenses where in one circuit the courts are held, perhaps, at one point only and the judges live at that point, while in another circuit we show 12 or more States and Territories, extending from the British line to the Mexican line, and there are three courts, and the courts are as far apart as St. Paul and St. Louis and Denver? Does he think he is doing equal justice to all those judges?

Mr. BACON. It seems that whichever plan we adopt injustice has got to be done to somebody, or more than justice to some of them. I had in mind really that it might be well to see if we could in some way equalize this matter. I am in favor of raising the salary of the judges. I am very much more in favor of giving to judges good salaries and even emoluments in the way of carriages, if need be, and things of that kind, than to officers of either of the other departments. They are to a certain extent cut off from the opportunities which the officers of other departments have. They have very grave responsibilities. They have no opportunity to speak for themselves.

While it might be proper to raise the salary within a certain amount it does seem to me when the Judiciary Committee was of the opinion that $10,000 was a sufficient increase to justify cutting off the per diem allowances, if we now find that the suggestion of the Senator from Wyoming is correct that it might do injustice in some cases, it ought to be equalized in some way.

In other words, the whole $10,000 which the Committee on the Judiciary thought was going to be a sufficient sum without the per diem should not be given with the per diem entirely added.

Mr. WARREN. Will the Senator permit a suggestion? I know the earnestness of the Senator. He is a member, if I mistake not, of the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. BACON. Yes.

Mr. WARREN. It is now 5 o'clock, and I think it better to lay this matter over until to-morrow.

Mr. BACON. I think so.

Mr. WARREN. And I hope the Senator and other members of this committee may consult members of the Committee on Appropriations and try to arrive at some proper solution.

Mr. BACON. I wish to suggest, also, to the Senator from Wyoming, in this connection, that he be prepared to-morrow morning to give us, as accurately as he can, the various amounts drawn by the judges for this per diem, so that we can possibly arrive at some middle ground in the matter.

Mr. BAILEY. And to save the Senator from Wyoming a little trouble, I remind him of the fact that the Senate refused to convict a judge who admitted that he drew the $10 a day and who, it was proved, spent less than $5 a day.

Mr. WARREN. We have changed the law. Mr. BAILEY. They have always claimed it heretofore.

Mr. BACON. If the Senator will permit me

Will the Senator from Wyoming yield to me Mr. SCOTT. for a moment?

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wyoming yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. WARREN. Yes.

Mr. BACON. If the Senator will permit, I wish to extend the suggestion so that it may include information relative to the amounts per diem received by the district judges, because we have got to pass on their salaries also.

Mr. WARREN. That suggestion we will follow up as closely as we may

Mr. BAILEY. I should like to ask the Senator from Wyoming a question.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wyoming yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. WARREN. I do. Mr. BAILEY. I wish to ask the Senator from Wyoming if his committee have had before them any information as to the salaries paid to judges of the supreme courts of the several States of the Union? I undertake to say that, with one or two exceptions, perhaps, we will say five exceptions, there is not a State in the Union that pays its supreme judges or "judges of the court of appeals," as some of the States designate them—but including them all under the term of "judges of the highest court in the State"—there are not more than five that pay them more than these circuit judges are now receiving.

Mr. WARREN. I think the circuit judges ought to receive

Mr. BAILEY. I can not, to save my life, understand how a judge of a court whose jurisdiction is a limited one, although it is a court of appeals, should have a higher salary than the judge of a court of final jurisdiction, who exercises that jurisdiction over the life, liberty, and property of all the people in a State; and when we, representing these various States, are willing to say that judges of inferior courts are entitled to higher salaries than the judges of our highest courts, I think, to put it mildly, that we underestimate the value of our States.

Mr. SCOTT. Will the Senator from Wyoming yield to me?

Mr. CLAY. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a ques-

Mr. WARREN. I shall be glad to yield to the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. Scott] if he will first permit me to make a statement. I want to say that I shall ask to have the pending bill taken up on the conclusion of the routine morning business to-morrow and of the speech of the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. Frazier], of which he has given notice for to-morrow morning. I do this so that Senators may be here to vote on this question.

CONSIDERATION OF PENSION BILLS.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. President, I want to say to the Senate that there are twelve hundred pension cases on the calendar. Many of them will have to go to the other House. It will only take a few minutes to consider them, and I hope those Senators who desire to remain will remain here and let us clear the calendar of the pension cases.

I ask unanimous consent to have House bill 23849 taken up. The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from West Virginia asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill, the title of which will be stated.

Mr. LODGE. If this request is granted, I suggest that it be understood that there shall be no other business transacted, and that immediately on the conclusion of the pension bills the Senate will adjourn.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I hope the Senator from Massachusetts will not make that request.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. President, I do not understand that I have yielded the floor.

No; the Senator has not.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Lodge] asks unanimous consent that it be understood that no other business be considered this evening except pension bills.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President, I hope the Senator from Massachusetts will withdraw his request for unanimous consent, because immediately after the pension business is disposed of I have a matter here which will require no discussion which I should like to have considered.

Mr. President, I hope Mr. KEAN.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Lodge]?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President-

Mr. LODGE. The pension bills will take, as we know, some little time—half an hour or thereabouts.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Very well, Mr. President; I will bring up the matter in which I am interested in the morning.

Mr. LODGE. I presume that will suit the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Very well.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Massachusetts? The Chair hears none.

The question now recurs on the request of the Senator from Virginia [Mr. Scorr] to proceed to the consideration of the bill named by him.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 23849) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the civil war and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors, which had been reported by the Committee on Pensions with amendments.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill.
Mr. SCOTT. On page 4, after line 4, I move to strike out the clause from line 5 to line 8, inclusive,

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from West Virginia will be stated.

The Secretary. On page 4, after line 4, it is proposed to

The name of Gustavus A. Springer, late of Company C, First Regiment Ohio Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The first amendment of the Committee on Pensions was, on page 9, after line 2, to strike out:

The name of William M. Clark, late of Company E, Sixty-second Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 19, line 8, after the words "rate of," to strike out "forty" and insert "thirty-five," so as to make the clause read:

The name of Martha A. Adams, widow of George F. Adams, late surgeon Sixty-seventh Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $35 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 20, after line 2, to strike

The name of Jennie Bennett, widow of Charles H. Bennett, late of Company C, Fifth Regiment Connecticut Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 37, line 19, after the words "rate of," to strike out "forty-five" and insert "forty," so as to make the clause read:

The name of Joseph Sizelove, late of Company K, One hundred and fifteenth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

Mr. SCOTT. I now ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate bill 8254.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 8254) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the civil war and certain dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors. It proposes to place upon the pension roll at the rate per month therein specified the following-named persons:

Mr. LONG. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated. The Secretary. On page 18, line 17, before the word "dollars," it is proposed to strike out "twenty" and insert "twenty-four," so as to read:

The name of James N. Titus, late first lieutenant Company D. One hundred and fortieth Regiment Ohio National Guard Intantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HEMENWAY. On page 20, line 5, I move to strike out "thirty-six" and insert "fifty;" and at the request of the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. Scort], a member of the committee, I want to make a statement as to the case.

Mr. SCOTT. I should like to have the Senator make a statement in regard to the case, because the committee does not wish to establish a precedent.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The Secretary. On page 20, line 5, before the word "dollars," it is proposed to strike out "thirty-six" and insert "fifty," so as to read:

The name of George L. Masters, late of Company K, Forty-second Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I desire to make a brief statement in regard to the amendment. I will say, Mr. President, that George L. Masters was a soldier of long service and a man of distinguished ability. He has been chaplain of the Traveling Men's Protective Association, but he is now totally disabled and has recently been sent to an asylum, leaving his family without property, and they will be wholly dependent upon this pension for support. He is a man of unusually high character and good standing in the community. If there is a worthy case, or ever was a worthy case, this is one. I know Mr. Masters personally, and know that his family will be left in great distress unless his pension is increased to $50 per month.

Mr. SMOOT. I desire to ask the Senator a question. When this bill was considered in the committee, was the man then in an asylum, or has he been sent to an asylum since?

Mr. HEMENWAY. At the time this bill was considered by the committee he was then earning a salary; but he broke down, his mind is gone, and he is now absolutely without earning capacity

Mr. SMOOT. Then, under the conditions, of course, the rules of the Senate committee would allow the increase.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CURTIS. On page 20, lines 9 and 10, in the case of S. S. Kirkpatrick, I move to strike out "twenty-four" and insert in lieu thereof "thirty."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The Secretary. On page 20, line 9, after the words "rate of," it is proposed to strike out "twenty-four" and insert "thirty," so as to read:

The name of Solomon S. Kirkpatrick, late of Company A, One hundred and thirty-sixth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I wish to state that Mr. Kirkpatrick was one of the leading lawyers of southern Kansas and was at one time a Member of the other House of Congress. He is now in a helpless condition, unable to recognize his friends when he passes them on the street. He has within the last week been taken to an asylum for treatment.

Mr. SCOTT. In view of that statement, the committee accepts the amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SCOTT. I now ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 23850) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the civil war and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Pensions. The first amendment was, on page 4, line 5, to strike out the name "Groves" and to insert the name "Graves," so as to read :

The name of Chauncey H. Graves, late of Company A, Sixty-eighth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and first lleutenant Company K, One hundred and fifty-fourth Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 5, line 19, after the words "rate of," to strike out "forty-five" and insert "forty," so as

The name of George B. Cock, late of Company F, Fourth Regiment Ohlo Volunteer Infantry, and captain Company G, Fifth Regiment U. S. Colored Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 7, line 13, after the words "rate of," to strike out "twenty-four" and insert "thirty," so as to read:

The name of Barney O. Flinn, late of Company I, Eleventh Regiment West Virginia Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 8, line 17, after the words "rate of," to strike out "forty-five" and insert "forty," so as to read:

The name of David Leadbetter, late of Company L, Twelfth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Pleasant A. Cashon, late assistant surgeon, Sixth Regiment Tennessee Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The next amendment was, on page 15, line 1, after the words "rate of," to strike out "thirty" and insert "twenty-four," so as to read:

The name of Henry F. Carr, late of ordnance detachment, Watervliet Arsenal, United States Army, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The next amendment was, on page 16, line 20, after the name "Eveline," to strike out the name "Aiken," and insert the name "Aikin," so as to read:

The name of David Leadbetter, late of Company L. Twelfth Regiment his Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per him to Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per him to leave the same of the per him to the same of the per him to the The name of Eveline Alkin, widow of Dwight A. Alkin, late captain and commissary of subsistence, United States Volunteers, and pay her a pension at the rate of $20 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The name of William S. Lessig, late of Company K, Twenty-first Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

"rate of," to strike out "sixty" and insert "fifty," so as to read:

The name of Ephraim Plumpton, late of Company C, First Regiment New Hampshire Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Mr. BURNHAM. I hope that amendment will be disagreed to. The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

The next amendment of the Committee on Pensions was, on page 20, line 5, before the word "dollars," to strike out "sixty" and insert "fifty," so as to read:

The name of Horatio W. Longa, late of Company M, First Regiment New Hampshire Volunteer Heavy Artillery, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Mr. BURNHAM. I ask that that amendment may also be disagreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SCOTT. I now ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 24344) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the civil war, and to widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SCOTT. I now ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 8422) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the civil war and to widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to place upon the pension roll, at the rate therein specified, the follow-

Mr. BEVERIDGE. On page 6, line 5, I move to strike out

Mr. BEVERIDGE. On page 6, line 5, I move to strike out the word "thirty" and insert in lieu thereof the word "fifty." The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The Secretary. On page 6, line 5, after the words "rate of," it is proposed to strike out "thirty" and insert "fifty," so as to read:

The name of Caroline Coburn, widow of John Coburn, late colonel Thirty-third Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SCOTT. I move that the Senate adjourn. The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 25 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, January 20, 1909, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Tuesday, January 19, 1909.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D. The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

EXPUNGING SPEECH FROM RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Speaker—
Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia. Mr. Speaker—
The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from West Virginia rise?

Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I rise to make the motion to expunge the speech of Mr. Willett of yesterday from the Congressional Record.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman from West Virginia will yield to me to make a suggestion-

Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia. Certainly.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I have not had an opportunity to read this speech. I was not in the House during all of the speech on yesterday, and only heard two or three sentences very near its close. This is an important matter, the question of how far a Member can go in debate in a criticism of the Executive and in criticism of the Senate. In the Fifty-first Congress there was a flagrant violation of the rules of propriety and of the rules of parliamentary law in a speech which was made in the House criticising the Senate. That Congress in its wisdom saw fit to refer the whole matter to a special select committee appointed by the Speaker, and that committee made a very valuable report, defining properly the limits and proprieties of debate in the House so far as it related to membership in the other body. I think that in this question it would be well for the House in its dignity and deliberation to refer this resolution to a special committee, to report, say, within a limited time, within a week, to the House, and then let the House act upon that report. If this satisfies the gentleman from West Virginia, I would move that the resolution which he offered be referred to a select committee of five, to be appointed by the Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will call the attention of the gentleman from New York, and also the gentleman from West Virginia, to the fact that no resolution has been offered. It seems to the Chair that a resolution should be offered reciting what is proposed to be stricken out.

Mr. PAYNE. I understood the gentleman from West Virginia to move to strike out the whole speech from the RECORD.

That is the motion I understood he made.

Mr. LANGLEY. That is correct, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I take it it is necessary to submit the reasons why the speech should be stricken out.

The SPEAKER. It seems to the Chair, if the gentleman from New York will indulge the Chair, that the House is entitled to something, either a motion or a resolution, that will disclose the breach of privilege, if it be a breach of privilege, that has been referred to. At present there is just the bare motion to strike out the speech of the gentleman from New York. So far as the rules of the House are concerned the Chair can concede that such a motion would be privileged. The Chair will have the Clerk read the following, which occurred April 13, 1906, showing the practice that has been followed, and before it is read the Chair will state that unless gentlemen heard the speech, and unless perchance that is the only speech the gentleman from New York has made, there is nothing to identify it.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, if the Clerk will read that, perhaps I can frame a motion in a moment that will answer the purpose.

The Clerk read as follows:

On April 13, 1906, Mr. AUGUSTUS P. GARDNER, of Massachusetts, claiming the floor for a question of privilege, offered the following res-claiming the moor for a question of privilege, othered the following resolution:

"Whereas, on the 10th day of April, 1906, in a speech printed this morning in the RECORD, the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. HOPKINS], contrary to the law of the House, has embodied the following sentences:

'A few days ago Mr. Bennet of New York.' 'The effort of my friend, though covertly designed, is the first show of their influence in this body.' 'Again, on last Wednesday he showed his interest in the steamship companies by offering and securing the passage through this House authorizing the admission of Fannie Diner, a pronounced idiot.'"

Mr. FITZGERALD. I suggest that the Clerk has read sufficiently far to indicate what was done at the time indicated, and as that language was stricken out of the RECORD at the time, I doubt if it is advisable to repeat it now. I suggest that the gentlemen conform to the rules and reduce their motion to writing, and then have the matter come properly before the House. Mr. PAYNE. I did not hear the suggestion.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The language which is being read was stricken out of the Record at a former session of Congress. The rules require that the resolution be submitted in writing, I suggest that the gentlemen prepare their resolution and submit it to the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has no desire for the reading unless the House desires to have it complete. The Clerk reads not from the Manual, but from the Parliamentary Precedents, which are in print and which were printed by authority of Congress. The Chair only desired to call the attention of the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. Hughes] and the attention of the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] that it seems to the Chair something should be offered in shape of a motion or the Chair something should be offered in shape of a motion or a resolution that would show that this is a matter of privilege, so that the House could deal with it as may seem proper.

Mr. MANN. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from West Virginia offers a resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 494.

Whereas the speech of Mr. WILLETT printed in the Congressional Record of January 18, 1909, contains language improper and in violation of the privilege of debate: Be it Resolved, That a committee of five Members be appointed to consider the remarks aforesaid and report to the House within ten days.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I make a point of order against the resolution. It does not specify wherein the language is improper and does not indicate to the House on what proposition we are voting, and therefore there is no question of privilege involved in the motion as it is presented. The gentleman does not specify where the privilege of the House has been violated

The SPEAKER. The Chair will again read the resolution, as well as the whereas, as follows: Whereas the speech of Mr. Willett, printed in the Congressional Record of January 18, 1908—

That identifies the speech-contains language improper and in violation of the privileges of debate:

Resolved, That a committee-

And so forth.

Mr. OLLIE M. JAMES. Mr. Speaker, the resolution sent to the desk reads "1908," and I make the point that we have not jurisdiction of that question at this time. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. Hughes] modify his resolution?

[Mr. HUGHES] modify his resolution?

Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia. Yes, sir.

Mr. OLLIE M. JAMES. A point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia. I wish to change it to "1909," instead of having it read "1908."

Mr. OLLIE M. JAMES. Just a year behind, that is all.

The SPEAKER. The Chair on close examination finds the original was written "1908." In dim penciling the figure "9" seems to be written over the "8" and offer all it was the misoriginal was written "1908." In dim penciling the figure "9" seems to be written over the "8," and, after all, it was the mistake of the Chair in reading it "1908."

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, on the point of order I have made I wish to say that the gentleman's resolution is not definite, and does not even state that the speech was made in the House of Representatives. It does not indicate what language is involved. There is nothing in the resolution for the House to determine. It is merely an opinion of the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. Hughes] himself that the language is unparliamentary, and if we voted on the resolution in its present shape we would merely vote to sustain the proposition of the gentleman itself and not for the expunging of particular language from the Record. I therefore insist that the resolu-tion as it now stands does not present a question of privilege.

Further, as was suggested to me a moment ago, in order for it to be a matter of privilege it must affect somebody, and that is not indicated in the resolution at all.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman recollects the legal maxim, Certum est quod certum reddi potest"—that is certain which may be rendered certain. This refers to remarks of Mr. WIL-LETT in the RECORD of yesterday. And when the Chair turns to the RECORD, it refers to the whole speech. It seems to the Chair

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The resolution does not say so.
Mr. FITZGERALD. The precedent referred to by the Chair specifically pointed to a Member of the House. In the earlier precedent the resolution cited in it the language referring to the members of the Senate and the Senate as a whole. If there be a breach of privilege in the insertion of this speech in the RECORD, it consists of having made a statement affecting somebody against whom it would be improper to utter the language. It seems to me if the resolution is to be offered, the gentleman should withdraw it at this time and prepare it in accordance with the rules and precedents, so that the House may act upon it properly. Nothing is lost, and it may be a matter of impor-tance that whatever is done be done in a proper manner.

The SPEAKER. The Chair again reads:

Whereas the speech of Mr. Willett, as printed in the Congressional Record of January 18, 1909, contains language improper and in violation of the privileges of debate—

Now, that refers to the whole speech, and alleges that it contains language that is in violation of the privileges of debate, and then follows the resolution, providing for a special committee to investigate. It seems to the Chair that the resolution is sufficiently definite to enable the Chair to say that it is the duty of the Chair to entertain it as a question of privilege.

Mr. FITZGERALD. If language contained in a speech relates to a private citizen, unless of such character as to be indecent, it would not be a breach of the privilege of debate. The language of the resolution must designate in some way that language has been used applicable to some one referred to in a way that would make it a breach of the privileges of debate. The Chair is not permitted to argue that the mere conclusion of the gentleman is a statement of fact. It seems to me he should prepare his resolution in a manner that would bring the question fairly before the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is aware that there are many precedents. Where there is a question of rumor or allegation in a journal or a magazine the House has entertained from time to time resolutions not exactly in the words, but in substance as contained in this resolution. Of course it is for the House to dispose of the resolution as it may see fit. It is only for the Chair to determine whether the resolution on its face does present a question of privilege upon the point of order made, and the Chair thinks it does.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I would like to say a few words about the parliamentary situation. I do not care anything whatever about Mr. WILLETT's speech. I did not hear it. I have not read it in the Record. But it is the utmost importance to this House that if anything is done about this speech, that it should be done in decency and in order. The motion of the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. Hughes] is a bald proposition to expunge Mr. WILLETT'S speech from the RECORD because he thinks Mr. Willett's remarks as to the President improper. Now, suppose a case. Suppose a man were to get up The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from West Virginia yield to the gentleman from Missouri?

Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia. How much time does the gentleman want?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Oh, if I have to borrow time, I will take five minutes.

Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question. [Cries of "Oh, no!"] I yield, then, five minutes to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Suppose a case. Suppose a Member were to deliver a speech here an hour long that was appropriate in every way, in taste, in matter, and everything else, and should incorporate in it in the course of two or three minutes words that the judgment of the House concluded ought not to be in a speech and that were not permitted by the rules of the House. Then, under a motion like this offered by the gentleman from West Virginia, you could strike out that entire speech. Well, now, while every man in the House might be willing and anxious to strike out this particular speech—I am not expressing any opinion on this speech whatever, for, being ignorant of its contents, I have none—the resolution of the gentleman—
Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia. You understand my resolution refers this to a committee of five?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I know your resolution refers it to a committee of five. But my contention is that the resolution ought to specify what is objectionable in this speech, and if it is not done, some day this action will be taken as a precedent to strike out somebody's speech here simply because the majority do not like it.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman think it would always be desirable to incorporate in the resolution the particular language which he did not wish to have appear in the RECORD?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Yes. Mr. MANN. And which would not appear in the permanent RECORD?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Yes; I think in every case a motion to strike out a part of a man's speech ought to incorporate the thing that is objected to.

Mr. MANN. Supposing the language was indecent? Mr. CLARK of Missouri. It does not make any difference whether it is indecent or whether it is decent. We are not so squeamish that we can not consider a sentence that is in English. I repeat that I am not talking especially about this speech in controversy here, but I object to a precedent being established here, that in your hands, or, if the control of the House should change, in our hands, or, if the control of the House should change, in our hands, in a moment of aggravation and excitement, might be made an engine of oppression.

Mr. PERKINS. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Yes; certainly.

Mr. DALZELL. Will you allow me to interrupt you?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Yes.

Mr. DALZELL. It seems to me the gentleman is endeavoring to put upon the author of the resolution the performance of the very duty for which the committee is to be appointed. The committee is to examine the speech and report to the House, after calm consideration, whether all of the speech ought to go out, or portions of it; and if so, what portions ought to be expunged. It is not fair to put upon the author of the resolution, a single Member of the House, the performance of the duty in advance for which the committee is appointed.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. But nobody asked the gentleman from West Virginia to introduce this resolution, so far as is known. He did it voluntarily. He may have done it with the best of motives, or the worst. I am not passing on that; but it looks as though he ought to be made to come in here with something that the House can act upon, just like an indictment in a criminal case. You can not simply say that a man is guilty of a crime and go at him that way and arraign him on general principles and make him plead to it and try him and convict him on it. You must specify in what regard he violated the rules of this House or the rules of propriety, just as an indictment must be specific in its allegations.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman allow me? Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Yes; gladly.

Mr. DALZELL. The gentleman's proposition now is that because the gentleman from West Virginia saw fit to offer this resolution there shall be given to him the determination of the question as to what parts of the speech, if any, ought to be expunged; but his judgment as to that matter may not be my judgment or the judgment of 390 Members of the House, Mr. CLARK of Missouri. That is true.

Mr. DALZELL. Now, why should not the House have an opportunity to express its judgment in the report of this committee?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Let me ask you a question?

Mr. DALZELL. Certainly. Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Suppose that this resolution passes the House; the Speaker appoints a committee of five good men and true; they take this speech, examine it to find out what they think is objectionable; then their report is brought back into the House, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania thinks there is something else objectionable, or I think there is something else objectionable. Why have we not a right to get up and amend that resolution then?

Mr. HINSHAW. You have.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. But here you are starting in with nothing.

Mr. DALZELL. Oh, no; we are starting in with an examination of the whole business. If I were asked to express my opinion of the speech, I should say that not a word of it ought to go into the RECORD.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I am not expressing any opinion at all about that speech, but I am expressing the opinion that if you adopt this resolution you will set a precedent that will return to plague the inventors.

Mr. DALZELL. My point is that if we follow out the gentleman's suggestion, this resolution ought to contain the whole of the speech.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think if that were done, it would be perfectly proper.

Mr. OLMSTED. May I ask the gentleman from Missouri a question?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Yes.

Mr. OLMSTED. If I understand the position of the gentleman from Missouri, it is this: We are considering whether there is a speech or a portion of a speech which ought not to go into the RECORD.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Yes.

Mr. OLMSTED. Is it your proposition that in order to get it out of the RECORD we shall insert it in a resolution which will go into the RECORD?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. That has invariably been done, and it ought to be done.

Mr. OLMSTED. Then in what way would we keep it off the RECORD?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. You can not keep it off the RECORD to save your soul.

Mr. OLMSTED. We can keep it out of the permanent RECORD. The object of this resolution is to keep it from going into the permanent RECORD. Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Let me put you a question. Suppose the resolution is adopted and the committee is appointed. It is brought in here, you have a right, and I have a right, and every Member on the floor has a right to take the speech of the gentleman from New York, sentence by sentence, and repeat the whole speech on the floor of this House in arguing the case for the purpose of honestly ascertaining whether it is proper for the RECORD. I will tell you what happened within the gentleman's own recollection in the last Congress, two gentlemen on the floor of the House, and one of them I see before me now, had a debate one day. The next morning there was a long speech in the RECORD, and one of the gentle-men objected to the contents of that speech on the ground that there was matter incorporated in it that was not uttered on the floor of the House, and after a long debate got it out of the RECORD. But while he was expunging that speech from the RECORD the man that made the speech got every word of it back into the RECORD, and it is in the RECORD to-day.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman from Missouri will permit me, I was one of the gentlemen to whom he refers. Nobody objected to the speech for the reason that the gentleman -that it had not been uttered in the House-nobody objected to the gentleman who had printed his speech in the RECORD inserting it a second time, although he could have been called to order on account of it, and the precedents would have forbidden him to have repeated the speech.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Let me ask the gentleman a ques-

Mr. MANN. Very well. Mr. CLARK of Missouri. The gentleman tried to get the speech out of the RECORD.

Mr. MANN. I got it out. Mr. CLARK of Missouri. The gentleman got the speech delivered out of the RECORD, but the man who made the speech in defending it got it all back again.

Mr. MANN. That is far from the fact. He did not get it back into the RECORD and did not want to put it in the RECORD.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. In one Congress before I came here, I think it was the Fifty-second, there was a distinguished gentleman, not a member of this House now, who made a speech here assailing a man from his State. The man came in and moved to expunge it from the RECORD, and the House debated it for three whole days, and in reply, in defense of the speech the first man made, he went to work and dug up every offensive thing that had been uttered by any Member about any other Member for the last ten years and incorporated it into the Record. This is all I care to say about the matter now

Mr. PAYNE. Will the gentleman from West Virginia yield to me?

Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia. I will yield three minutes to the gentleman.

Mr. Speaker, while it was probably proper in the precedent which has been stated, in the last Congress, where the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER] offered a resolution pointing out certain portions of a speech that had been made and asked to have it stricken from the RECORD, that was the case where he made the motion and the House decided to strike it from the RECORD, and it was well to define what part of the speech he desired to have stricken from the Record. But this resolution refers the whole question to a committee. we designated in the resolution the parts of the speech to go out of the Record, there is hardly a necessity for having a committee appointed. The committee should have the whole speech without any opinion expressed by the House, and then report to the House untrammeled whether the whole speech, or, if a part of it, what part of it, should be stricken from the RECORD as a breach of the privileges of the House. I think the gentle-man from West Virginia has gone about this in exactly the proper way.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman from New York permit an interruption?

Mr. PAYNE.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The House recently referred a particular portion of the message of the President of the United States to a select committee. It did not refer his entire message to that committee to search out and find out what was to be elimi-

Mr. PAYNE. In regard to that, I want to say to my colleague that there was not a particle of question in anyone's mind as to the remainder of the message but that it was a proper message to send to Congress. But I defy any man to read, as I have within the last fifteen minutes, the speech of the gentleman from New York and stand up here and specify what parts of it should go out of the RECORD, whether the whole of it should go out or only a part of it, so nearly is it correlated and so full is it of reflections upon the President, which seems to constitute a breach of the privileges of the House.

I did not want to say anything before this committee was appointed, but it is evident to me that every word and every sentence in that speech should go to this committee for their examination and report to the House. I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] has expressed my views in reference to the speech of his colleague from New York [Mr. Wil-LETT]; but in order to give the House the benefit of it, I drafted my resolution so that this committee will be appointed. I now move the previous question on the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The question is on ordering the previous question.

The question was taken, and the previous question was ordered.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, has the Speaker ruled on the question of order raised by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD]?

The SPEAKER. Yes. The question now is on agreeing to the resolution.

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to. The Chair announced the following committee:

Mr. Mann, Mr. Perkins, Mr. Foster of Vermont, Mr. Howard, and Mr. CLAYTON.

PENSION APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve Mr. KEIFER. itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 26203), the pension appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the pension appropriation bill, with Mr. BUTLER in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 8: "For salary of 1 agent for the payment of pensions, $4,000."

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read. The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, lines 8 and 9, strike out the words "for salary of 1 agfor the payment of pensions, $4,000," and insert the words "for aries of 18 agents for the payment of pensions, $72,000."

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, the provision contained in lines 8 and 9 of this bill is identical to the provision contained in the pension appropriation bill as reported last year. The amendment I offer is identical to the one offered last year to this same provision. The fact of the matter is that the committee is attempting, not to legislate the 17 pension agents outside of the city of Washington out of office, but to starve them out by forgetting to provide for their salaries.

I object seriously to this evasive mode of legislation. proper that 17 agencies should be abolished, let a bill be brought in abolishing the agencies and the offices of the agents, and not let the agents still exist without pay. If there has been created by law 18 agencies and there have been appointed by the President, the Senate confirming, 18 pension agents, I take it that it is the duty of Congress, so long as these agents are legally created and holding office, to appropriate the money necessary to pay their salaries. Of course it is easy to see why this particular provision was drawn in this way. It is to get around the point of order on the ground of new legislation. The obvious purpose is evidently to consolidate the payment of pensions in the one agency in the city of Washington. If this bill should pass with this provision as it stands, it could be and would be nullified, because section 4780 of the Revised Statutes is still in full force and effect. This statute provides that the President is authorized to establish agencies for the payment of pensions whenever, in his judgment, the public interests and convenience of pensioners require, with the proviso that no more than three agencies can be established in any State and no new agency can be established in a State where the whole amount of pensions paid the next preceding year was less than $500,000.

Under this law there have been established 18 agencies, and there have been created and appointed 18 pension agents, who are now holding office. If this provision goes through and passes, the effect will be to transfer the great majority of the clerks and records of the various agencies to Washington, and have one agent in Washington distribute the money. The other agents, until their offices are abolished, would have nothing to do but sit in their various localities and have a claim against the United States Government for the amount of their pay until the offices were abolished, and no Member of this House or of the committee can deny they would have a valid claim, so long as they were legally created and holding office, against the United States Government, enforcible in the Court of Claims. One of the large items of savings claimed by the committee is $68,000 in agents' salaries. With these laws still on the statute book, I claim that that is not a saving, that it is simply a postponement of the payment of salaries of these agents until a future appropriation or adjudication of their claims. The principal claim made by the committee is that it works a great economy to consolidate the various agencies. Secretary Garfield a year ago wrote a letter in which he said the Government would be saved about $200,000 that year and $225,000 each succeeding year. He gave absolutely no figures or facts upon which to base his statement, beyond the bare statement itself. As a matter of fact, we know that the clerks doing the work of distributing the pension money in Washington receive from $1,200 to $1,400 a year, while the clerks doing the same work in the agencies other than in Washington receive anywhere from $000 to $1,000 a year.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio

has expired.

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I ask for five minutes

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent that he may proceed for five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. The investigation of the Keep Commission a year ago showed that the expense of living in Washington was about 20 per cent higher than the other cities covered by these agencies; so that, if we bring a majority of the clerks here, the natural sequence will be to increase the salaries to bring them up, proportionately, with the salaries paid for the same work in the departments at Washington. That will amount to $100,000 or $125,000-Mr. ADAIR. Mr. Chairman—

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield to the gentleman from Indiana?

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. Yes.
Mr. ADAIR. Would it not be true, if the 17 agencies are abolished, it would require a vastly less number of clerks to perform the services of paying pensions than under the present system?

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. I will state for the information of the gentleman that in the hearings of a year ago-for there are no hearings this year of any consequence-it was stated that the clerks employed at the various agencies would be absorbed into the various departments of the Government; so, therefore, there is not any saving in the matter of clerk hire.

Mr. ADAIR. The gentleman does not believe that the clerks employed at the various agencies throughout the country would be transferred to Washington to perform this work?

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. I stated in my opening remarks that a majority of them would, and I make that statement on the authority of the gentleman in charge of the bill, my colleague from Ohio, General Keifer. I fail to see where the slightest economy comes, and I believe that the difference of the small saving of the pay of the clerks would be more than overcome by the difference in the per capita cost. For instance, one of my colleagues on vesterday mentioned the fact that the way he figured the matter up, it cost about 63.13 cents per capita, and the gentleman from Ohio, my colleague, stated it costs 51 cents per capita in Washington.

Mr. KEIFER. That was for the previous year. It is not so much now

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. They were the last figures obtainable,

Mr. STAFFORD. Does the gentleman concede that last year it cost 63.13?

Mr. KEIFER. No, sir.

Mr. STAFFORD. Has the gentleman any figures to show what it does cost?

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I have not yielded to anybody.

Mr. KEIFER. I only want to state I know of no such figures

Mr. STAFFORD. I beg to challenge that statement. Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I insist upon proceeding within my time.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman vield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Ohio yield to the gentleman from Indiana?

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio, Yes; I will yield for a question.
Mr. COX of Indiana. On the question of economy to the Government in the event the bill becomes a law as recommended by the committee, suppose there were 17 of these agencies abolished. Does not the gentleman believe that it would, at least, be economy to the extent of saving the $4,000 salary which

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohlo. Mr. Chairman, I have answered that question. There is no such saving. The salaries are due these men whether we appropriate the money in this bill or not, and will be collected in some future bill. It costs about 45 cents in Columbus, Ohio, per capita. We will take the lowest figures in Washington given by my colleague [Mr. Keifer], 51 cents here. That, in my judgment, will overcome any small saving that is made in the other direction. Take up the hearings on this bill; on page 6 we find about 3 lines, and the Commissioner of Pensions, Mr. Warner, does not ask that the 17 agencies be abolished, but he states, in answer to a question by General Keifer, "Yes; I wish you would knock them down to 9." In other words, he states that a state of the states In other words, he states that 9 of them are what he thinks can be done away with.

Now, in the city of Columbus, Ohio, where I live, there is distributed to soldiers and widows in the State of Ohio only a few hundred dollars less than $16,000,000 per annum. between thirty and forty clerks. Some justice should be done to these servants of the Government. Nearly all of them are residents of that city, and most of them have their homes there. If these people are brought here, or a majority of them, they will be forced to give up their environment and their homes, come to Washington, and would probably be the first people dropped, because there is an evident intention to drop somebody, as shown by the fact that they have reduced the clerk hire about $65,000 in this bill. What would be the result? They would be left on their own resources in a city where there is no opening in commercial life.

Mr. ADAIR. Will the gentleman yield? Of course, that might work a hardship; but is not that true in relation to persons holding other positions? I believe the gentleman's State recently elected a new United States Senator and left Senator FORAKER with a home in Washington, and soon to be thrust out of employment.

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. I yielded for a question, not a funny speech.

Mr. EDWARDS of Georgia. Does not the gentleman think that if these persons are unnecessary they ought to be dis-

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. If there are clerks that are unnecessary, I am willing that they should be discharged, but do not let us begin in the smallest end of the Government. Let us look at all the departments.

Mr. EDWARDS of Georgia. I am favorable to that, too. I believe in discharging unnecessary clerks wherever they are found.

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, just one more remark: The claim is that the consolidation of all the pension agencies into one would reduce the per capita cost. That is simply a surmise on the part of the gentleman in charge of the bill. There is nothing that I can find that justifies that remark. However, I have never known, and I do not believe history has ever shown, that the departments in Washington are run more economically than the departments in other cities than Wash-

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. Moore of Pennsylvania having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment joint resolu-tion and bill of the following titles:

H. J. Res. 216. Joint resolution for a special Lincoln postage stamp; and

H. R. 23863. An act for the exchange of certain lands sit-uated in the Fort Douglas Military Reservation, State of Utah, for lands adjacent thereto, between the Mount Olivet Cemetery Association, of Salt Lake City, Utah, and the Government of the United States.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 3751. An act authorizing the Secretary of War to issue discarded arms to camps of the United Spanish War Veterans.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary be directed to request the House of Representatives to return to the Senate the bill (S. 7396) for the exchange of certain lands situated in the Fort Douglas Military Reservation, State of Utah, for lands adjacent thereto, between the Mount Olivet Cemetery Association, of Sait Lake City, Utah, and the Government of the United States.

PENSION APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Chairman, I want very briefly to put myself on record in support of this amendment. The committee's bill is not an attempt to violate the rules, because the Committee on Appropriations would not be guilty of any such attempt, but it is, in fact, a plain violation of one of the rules of the House. Let me state the situation. Section 4780 of the Revised Statutes provides:

The President is authorized to establish agencies for the payment of pensions wherever, in his judgment, the public interests and the convenience of the pensioners require; but the number of pension agencies in any State or Territory shall in no case be increased hereafter so as to exceed three, and no such agency shall be established in addition to those now existing in any State or Territory in which the whole amount of pensions paid during the fiscal year next preceding shall not have exceeded the sum of $500,000.

In 1885, more than twenty years ago, Congress passed this

That from and after June 30, 1885, the salary and emoluments of agents for the payment of pensions shall be $4,000, and no more, per annum; and of the fees provided by law for vouchers prepared and paid, only so much thereof as may be required for expenses incurred in having said vouchers prepared, as well as the necessary clerical work at the agencies, shall be available.

The situation, then, is this: The President of the United States, pursuant to authority, has appointed in the United States 18 pension agents. The Congress of the United States has provided that each of those pension agents shall receive a salary of $4,000 per annum. If the Committee on Appropriations should obey the mandates of the law, then this appropriation bill would carry salaries for 18 pension agents, at the rate of $4,000 a year each.

The committee, however, in the exercise of its discretion, has seen fit to refuse to appropriate for 17 of these pension agents, but that action on the part of the committee can not interfere with the right of these agents to office. They are still officers appointed by the President; they still have the in-dorsement of the President. In the exercise of his discretion they are necessary to be appointed, and, therefore, you transfer simply from the Committee on Appropriations of this House the office of appropriating that money to the Court of Claims, where each and every one of these pension agents will, if he enters suit, be entitled to receive his salary.

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman from Pennsylvania permit an interruption?

Mr. DALZELL. Certainly.
Mr. TAWNEY. The pension appropriation bill provides for the payment of the salaries of all of these agents until July 1. Now, if the President of the United States between now and then exercises his discretion as the Department of the Interior has suggested it would be done, why the agents or the officers would be abolished. Then what claim would they have against the Government in the Court of Claims?

Mr. DALZELL. Well, the fault on the part of the Committee on Appropriations is not quite as much as it would seem to be. But the gentleman will remember that before the 1st of July we will have another President and another Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. TAWNEY. We will not have to wait that long.
Mr. DALZELL. So that the claim of saving of salaries by this provision of the appropriation bill falls to the ground. These gentlemen are taking from the President the personal discretion conferred upon him by law and exercised by every President since this act was passed prior to the passage of the act fixing their salaries, which was twenty-three years ago.

Mr. KAHN. And all for the benefit of the pensioners.

Mr. DALZELL. You say that there will be quite a saving by dispensing with the clerk hire in these 17 pension agencies. I call your attention to what the Commissioner of Pensions says on that subject. He was asked whether or not he would need, when this consolidation takes place, the services of these pension clerks, and he said:

We will want the same clerks. We would bring the majority of them from each agency here with their records so as to have them go right to work. In the Pension Bureau proper we have no more clerks than we need, and we have no one to spare to put in the agencies to do that work.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. I ask that the time of the gentleman may be extended five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. DALZELL. The proposition, then, is to take the clerks employed in these 17 agencies—in the city of Pittsburg, in the city of Philadelphia, in the city of Buffalo, or wherever they may possibly be—and pay them their salaries in the city of Washington. Now, it may be said that the salary of an employee of the Pension Office is precisely the same whether it is paid to him in the city of New York, in the city of Philadelphia, or paid to him in the city of Washington, but that would not be true. All experience teaches us that if these people are brought here to Washington and employed here their salaries will be increased.

The salaries paid to the clerks employed at the various agencies are not as large as those of corresponding clerks in the city of Washington, and for the reason that the expenses of living in the city of Washington are greater than the expenses of living in these various places. I suggest anyhow, moreover, that this money that goes to these clerks ought to be expended in the localities where the clerks live and not in the city of Washington. So that when you transfer all these employees to Washington, you at the same time discharge 17 pension agents. These 17 pension agents, every one of them, as I am informed, belongs to that class for which we specially legislate. They are, each and all of them, veterans of the civil war.

Now, aside from anything else I have said, I am opposed to this policy of consolidating and concentrating in the city of Washington all those public duties that can just as well be performed elsewhere. The policy is a wrong one. And aside from the fact that this provision in this pension bill is in violation of the rules of the House is the further fact that no good is to be accomplished by it; and for that reason I hope the amendment will prevail.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I would like to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania if he thinks it would cost any more to live in Washington than it would in New York, or Philadelphia, or

Mr. DALZELL. I think it does cost more here than it does in Pittsburg. I have never lived in New York or Philadelphia.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. You have been there?

Mr. DALZELL. Yes; I have been there occasionally.
Mr. SLAYDEN. I would like to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania if he believes there is any reasonably early date when the pension list will be reduced and that there will be a less number of administrative officers required; and if so, ought we not to be beginning a policy of concentrating and reducing the expenses of the administration of this tremendously expensive branch of the Government?

Mr. DALZELL. The time has not come yet, and we will cross that bridge when we come to it.

Mr. SLAYDEN. The gentleman thinks that the time has not come when we may expect to reduce the pension expenses?
Mr. DALZELL. I think not.
Mr. SLAYDEN. You think not.

Mr. ESCH. As I understand the gentleman, if this concentration takes effect, it would mean an additional 400 clerks in the city of Washington that would require the Government to rent additional buildings?

Mr. DALZELL. Undoubtedly. The Commissioner of Pensions testifies that he has no room for these people. The Pension Office is full as it can hold and you have got to turn out 432 of the employees of that office now and make room for these people or else rent quarters somewhere else in the city.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Chairman, I should like to have the gentleman furnish some evidence of the last statement.

Mr. DALZELL. Why, the testimony of the Commissioner of Pensions.

Mr. KEIFER. Here it is. There is not a word of that kind

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I did not expect to take any part in this debate, as I seem to have some other work outside that engrosses all my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to recognize some gentleman who is opposed to the amendment.

Mr. PAYNE. I am in favor of the committee action. I am opposed to the gentleman who just spoke. I do not know in what particular way the amendment comes up.

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman from New York is opposed to the amendment, the Chair will recognize him.

Mr. PAYNE. I am opposed to the amendment. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is recognized.

Mr. PAYNE. I think it is about time that the House of Representatives and every Member in it began to think a little of calling a halt on the expenditures of the Government. They have crept up to enormous amounts, and no one realizes that more than a person who is engaged in trying to formulate a bill to provide revenues for the Government. And I want to say to the gentlemen on this side of the House in all seriousness that before they vote a dollar or a million dollars or a hundred million dollars on any proposition they had better think twice. They had better study the appropriations that we are making, and the large expenditures we are making from year to year, and the revenues of the Government. I was always taught as a boy to keep my expenses within my income. It is a pretty good rule to follow, boy or man or nation; and I think that when we come to consider these propositions we ought not to be wholly guided by gentlemen whom we have assisted into fat places in the government service. We ought not to be guided by the clamor of people who desire to continue their attachment to the pay roll of the United States, but we ought to consider the people, as well, who are out of office, who pay the taxes, who pay these salaries, and we ought to consider whether it is not best to economize.

Now, Mr. Chairman, this thing has been debated in the last three or four years in various phases, and still it holds good that there is no reason in the world why these offices should not be consolidated. The men who receive pensions would receive fully as much attention, would receive their money fully as promptly and as well, whether it was carried through the mails from my friend's district, Buffalo, to the city of Auburn, where I live, or from Washington to the city of Auburn. And so it is all through the country. They would get their pensions just as regularly from the Treasury of the United States, whether the office from which the checks were mailed was here in Washington or whether there were a dozen or more offices scattered throughout the United States.

The mails run regularly through all the United States, and the pensioners can easily get their vouchers through the mail and get the checks when the time comes for it. There will be a saving of clerks, because in each of these agencies they have to do three months' work inside of a week, or inside of a few days, and it takes a large force to do that work. The rest of the three months they have more leisure than they do through the few days in which they are preparing vouchers for pay days, and if this same force of clerks could be made to work on from day to day, as a Member of Congress does, for instance, through the months and through the year, and alternate the payments from one district to another, so that one district should come in one week, and another district in another week (when I speak of districts, I speak of the localities where these pension agencies are situated), alternating them one after another so as to cover the whole period of the quarter, the whole three months, it could not help saving a number of clerks to do this business, and a number of salaries. It is conceded that the 17 pension agents themselves would go out of business, and there would be but one general agent.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I should like to ask the gentleman from New York if he has any doubt about what is going to happen about this thing and if this will not be a repetition of what happened here last year and the year before, that we will knock these agents out, and the bill will go over to the Senate and the Senate will put them on again, and the conference committee will yield, and there you are?

Mr. PAYNE. Well, I am willing to say to the gentleman that our efforts in this direction, while well directed, are often of no avail: but I have found it my experience that the only way to break through the barrier at the other end of the Capitol was by repeated knocks. If at first you don't succeed, try, try again, and the only way to accomplish a valuable reform of this kind is by repeatedly sending the bill to the other end of the Capitol, and finally let the country see who is right and who is wrong about such a proposition as this, about any reform, about any change in the law. I have faith that even the Senate will finally yield to the will of the people.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Does the gentleman from New York know any way in which we can get our referees to stand pat?

Mr. PAYNE. I want to say to my friend from Missouri that he does not want to bear down too hard on the conferees from the Appropriation Committee, because if the House does not like their action, the House can turn them down, and because the committee come in here and finally yield in a conference report-and I do not know, but they do in this instance-to the instructions of the House, those conferees are not to blame; it is the House itself. If the gentleman from Missouri will show me any way to put backbone into each of the 391 Members, I will show him how to keep the House from backing down on any of these propositions; but he will have to show me first.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I have studied about that a good deal and have not found it out.

Mr. PAYNE. When the gentleman finds it out, if he will tell me, I will join teams with him, because there are many things I would like to have my way about. In the meantime, I want to clear my skirts.

Mr. HARDY. If the gentleman will pardon me, will not the House have the backbone whenever they want to get rid of the expenditure?

Mr. PAYNE. I do not know how that is, but I know I want to get rid of it. I presume the majority of the House does, because they have voted in that way. I know of course that there are some gentlemen here who feel that they represent these pension agencies who are very strenuous in their opposition to this proposed reform, and I know that they are gentlemen of ability, gentlemen of influence, and I do not wonder that many Members of the House fall down before their impassioned eloquence and great persuasion; but what I want to say is that I think every Member of the House should think twice whether he is bound to keep up these little petty things for the few people in his district, or whether he can come out into the open and tell the people of his district that he is in favor of lopping off these useless things and cutting down useless expenditures and is willing to begin at home and pluck the beam out of his own eye, as I heard it so eloquently described by my friend from Minnesota [Mr. Nye] the other day. I hope he will get the beam out of his own eye on this proposition, and, with an eye single to the best interests of all the people of the United States, tell those gentlemen in his district that he is laboring for the public good and trying to cut down useless expenditures, and that he can not be swerved from any such course as that be-cause some people in his district are trying to dissuade him. This applies as well to pension agencies as it does to the innumerable people in the mail service of the United States, who come here and persuade gentlemen that their salaries are low, and when you come to compare them you find them high up in the scale among the great body of employees on the pay roll of the United States Government. [Applause.] Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. Mr. Chairman, I agree with everything my colleague [Mr. PAYNE] has said so far as economy is concerned. If I believed, or if it was proven, that the consolidation scheme would cheapen the expense of paying pensioners, I would not ask that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TAYLOR] be voted upon. Mr. Chairman, I have read the RECORD and whatever has been said respecting the increased expense of the agency system, and I fail to find one sentence that would be received in any court of justice as evidence of the fact that consolidation plan would be cheaper than the existing agency plan. It is theory and presumption. My colleague [Mr. PAYNE] has not studied the question. To those of us who have studied it carefully, his attitude betrayed his ignorance. He talks of the clerks at the agencies as being at leisure. Those of us who have had an opportunity to observe know that they work as continuously as clerks in the departments at Washington. If my colleague had taken time to look into this matter, if he had attempted to find proof for what he said, he would not talk as he does.

Let us see on what this alleged economy is based. Let us be fair, gentlemen. When flood and fire and earthquake come, how quick are we to help the destitute. But let us not sit here and create destitution by taking from the old soldier, his widow and orphans, their source of subsistence unless the reason for our action is based upon truth and proof. When it is pointed out by such evidence as appeals to the reason and not to the prejudices of men that a saving can be effected by consolidation, then I am willing to vote for the change, regardless of the fact that a pension agent lives in the city in which I have the honor in part to represent.

Now, on what is this claim of extravagance based? Almost wholly upon one paragraph in a letter of the Secretary of the Interior.

Let me read it:

The annual expenditure on account of the payment of pensions, Including the salaries of pension agents, clerk hire, contingent expenses, and the printing of vouchers and checks, is approximately $550,000, an average cost per pensioner of 55 cents per annum. It is estimated that after a consolidation has been completed and in perfect working order all pensioners could be paid by the Commissioner of Pensions, or one disbursing officer located in the city of Washington, with an annual expenditure of, at most. $350,000, a saving of 20 cents per annum perpensioner, or $200,000.

Now, upon what does he base that estimate? Not one word of evidence. He goes on to the extent of a column or more, but never mentions a specific item that will enter into this $200,000. It is all assumption and theory. No proof is offered. Nothing is given upon which this House can act independently of the Secretary's ipse dixit.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes longer.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. Mr. Chairman, in his remarks yesterday, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] asked the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Keifer] this question:

Is it not a fact that to consolidate the pension agencies would save 25 cents per capita in the cost of distributing pensions?

Mr. Keifer. On the average.

Mr. Madden. A million pensions at 25 cents would be $250,000, would it not?

Mr. Keifer. Yes.

Mr. Chairman, that is nothing more than assertion? Is it a fact? Then, why did the gentleman not offer some proof? If it is true, it ought to be susceptible of proof; and if satisfactory evidence is produced here, it would end this debate. But it is not a fact, as is easily shown by the figures of the Commissioner of Pensions. He is very specific in his statement. He presents a table, which I will print in my remarks, showing what each agency costs:

Topeka
Columbus
Chicago Knoxville
Indianapolis
Boston
Philadelphia
New York City
Washington
Des Moines
Milwaukee	-
Buffalo
Pittsburg
San Francisco
Detroit
Louisville
Augusta
Concord

Mr. COX of Indiana. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. Not now; a little later on. The average of those agencies is 56.8 cents. The cost at Washington is 63.1 cents.

Mr. KEIFER. Where does the gentleman get that?

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. From a letter of the Commissioner of Pensions. This shows a difference in favor of the agencies of 6.3 cents, or, allowing a million pensioners, that would make over $60,000. Mr. Chairman, why has the committee not shown that it would cost less in Washington than the average of the 17 agencies? If the commissioner's written statement is correct, the consolidation of the agencies would cost $60,000 more than the existing plan. I know what the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Keifer] said yesterday in his remarks.

Will the gentleman allow me to make one Mr. KEIFER.

suggestion?

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. Yes.

Mr. KEIFER. The statement I gave yesterday, as stated in my speech, was 51 cents per capita in the fiscal year 1907. This morning's statement, made for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1908, fixes the per capita in Washington at 44 cents.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. I have given the commissioner's own figures in his own handwriting. They can not be changed daily to fit the gentleman's argument.

Mr. KEIFER. Made when?

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. The statement I present was published in the RECORD of March 19, 1908, and will be found on page 3692. Now, what is the reply of the gentleman from Ohio? Simply that in Washington other expenses are paid which make the average per pension higher here than at some of the other agencies. But we are not furnished specific infor-It is not in the RECORD and not before this House.

Why did he not come into court with proper proof? Year after year he comes here with mere assertion. There are some agencies

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has again expired.

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may have five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from New York may have five minutes additional time. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MACON. I desire to ask the gentleman a question. Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. Yes.

Mr. MACON. I believe you stated in your statement a few minutes ago that there was a saving of about $60,000 by maintaining the different agencies, if there were as many as a million pensioners on the roll.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. According to the statement

Mr. ALEXANDER of Pensions; yes. of the Commissioner of Pensions; yes.

About $60,000. Then, sir, I will ask you if we Mr. MACON. About $60,000. Then, sir, I will ask you if there would not be a saving of $8,000 to the Government if we abolish the 17 pension agencies and do away with 17 pension agents at a salary of $4,000 each, which would make $68,000. That would be a clear saving in round numbers in salaries alone of $8,000, if it does cost $60,000 more to pay the pensions in Washington than at the agencies that it is now sought to abolish.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. In answer to the gentleman from Arkansas, let me explain how this table which I have presented is made up. It costs at Topeka 42.5 per pensioner. That is arrived at by dividing the entire expense of that agency, including the salaries of the agent and all his employees, by the number of pensioners. That gives the cost per pensioner. At Columbus, the expense is 45.8. That is reached in the same way.

Now, if you add up the entire cost of the 18 agencies and divide the sum total by 18, you get the average per pensioner for the whole country, which is 56.8 cents. Now, subtract the average of all the agencies, 56.8, from 63.1 cents, the cost per pensioner at Washington, and you have 6.3 in favor of the agencies. The gentleman from Ohio can not get away from that. It is proof, not assumption. He bases his argument on the letter of the Secretary of the Interior, which says "it is estimated," or reduces the cost per pensioner at Washington by avoiding arbitrarily expenses which the commissioner included in his table ten months ago. He does not so much as tell us what expenses he leaves out. He would not do this in court. But anything, he thinks, will go in this House.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. Certainly. Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Is it not true that all the vouchers are made out here in Washington and sent to these

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. That is another reason offered by the opposition, and I am glad the gentleman asked it. The vouchers are made up here in Washington in a way, but the work is not duplicated at the agencies. If the Secretary of the Interior had fully understood the work of these agencies, he would hardly have marshaled that as an argument for their abolition.

Last year the Senate and House reached a compromise, turning the matter over to the President for his action. Much stress had been laid upon the claim that the President desired the abolition of these 17 offices, an assumption which received additional importance, because his Commissioner of Pensions and Secretary of the Interior indicated a preference for the work being done in Washington. When the matter was turned over to the President, therefore, the belief obtained that his action would settle the question. He could ascertain the absolute truth respecting expense and convenience, as well as the desirability of consolidation, and the fact that he has seen fit to continue all the agencies indicates that he has found no good reason, based on economy or betterment of service, for interfering with present conditions.

Now, on what does the committee base its report this year? It had nothing but theories and assumptions last year, and its position now is weakened by the action of the President. desired to bring the question up again this year, why did it not make a thorough investigation? It had the time and the opportunity. But it has examined no one, and offers no new testi-mony. The Commissioner of Pensions and the Secretary of the Interior are silent. It has not even attempted to answer the points made in the last session by the opponents of its recommendations, showing by the only statistics furnished that the cost of paying the pensioners at Washington would be over $60,000 more than under the present or agency system.

Mr. Chairman, the work must be done in Washington or elsewhere, and since it is shown by irrefutable proof that it can be done as cheaply and as well under the present system, why make a change? Several important reasons exist why these offices should not be disturbed. Each one has a force of exoffices should not be disturbed. Each one has a force of experienced clerks, whose homes and family ties are in the several agency towns. Many of them are soldiers and the widows and orphans of soldiers. Shall these people be rudely turned out of office, simply that their work may be done in Washington by other people, perhaps less worthy and less efficient? Is this just or humane? Some one says, "Oh, bring them to Washington." Break up happy home life in Buffalo, in Pittsburg, and in other agency cities simply to transfer work here which can be done as well and as cheaply there? Some of them can not come here. There are in the way aged fathers, helpless mothers, growing families and children in the state of the stat growing families, and children in school. Will you turn them out of office simply to have the work done here? The President would not do it-why should you? What is to be gained by such cruelty?

Another reason appeals to me for not disturbing the present system. These offices are of incalculable benefit to the old To them they go for assistance and information. Their vouchers and papers are prepared for them. Often payments are made twice a week; otherwise some pensioners would wait for their pay a long time after their names go upon the rolls. Indeed, the old soldier visits the pension office of his district very much as the pilgrim visits Mecca. Whatever he needs to know about his papers or pension is furnished him promptly and correctly. He has no fear of misinformation or He could not come to Washington. That is too far away and the expense too great. But he finds his way easily to the agency of his district, where he is known and is not kept waiting.

Mr. Chairman, there is the reason that we are dealing with the old soldier and his widow and orphans. The country owes much to the heroic defender of the Union. At least, it can not afford to turn him out of office without good cause, or to inconvenience him, or to treat him with disrespect. This is not a question of economy or of reform. The existing way is as economical and as wholesome as the proposed change. Nothing should be assumed. The burden of proof is upon the proponents, and that proof should be established beyond the shadow of a doubt. If greater cost exists, it can easily be made clear and sufficient. Let this House be fair.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has again expired. The Chair will now recognize some gentleman-

Mr. ADAIR. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent of the committee to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Chairman, I want to make a suggestion in reference to this debate.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio will make his suggestion.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that debate close in one hour and that the time, although a larger part of the time of debate has been in favor of the amendment, be equally divided between the two sides.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio, who has charge of this bill, asks unanimous consent of the committee that debate on this amendment may close in one hour, and that the time of debate shall be equally divided between those who are in favor of the amendment and those who are opposed to it. How is the time to be controlled?

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman qualify that by stating that if the time on either side be not consumed that the other inat it the time on either side be not consumed that the other side may have the use of that time not to exceed one hour?

Mr. KEIFER. Well, the total time may be occupied by one side or the other, but in fairness must be equally divided.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. With that qualification, I do not object. The CHAIRMAN. The time is to be controlled by the Chair. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Chair will now recognize the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. GARDNER] under the five-minute rule.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. Currier having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House of Representatives by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries, who also informed the House of Representatives that the President had, on January 18, 1909, approved and signed bill of the

H. R. 23866. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the construction of a bridge between Fort Snelling Reservation and St. Paul, Minn.," approved March 17, 1906.

PENSION APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, this is the third time that the Committee on Appropriations has brought this recommendation to your attention. Twice it has been passed by a large vote. The ground for and against has been traversed thoroughly in preceding years. Every point that has been raised this morning was raised one and two years ago, and has been answered over and over again.

After it was passed favorably the first time, the Secretary of the Interior was instructed, and that instruction grew out of a disagreement between the conferees, to investigate and report, first, whether consolidation would work inconvenience to the pensioners; second, whether consolidation would result in a saving to the Government, and report at the opening of the session of the next Congress. He reported negatively as to the first-that is, that consolidation would not work inconvenience to the pensioners. In former discussions great stress has been laid upon that. Happily no one here this morning claims that if there is a consolidation the pensioner will suffer from inconvenience. At least that has not been alleged up to this moment. The second is, he declares that there will be a saving. I am astonished at the gentleman from New York [Mr. ALEXANDER], and I am sorry he has retired from the Chamber. I am astonished that a man so level headed as he usually manifests himself to be should be so wide of the mark in saying that there is no evidence of any saving. Now, one of the high officials

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. If I can have time.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. What does the gentleman mean by suggesting that I have retired from the Chamber? Are his other statements on a par with that as to accuracy?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Knowing the gentleman so well as I do, I will allow him to put his own construction on it. I know he would not consciously misconstrue anything. But he says this, "What is the evidence that there is any reduction?" The Secretary of the Interior, in an official paper to the Congress of the United States, in answer to a direction to investigate and report, says that the saving will amount to at least $200,000 the first year, and after that to $225,000, and in subsequent years still more.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. Now, does the gentleman know from anything before the House on which that statement of the Secretary of the Interior is based?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. I will go a step further and answer that later. The Commissioner of Pensions, who is presumably, as a responsible—
The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. I move that he have five or ten minutes longer, if he desires them.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair, having control of the time, will yield to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. GARDNER] five minutes additional time.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Thank you. The Pension Commissioner over and over again has stated, after the most careful investigation as to the expense of various agencies and the expense here in the city of Washington, that it would save at least $200,000 the first year.

Now, to answer the gentleman's question. If you instruct a responsible officer in a corporation with which you are connected to investigate and report what, in your judgment, would be the saving on a given line of action and he brings to you a statement of results based upon such investigation, you are bound to accept his statement or impeach his judgment or disprove the data upon which such is based.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Certainly.
Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. I ask the gentleman if it is not a fact that in the examination of all such questions in his committee, as a rule, as well as in the other great committees in the House, that the heads of the departments bring in the evidence on which they base their estimates? It is not left to assertion; it is not left to estimates. The facts are brought in.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Is the gentleman asking a question or making a speech?

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. I know that is true in the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. The gentleman had fifteen minutes, and if he will give me as long—

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. GARDNEB] yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. ALEX-ANDER 1

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Not if he is going to make a speech.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. Well, I asked a question.
Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. The gentleman has not answered the query that I put to him at all. It stands there unquestionably as the principle of action that ought to govern, and the House owes it to the country to carry it out the same as all intelligent business concerns would. Now, the gentleman wants to be specific. He says himself that the Topeka agency costs 42½ cents per pensioner. They pay one-tenth and more of all the pensioners. He did not mention the case of Augusta; he did not mention the case up in New Hampshire where it is almost double that, with a bare 15,000 pensioners to pay. Why did not the gentleman from New York [Mr. Alexander], who proposes to be so fair, get down to bed rock and take the smallest agencies and compare them with the largest agencies, and then point out to the House how the larger the agency the less per capita it costs, and the smaller the agency the more per capita? The gentleman would get away from it—

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. Will the gentleman allow me to ask

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. I can not yield to the gentleman to make a speech. You have had much of my time and all of yours.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. Do you yield? Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Not unless you get me some more time.

Now there are the bed-rock facts. If you can pay 100,000 pensioners at 42 cents and 15,000 costs 77 cents, what have you a right to expect where you have 951,000 to pay with the aid of the most modern mechanical devices? Now, I ask the gentleman as a business man, can you escape the conclusion that it will be more economical? Answer "yes" or "no."

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. The gentleman will not give me an opportunity to answer.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Yes or no. It is mere begging the proposition. The judgment of this House has gone affirmatively twice to the country, and I hope it will go again. The gentleman from Missouri wanted to know why the conferees did "not stand up to the rack," or words to that effect. Let me say that representatives of the body at the other end of this Capitol declared that they had not given any attention to this matter; some of them said last year "If you will put this through, we will agree to investigate it;" and when driven into a corner, and told it would be a saving, one of them said: "We do not care for the saving, what we want is the offices;" and that is the size of it. Nearly every man advocating the continuance of these agencies is directly interested in an agency, by residence or otherwise, in his State.

Mr. FOCHT. I would like to ask the gentleman why it is that the Grand Army posts of my district have been petitioning me to vote for a continuance of the present condition of the payment of pensions at the agencies?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. I am glad the gentleman called attention to that.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. I ask five minutes more.
The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will make a statement to the gentleman from Michigan. The Chair has recognized the gentleman from Michigan for ten minutes. By order of the committee the time has been limited to thirty minutes on a side, and there are twenty minutes remaining to those who are opposed to this amendment, and the time has already been assigned.

Mr. TAWNEY. I have been allotted five minutes. I will yield one minute to the gentleman from Michigan to answer the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman will permit; perhaps, under the rule, the gentleman from Minnesota has no authority to yield time; but, if there is no objection, the Chair will permit the gentleman to yield one minute of his time to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. I can answer directly. I am a member of the Grand Army, and my district has been worked thoroughly to defeat me because I was in favor of this consolidation. Last year the commander of the department of which I am a member went from post to post and camp fire to camp fire, working among the Grand Army men, and tried his best to defeat my return to Congress simply because conscientiously, after most careful investigation, I believed this is in the interest of economy and no detriment to the pensioners, and therefore favored the consolidation. Work of like kind has been done in other departments, to my personal knowledge. Some, not all, of the pension agents have been exceedingly active in stirring up the comrades to exert their influence against the consolidation.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will now recognize the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] for five minutes, and then will later recognize the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I do not think that the argument just advanced that persons who are espousing the amendment before the House to continue the agencies as they now exist have a personal motive in the matter and can not judge this question as well as those who are on the other side should affect the decision of this question. I take the position of the gentleman from New York [Mr. ALEXANDER], and of others from cities where these agencies are now maintained, that, having acquaintance with the operation of these agencies, they have a better knowledge of the conditions than strangers, and at the Milwaukee agency I understand that the clerks are occupied all the time

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Will the gentleman allow me? Mr. STAFFORD. I decline to yield. I have only a few minutes. And that the work as performed in these agencies is done more economically and more expeditiously than it could be done here if the agencies were consolidated in Washington.

Why is it that the average clerical hire in these outside agencies is but $977, whereas the average clerical hire in the city of Washington is $1,280? Does it need repetition in this Chamber to any Member who is acquainted with the superannuated clerks in the Pension Office to show that they are not as efficient as the clerks who are employed throughout the country? And is there any wonder, then, that the cost of this service here in Washington is 63.13 cents per pensioner, according to the figures as presented a year ago by the Department of the Interior, and that the cost at Des Moines and Milwaukee, with the same number of pensioners, was 10 and 9 cents less per capita?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Are you asking me a question? Mr. STAFFORD. We scan the report of the Secretary of the Interior for this year and do not find any facts or details at all concerning the expenses for the past fiscal year. When last night I propounded the question to the gentleman having this matter in charge, as to what was the extra cost that should be allotted because of the expense of pension surgeons being included in the item of the Washington agency, he was unable to give the House any information.

What do we find before us? Nothing but statements based upon pure assumption of the Pension Commissioner that there would be a saving if these offices were consolidated, when the data before us shows that there would be an excess charge and expense if this work was done here in the agency at Wash-

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Did you hear the statement of the gentleman this morning?

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman from Michigan made the argument a little while ago that we should consider somewhat the extra cost in some of the smaller agencies; but if you will figure, as I figured a year ago, and consider that there are but a small number of pensioners paid there, you will find, based upon the cost of 63.13 cents per pensioner here in Washington, that if they were all paid here at this agency, it would result in an increased cost of a hundred thousand dollars. I take it that every one of those who are advocating this proposition here on the floor is actuated by the same motives as are those on the other side of this question.

If they would have shown to them that economy would result, they would, regardless of any pressure from home, be in favor of the proposition to abolish the agencies; and I will say that, for my part, I have not received any letter from any person in my district concerning this during the present session. They would be prompted by the same motives to discontinue the agencies; but at this time, when there are as many pensioners on the rolls as there ever have been-

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. No, no.
Mr. STAFFORD. There being 950,000 pensioners—
Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Less than there have been at any time in sixteen years.

Mr. STAFFORD. There may be just a few less, but there is not any decided difference. And will the gentleman question that there were only 230,000 pensioners on the rolls when these agencies were established?

Two years ago we called upon the Secretary of the Interior to make an inquiry under a resolution as to the economical management of these pension agencies, and whether any econwould result by the proposed consolidation. right to expect some information to be furnished that would justify his present recommendation; but does he present any data or any statistics whatsoever to support his claim that a saving would result? And did he have any investigation of the agencies; did he dispatch any person to the agencies throughout the country to investigate as to whether there would be any saving?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. The record does not show that there was any investigation whatsoever, and he does not present any facts at all in support of it; and until he does present some facts, I shall vote in favor of the retention of these agencies.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of this amendment, because I believe it is in the interest of both economy and administration. No man in this House ever heard of anything being done cheaper or quicker in Washington than it is done elsewhere in the country. It will take as many men to do the work in Washington as are employed in the payment of these pensions in the country to-day. On the question of economy, where will you put the pension clerks if you bring them here? You can not put them in the Pension Office, for the space there is occupied to-day. We are now paying almost a half million dollars a year for rent in Washington. If you bring all the clerks here that are necessary to pay the pensions, you will fill up many of the vacant houses in Washington at a large rental with these additional pension clerks. To-day they are occupying buildings that are owned by the Government, In addition to that, we are paying to-day in without rent. Washington $1,280 per clerk to the clerks engaged in the payment of these pensions, and outside of Washington we are paying $970 per clerk.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Mr. Chairman-

Mr. CAMPBELL. I can not yield. I only have five minutes. The Committee on Appropriations have had much time, and they have not presented a statement of facts here to show that there will be any economy in paying these pensions in Washington

But I am opposed to centralizing these agencies here for another reason. Such action will result in the delay of paying the pensions to the old soldiers. It will also result in many instances of the old soldiers who are to-day employed in the agencies outside of Washington at $900 a year in having to stay at home without a job and giving place to clerks here who are rated at $1,280 a year, because they can not come here and live on the $900 a year they are living on at home. No man who is employed at Topeka or Columbus or any other great agency can leave his home and come here and live on a salary such as he receives to-day. Many of these clerks live in their own houses. They can not leave their homes without great hardship. Many of them have been in the service for the last twenty years and are able and efficient clerks, and the figures of the Pension Commissioner show they have paid pensions more economically in the country than it has been done in Washington.

In answer to the statement of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Gardner] that no one opposes this consolidation who does not have an agency in his district, I want to say that I have no agency in my district. I have few, if any, constituents in any agency as employees; but I have hundreds of pensioners in my district who receive their pay from the Topeka agency, and it is for them that I speak. No man who favors centralizing these agencies in Washington has shown that it will not delay the payment of pensions. It is a mere assumption that the change will result in having the business done more economically than it is done to-day; and even if it did, the delay that would not be economy to save a few dollars a year as a result of delay in the payment of pensions.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, in a few brief words I want to record myself in favor of the bill reported to this House by the committee, and in opposition to the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TAYLOR].

It strikes me that the argument advanced in behalf of the amendment is a peculiar argument. The argument advanced this morning in favor of the amendment is to the effect that the 18 pension agencies are largely in the interest of economy. If that is true—that it is in the interest of economy to have 18 different pension agencies scattered all over the United States—upon the same principle why not have 36 pension agencies scattered over the United States, and then you would reduce the expenses of the Bureau of Pensions to an absolute minimum? I take it if there was not one word said, one iota of evidence furnished by the committee showing that it would be in the interest of economy to concentrate these agencies in the city of Washington, that the facts would bear that proposition out.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. It is a self-evident proposition.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Yes; as suggested by the gentleman from Georgia, a self-evident proposition. Suppose you have a business man. He has that business scattered over 18 or 20 different States in the United States. It is certainly a self-evident proposition that it will be much more expensive for that man to conduct his business scattered over the United States than it would be if it was all concentrated at one given point.

Objection has been made this morning to the fact that the Secretary of the Interior does not give any facts or data upon which to base his statement when he declares that it would save the Government of the United States not less than $200,000 the first year and $225,000 the next year. I insist that his statement, wherein he does make the positive statement that it would save the Government of the United States $200,000 the first year, is a statement of fact and not a conclusion.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Indiana

has expired.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. Chairman, this is the third time that this matter has been before the Congress; the two times before I was Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House, and, therefore, did not have any opportunity to express myself, either by word of mouth or by speech. I listened to the discussions, however, as I have at this time, with a great deal of interest for the purpose of discovering the reason why we should change the law that has so long been on the statute book, and which change, to my mind and in my judgment, is bitterly opposed by the great majority of pensioners of the United States.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I am willing at this time and at all times to support an amendment to existing law which will bring any material economy to the country and by so doing work no injury to the pensioned veterans of the civil war. But, judging as best I can from the arguments which have been presented pro and con, I am well satisfied that at least it is a mooted question whether there is to be any real economy to the country or not. As for myself, sir, I am not in favor of any cheese paring method when applied to the pensioners of the civil war. Even though it did cost possibly a little more to maintain the agencies, as the pensioners desire them and as they have existed for lo, these many years, I should still vote in favor of the existing law. I have no pension agency in my district, although I am a neighbor to a district which has such agency.

I submit that that alone has absolutely nothing to do with my attitude on this question, although the desire of the pensioners in general has much to do with it, and especially as I have not yet been convinced that there is going to be any material economy accomplished by the passage of the bill as presented. Mr. Chairman, you may call this sentiment, and you may say that sentiment has absolutely nothing, or ought to have nothing, to do with the legislation by the American Congress, but I submit that this is a sentiment which has guided us since the close of the civil war, a sentiment which does credit to our manhood as Members of this House and does credit to us as a Nation. Therefore, inasmuch as I am not convinced that there is to be any material economy, inasmuch as I am satisfied that it is the desire of the soldiers of the country that the law should be retained as at present, I am in favor of the amendment as proposed.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, it is evident from the statements made here that it has not been proven that there will be any material saving to the Government if this bill is passed as reported by the committee. But there are a few matters in connection with the subject that I would like to present to this committee. In the first place, the law under which these pension agents are appointed gives the President the power to make the appointments. The law does not say there must be so many agents. It says that whenever in the judgment of the President he thinks it advisable to appoint an agent, he may do so. Under that law he has appointed 18 agents throughout the United States. He can refuse to issue the commissions as vacancies occur. He may refuse appointments, but it seems to me—

Mr. BOWERS. Will the gentleman yield for a question? Mr. KAHN. Yes.

Mr. BOWERS. Does the gentleman contend that all of the pension agencies now in existence in this country are established under the act to which he refers?

Mr. KAHN. I am not quite informed on the subject, but I believe a majority of them are.

Mr. BOWERS. Quite a number, but let me say to the gen-

Mr. BOWERS. Quite a number, but let me say to the gentleman that a number of pension agencies were established by specific law.

Mr. KAHN. Be that as it may, the fact remains these agencies have been established, and I apprehend they have been established for the convenience of the pensioners of this country. The payment of pensions is not the sole duty of the pension agencies. It is not the sole thing for which they were established. Wherever there is a pension agency in this country there are hundreds of pensioners who go to the agent for advice. They go to find out certain requirements of the pension laws, and they are given the advice freely. If you disestablish these agencies, you simply compel the pensioners to go to pension attorneys for that advice. That is what you will do.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. For what?

Mr. KAHN. For getting the advice that they now get for nothing from the pension agencies. The matter of economy is an important thing, but yet this Government has established in all of the large cities of the United States post-office stations and subpost-office stations in order to bring the post-office near the people. All the business of these communities could be done at one general post-office, but for the advantage of all the people the Government has established stations and substations in order that the great majority of the people of the country may be able to do their business conveniently, expeditiously, and economically.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Does the gentleman see any parallel between the substations of the post-office and the pen-

Well, there are upward of a million pensioners in the United States, and they are a considerable proportion of the population of the United States. I contend that every pensioner is entitled to have his pension agency as near his home as it can possibly be established, not only for the purpose, primarily, of giving him his payment, but in order that he may go to that agency and find out certain matters in connection with the pension laws of the country. It is the custom in thousands of cases for the pensioner to go to the agent when he wants to make application for an increase and get the agent's advice in regard to preparing his affidavits. This advice is freely given by the agent. If the pensioner had to consult an attorney about the matter, he would have to pay a fee for the very advice that he now gets gratis from the agent. It frequently happens that the agent points out mistakes in the affidavits for increase, and in doing so he saves the applicant the annoyance and the delay that would result if the mistake were not corrected. I believe the amendment is a good one and ought to prevail.

Mr. FOCHT. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. Yes. Mr. FOCHT. Ignoring the question of economy entirely, I would like to ask the gentleman to state which plan he thinks would produce the most efficient service to the old soldier?

Mr. KAHN. The present plan. In that connection let me call a matter to the gentleman's attention. The mail going out from the different agencies reaches the pensioner within one or two or three days at most. From Washington, going to the far West, it would take four or five days. Recently a mail car was burned which was carrying mail matter between San Francisco and the city of Washington. Such things happen occasionally. If such a car had contained vouchers for pen-sioners, the delay in securing duplicates from Washington would have led to untold hardship to thousands of pensioners in the far West.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I now yield two minutes of my time to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Holliday].

The CHAIRMAN. With the permission of the committee, the Chair will permit the gentleman from Minnesota to yield two minutes of his time to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. HOLLIDAY. Mr. Chairman, in two minutes, of course, no very elaborate argument can be made. I am opposed to the amendment and in favor of the bill as reported by the committee. I believe it is in the interest of economy, and there is another argument in favor of it, and that is the new pensioner the pensioner just placed upon the pension roll-will get his money sooner if pensions are paid from Washington than he will get them now.

I remember one instance where a pensioner wrote to me. His pension had been allowed, and after some weeks had elapsed my attention was called by the pensioner, the beneficiary of the allowance, to the fact that he had not received his pension and the reason is the pensions are allowed here and then they are sent away to the particular agency. That caused delay and then there is some delay there, whereas, if the pensions were paid from one agency, the place where the pensions are allowed, they will be placed upon the roll and the money will be sent as rapidly as the clerical force could do it to the pension beneficiary.

Mr. SULLOWAY. It would not be paid until the quarter

Mr. HOLLIDAY. It is not paid now at the beginning of the quarter. It is delayed frequently a considerable period and it would be paid more promptly from Washington.

Mr. SULLOWAY. If he did not get the voucher, it would not make a particle of difference.

Mr. HOLLIDAY. As a matter of fact it does not make any difference in the long run; the payment would come about three months apart anyhow. If it was a little later in beginning it would get around every three months after that, and I would

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair now recognizes the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY].

Mr. HOLLIDAY. I would simply like to add this, Mr. Chairman, that a great deal has been said about pensioners demanding that these pension agencies be restored. If the pension agents themselves happen to be soldiers, I can understand why that demand is made, but as an old soldier and as a member of the Grand Army I may say I never heard one single pensioner express any desire to have these agencies retained with an additional expense to the Government.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, the real question involved is a simple business proposition. Congress by the enactment of this bill into law will appropriate over $160,000,000 for the payment of pensions heretofore allowed. The only question involved in this discussion is in respect to the payment and administration of this appropriation of $160,000,000. Can it or can it not be administered efficiently and more economically through 1 agency than through 18 different agencies scattered throughout the different parts of the country. It seems to me that it should be manifest to every Member of this House who stops to consider the proposition from a business standpoint that 1 agency with a complete organization can distribute from one central point the $160,000,000 appropriated for pensions more economically than the 18 different agencies could do it.

The Secretary of the Interior told the Committee on Appropriations during the last session of Congress that the economy in this proposed consolidation would amount to at least $350,000. Part of this sum would be saved in the salaries of the agents themselves, and part of it in a reduction of the clerical force, and another part in the mechanical equipment that could be used here in a central agency for the purpose of addressing envelopes, doing much of the clerical work and computation, which is practically all of the service required of any of these To equip all of these 18 agencies with these modern mechanical appliances would be expensive and it would not be good administration.

For that reason, Mr. Chairman, and because of the economy, and because of the greater efficiency in the doing of the work, and because, also, it does not in the least delay or affect the payment of a single pension in the United States, the committee has heretofore recommended this provision and the House has twice adopted it, and the committee did not this time feel justified in reversing the policy of this House as well as the policy of the committee itself, and that, too, without any evidence. Now, we are paying from this agency in Washington all the pensions that are paid to pensioners in foreign countries, the aggregate being about $7,000,000 a year. There is no complaint on the part of the foreign pensioner on account of delay. his payment regularly four times a year on the same day, and the same is true now and will be true of the pensioners of the United States if this provision goes through and the amendment is defeated.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. Tawner] has expired.

The Chair will now recognize the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Keifer], in opposition to the amendment, if there is no gentle-man desiring to speak in favor of the amendment, for ten minutes.

Mr. WANGER. Mr. Chairman, I would like to say a word in favor of the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman consume his time now or after the gentleman from Ohio speaks?

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Chairman, I wish to close the debate. The CHAIRMAN. The Chair then will recognize the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Wanger] for five minutes.

Mr. WANGER. Mr. Chairman, I would be very pleased to vote against this amendment if I were convinced of any substantial economy to result to the Government by dispensing with pension agencies, and that the dispensing them would not deprive the pensioners of the substantial services which they are now enjoying to their great advantage.

My friend from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] quotes the evidence of the Secretary of the Interior, I think it was, or the Commissioner of Pensions, of last year, of a very large saving. But it will not be forgotten that there was a demonstration at that time by a gentleman with an experience of several years in the payment of pensions, to the effect that the views that there would be resulting economy from consolidating these agencies were purely theoretical and were based upon misapprehension; that, on the contrary, there would be equal or greater expenditures under a consolidation than there are now with the several agencies, with great inconvenience to clerks and pensioners.

It must lie within the experience of nearly every Member of this House that writing to the Bureau of Pensions-I mean that where pensioners write to the Bureau of Pensions-with the very large number of cases with which that Bureau has to deal, it takes a much longer period of time to send an answer to the correspondent than it does to get an answer from these several pension agencies. There is now the certainty of prompt payment and of prompt information.

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman permit an inquiry there? Mr. WANGER. One moment. And just at this time, when there is a movement to discentralize the great postal service of the country and divide its functions and scatter them all over the United States, it seems to me an extraordinary period to again bring in this proposition without ever having had any hearing by anybody except a few advocates of the abolition.

Mr. TAWNEY. The gentleman referred a moment ago to the difference in time of receiving an answer from an agency and one from the department. The time is controlled largely, I suppose, by the amount of time required to investigate the record. The record of all the pensioners is kept here in Washington. Inquiries made here by the pensioner are in respect to his own case. That is something that the agency has nothing whatever to deal with. The agency deals merely with the payment of the pension; and if the inquiry is anything in respect to the payment of the pension the pensioner gets a prompt reply, because it does not require three or four days of time to investigate and find out what answer to send him.

Mr. WANGER. It requires considerable time to get the correspondence to the desk where it properly belongs and where it will be dealt with. We all have experience in calling for information in respect to the filing of pension applications or testimony, and it takes two or three weeks at the bureau before these applications or affidavits reach the files of the case and before the answer from the bureau with respect to them can be relied upon.

Mr. DAWSON. Does the gentleman know whether or not it is the practice of the Pension Bureau to answer inquiries received from pension applicants at all? I understand if a pensioner writes the Pension Commissioner with regard to his pension case he is not certain to get any answer at all.

Mr. WANGER. My understanding is that he is not certain to get any answer at all, but that in a considerable number of instances an answer is received. That fault does not lie entirely with the Pension Bureau. Letters are sent without defining and specifying the case to which they relate, and the bureau very often, under those circumstances, does not ask for the additional information, whereas when the letter goes to the pension agent the latter goes to his list, and response is made promptly.

Mr. HOLLIDAY. I will ask the gentleman what information the pension agent can give about a pension that has not been allowed?

Mr. WANGER. None at all where the pension has not been allowed.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. The Chair now recognizes the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEIFER] to close the debate.

Mr. KEIFER. I understand I have ten minutes.
The CHAIRMAN. Ten minutes.
Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Chairman, I understand the difficulty that the gentlemen labor under generally in their effort to prove to this House and the country that it is economical to maintain a few offices located in certain quarters of the Union; and while I recognize that, I also recognize the fact that not one of those who spoke for this amendment ever dreams about the poor soldiers that live in 31 States of this Union and in all the Territories in the West where they have no pension agencies at all.

My friend from California [Mr. KAHN] appeals tearfully for the old soldier that can go to the San Francisco office on the morning of pay day and there cause much delay in the payment of pensions while he gets his first. But he sheds no tear for the pensioners of Los Angeles, Seattle, and other cities on the Pacific coast, and all the pensioners living in the other States, like Idaho and Montana, and other places, who all get their pensions from the San Francisco office. The pensioners in these States and Territories do not complain, because they, in fact, get their pensions paid to them as regularly and as promptly as those residing in San Francisco.

Now, we have had a good deal of talk about agencies being continued, even though we passed this bill. No such dire calamity would happen, but it might if they were to be continued, as my colleague from Ohio says, and we had to pay them. But they will be disestablished by the President, as they were by law established by the President, so that we will have no lawsuits nor any payments of that kind to make.

They say the Pension Office is not large enough, and it has been said in the last twenty-four hours that we would have to build more pension buildings to pay the pensioners if they were all paid here. It seems hardly possible that much more room can be secured in the Pension building than is required now for the one located there. The Commissioner of Pensions, in his statement a year ago, undertook to tell us that there would be plenty of room in the Pension building, and calculations and estimates have been practically made since, and he confirms now what he stated in his testimony before the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations. He said then:

We will have room in the event that we are allowed the entire Pension building for pension purposes; that is, if they surrender us the whole building. We have the board of appeals in there now, of the Secretary's office, and one room is occupied by the Indian Office. If those rooms were restored to us, we would have plenty of room.

That concludes that argument. But the gentleman from New York says that he has read the RECORD and listened and studied for years to find out a single fact that tends to show any economy. It has been conceded all along that we would save 125 clerks; and my friend from Michigan [Mr. GARDNER] says they will cost $1,000 each a year; and if you will get a slate and pencil you can easily figure out that that will be $125,000. This will show a saving of that amount per year for clerks alone.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. KEIFER. Not now. If he will multiply the number of agents, 17, by the salary now paid each, to wit, $4,000, he will get $68,000, a further saving of that sum; and so if he would go on he might get some other facts. He need not study a year longer. [Laughter.]
Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. And $4,500 a year rent.

Mr. KEIFER. And $4,500 for rent in the city of New York. Some of these things are self-evident. It costs less in all the agencies in the proportion as they are greater in point of numbers of pensioners paid and amount of pension money paid. Old statistics have been revamped here. I do not know when or how they were made. It was attempted yesterday and to-day to show that the city of Washington was the most expensive place of any in paying pensions. I tried to show that the cost per capita in the year 1907, in Washington, as shown by the testimony, was 51 cents. It was contended that this calculation was not true, and gentlemen stated it was 63 cents. talked with the Commissioner of Pensions this morning over the phone and asked him to give the cost per capita for the last fiscal year of paying the pensioners in four cases. He gave me in writing the result of a calculation made this day, showing the cost per capita in Buffalo, 49 cents; Philadelphia, 46 cents; Pittsburg, 49 cents, and Washington, 44 cents. So we have now got recent statistics.

I want to say that in making the calculation for Washington, reducing it to 44 cents, the commissioner said that he took into account not only the foreign pensioners, but the examining surgeons that have to be paid from here. I want to put into the RECORD this statement, so as to let it go in as a whole.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. He put the Washington agency on all fours with the other agencies?

Mr. KEIFER. Yes, undoubtedly; taking the same things into account; and he included the examining surgeons,

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. Is it true that the subcommittee having this matter in charge, of which the distinguished gentleman from Ohio is chairman, reported unanimously not to bring in this section in the bill until the subcommittee was instructed by the balance of the Committee on Appropriations to bring it in?

Mr. KEIFER. That statement is not quite true; and if it was, I would not be at liberty to speak of it here, for we do not reveal the votes of individual members on committees. The statement is not quite true. [Laughter.]

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. Will the gentleman from Ohio yield?

Mr. KEIFER. I can not allow you a minute; I will yield to you for a question. My time is about out.

Mr. ALEXANDER of New York. I just had that statement from the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations. [Laughter.]

Mr. KEIFER. Well, he is responsible for all he says here. I have no objection to it. It is not quite true. [Laughter.]
Mr. TAWNEY. What I said was that the Committee on Appropriations did not wish to take the responsibility of changing the policy of the House on this question, it having twice voted to consolidate those agencies.

Mr. KEIFER. I understood my friend from California [Mr. KAHN] to say that if pensioners can not go to the Pension Office they would have to go and hire an attorney at law, or an attorney of some kind, to help them get their pensions allowed.

I never have heard of any such case as that in forty years' ex-

It is still asserted here that there will be no economy in a reduction of the pension agencies, and it is repeatedly asserted that no investigation has been made which shows any economy will result.

Now, as it has been disputed so often, I want to read just one paragraph from the Secretary of the Interior after he had made an investigation of this subject, which my friend from New York seems to have forgotten. Two years ago we required by law that this subject be investigated by the Secretary of the Interior and that he report on the subject of the economy of discontinuing these agents. This he did, and after all his experience and getting all the facts together he became a competent witness, and I read a single sentence from his testimony in the hearings a year ago on the subject:

I believe that the saving would be nearer $350,000 a year in administration, and without any loss to the pensioners in expeditiously receiving their pensions, and without in any way interfering with the handling of the present business in the settlement of claims presented.

That is his testimony, and that comprises the conclusion of this matter, and I ask for a vote on the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to print in the RECORD a letter and memorandum from the Pension Office.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the Record. Is there objection? There was no objection.

The documents referred to are as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, UNITED STATES PENSION AGENCY, Washington, D. C., January 18, 1909.

Hon. V. WARNER, Commissioner of Pensions, Washington, D. C.

Washington, D. C.

Sin: The number of pensioners on the rolls of the Washington agency to-day is 53,359. This includes 5,047 who reside in foreign countries. It takes twice the length of time to examine a voucher executed in a foreign country as it does a domestic voucher by reason of the almost unmentionable foreign names and long addresses; for example, Levi W. Bailey, Port Victoria, Mahe, Seychelles Islands, Indian Ocean, via Bombay; or Julia H. A. Sternberg, 86 Kurfurstenstrasse III, Berlin, W., Germany; or Harry Ouseley Blake Lane, Hampden, Barkley street, St. Kilda, Melbourne, Victoria, Australia; or Fumiko Kikuchi, 750 (2) Ashiya, Seido Mura, Sarushinden, Mukogun, Hyogo-Ken, Japan. We also must scrutinize the vouchers to see if the officer before whom the voucher is executed is properly certified by an American consular officer. This makes relatively 63,000 pensioners, to which is added 5,000 examining surgeons, to whom were sent last year 18,200 checks. This reduces the cost of payment to 40 plus cents per pensioner.

There were sent out from this agency last year 261,470 pieces of mail.

The payment of the foreign pensioners is the most tedious. Written in the language of the country from which they come, it is with the greatest difficulty that we are able to decipher them, and repeatedly have to call in the assistance of an interpreter.

Respectfully, yours,

JNO. R. Kore, Language of the country of the pensions of the country of t

JNO. R. KING, United States Pension Agent.

MEMORANDUM.

The average cost per pensioner for the payment of pensions, exclusive of the pension agent's salary, at the Buffalo, Philadelphia, Pittsburg, and Washington agencies during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1908, was as follows:

	WW PINTS
BuffaloPhiladelphia	49 46
Pittsburg Washington	49 44

In obtaining the percentage at the Washington agency the number of examining surgeons paid at this agency was added to the number of pensioners, and each foreign pensioner considered as equivalent to two pensioners in the United States. It is believed, however, that the labor involved in the payment of foreign pensions is perhaps three times as great as that in paying the same number of pensioners in the United States. The contingent expenses at the Washington agency during the last fiscal year include $625 for postage in forwarding the checks to foreign pensioners. A similar expense does not occur at any other agency.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TAYLOR].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio) there were—ayes 65, noes 87.

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. Tellers, Mr. Chairman.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chairman appointed Mr. TAY-LOR of Ohio and Mr. KEIFER.

The committee again divided; and there were-ayes 71, noes 194

Accordingly the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as 1010ws:

The Commissioner of Pensions is hereby authorized and directed, with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, to arrange the pensioners, for the payment of pensions, in three groups as he may think proper; and he may from time to time change any pensioner from one group to another as he may deem convenient for the transaction of the public business. The pensioners in the first group shall be paid their quarterly pensions on January 4, April 4, July 4, and October 4 of each year; the pensioners in the second group shall be paid their quarterly pensions on February 4, May 4, August 4, and November 4 of each year; and the pensioners in the third group shall be paid their quarterly pensions on March 4. June 4, September 4, and December 4 of each year. The Commissioner of Pensions is hereby fully authorized, with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, to cause payments of pensions to be made for the fractional parts of quarters created by such change, so as to properly adjust all payments as herein provided.

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, a point of order to that paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman. Mr. TAYLOR of Onio. Mr. Chairman, this is a new scheme for dispensing the money of pensioners, is new legislation, and should not be in an appropriation bill. The same point of order was made against identically the same provision on the bill last year and was sustained.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Were points of order reserved against this bill when it was reported to the House?

The CHAIRMAN. Points of order were reserved.

Mr. MANN. I reserved them,

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Ohio [Mr.

Keifer] desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. KEIFER. Does the gentleman think this ought to go out? If it does, it will leave the matter just as well, perhaps, except in a possible emergency. There might be some embar-rassment to the department. I think last year, after discus-sion, it was permitted to remain in the bill. It is probably subject to a point of order if the gentleman insists upon it. It is simply a regulation of the mode of paying that ought to be in the statutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TAY-LOR] insist upon his point of order?

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. I insist on the point of order. The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

The Clerk read as follows:

In case of sickness or unavoidable absence of the agent for payment of pensions from his office, the Commissioner of Pensions may, with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, authorize the chief clerk of his office or some other cierk employed therein to temporarily act as such agent for payment of pensions.

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order to that paragraph that it is new legislation, changing existing law

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Ohio [Mr.

Keffer desire to be heard?

Mr. KEIFER. I want to appeal to the gentleman to allow that to stand, because, as an illustration, if the pension agent at Columbus, Ohio, is ill and unable to perform his duties on a pension-paying day, if this clause is allowed to become a law the Commissioner of Pensions will be permitted to designate somebody to act temporarily, and to allow the payment to go on. The only effect of striking this out would be to subject the department to some embarrassment in case an exigency of that kind should arise. This has nothing to do with the consolidation of pension agencies at all.

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. I will say that the pension agency in Columbus has run for a great many years without this legislation. I insist on my point of order.

Mr. KEIFER. It might not happen there, but it has happened at other places

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

And with the approval of the Commissioner of Pensions and the Secretary of the Interior, the agent for payment of pensions may designate and authorize the necessary number of clerks to sign the name of the agent for payment of pensions to official checks.

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that that changes existing law.

Mr. KEIFER. I suppose the gentleman makes these points of order upon the theory that this legislation is in pursuance of the decisions of the House with reference to the consolidation of pension agencies. It is not, and is proposed only for the purpose of relieving the existing agencies from embarrassment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio concedes that the point of order is well taken, and the Chair sustains the point of order. The Clerk, completing the reading of the bill, read as follows:

The official bond given by the agent for payment of pensions shall be held to cover and apply to the acts of the person appointed to act in

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I raise the point of order against that paragraph. It changes existing law.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order. Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill as amended to the House with a favorable recommendation.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. BUTLER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 26203, the pension appropriation bill, and had directed him to report the same back with an amendment, with the recommendation that the amendment be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote asked on the amendments?

Mr. KEIFER. There is but one amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. Keifer, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

EULOGIES ON THE LATE SENATOR WILLIAM B. ALLISON.

Mr. COUSINS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the following order.

The Clerk read as follows:

Order No. 17.

Ordered, That there be a session of the House at 2 p. m., Sunday, February 21, for the delivery of eulogies on the character, life, and public services of Hon. WILLIAM B. ALLISON, late a Member of the United States Senate from the State of Iowa.

The order was agreed to.

URGENT DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 26399, being the urgent deficiency appropriation bill; and, pending that motion, I ask unanimous consent that all general debate in Committee of the Whole be closed. The bill is the smallest urgent deficiency bill that has been reported to the House for many years, and it carries but very few appropriations, and nearly all are urgent appropriations.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill indicated, the urgent deficiency appropriation bill, pending which motion the gentleman asks unanimous consent that all general debate be closed or that there be no general debate. Is there objection?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I want to ask the gentleman if he proposes, under the five-minute rule, to allow whatever latitude is necessary to discuss the bill?

Mr. TAWNEY. Certainly; there will be no restriction of reasonable debate under the five-minute rule.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection. The motion of Mr. TAWNEY was then agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. Foster of Vermont in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the bill. Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. By order of the House all general debate is closed, and the Clerk will read the bill by paragraphs.

The Clerk read as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT.

Washington, D. C., Bureau of Engraving and Printing: For the purchase of land, in addition to the amount appropriated by act of May 27, 1908, $146,304.40.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the distinguished chairman of the committee, merely for my information, how much the appropriation amounted to made under the act of May 27, 1908?

Mr. TAWNEY. Two hundred and fifty thousand dollars.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. And this is $146,000 in addition? that for the site and the building?

Mr. TAWNEY. No; for the site. The authorization of the building, as I recall it, was $2,000,000. I will say that when we authorized the purchase of the site to erect the building for the Bureau of Printing and Engraving last session of Congress we had no information whatever as to the amount of money that would be necessary for the purchase of the site.

We knew that the amount appropriated would not be sufficient for that purpose. But we concluded to allow the $250,000 so that there would not be a surplus that would be an incentive to the owners of the property to ask more than the property was worth, and we made a flat appropriation of $250,000, without reference to the cost of the site, because we had no information upon that point. The site has been purchased, and it will require this amount to complete the purchase and pay the consideration that the Government agreed to pay.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. On what side of the present building is it proposed to erect this building?

Mr. LIVINGSTON. It is right across the street from the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. TAWNEY. There are three squares, 231, 232, 233.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Is it north, south, east, or west of the present building?

Mr. TAWNEY. It is south of the main building.

The Clerk, proceeding with the reading of the bill, read as follows:

For purchase, care, and maintenance of automobiles for use of the President, $12,000.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the chairman of the committee in reference to this provision whether or not the appropriation bill in the last Congress carried an item for the purchase of automobiles for the President?

Mr. TAWNEY. It did not.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Whether or not there is anything in the law now empowering Congress to appropriate money for the purchase of automobiles for the President?

Mr. TAWNEY. I think the Congress has authority to appropriate money unquestionably for that purpose. There is an appropriation of $25,000, a miscellaneous appropriation, out of which the horses for the President have heretofore been purchased, including their maintenance and care. They have also purchased carriages and maintained them out of it.

The committee was informed that the President-elect intends to practically abandon the use of horses for reasons of his own and use the automobiles as a means of conveyance instead of a carriage and horse. Under the law as it exists now it is not possible for him to purchase the automobiles out of the appropriation made for this current fiscal year, and in order to make the automobiles available for use by March 4 it is necessary to provide in this bill specifically for the purchase and maintenance of these automobiles during the remainder of the fiscal year from March 4 to July 1.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Does this increase the appropriation in any way to the President or for the benefit of the President?

Mr. TAWNEY. It will increase it to the extent of the cost

It will increase it to the extent of the cost of these automobiles. Hereafter their care and maintenance will be paid for out of the same appropriation that the care and maintenance of the horses and carriages has heretofore been paid. It will increase it to the extent of $12,000.

Mr. COX of Indiana. As I understand the gentleman, heretofore there has been $25,000 appropriated, and out of that a certain part has gone for the purchase of horses?

Mr. TAWNEY. Horses and carriages and their maintenance. Mr. COX of Indiana. Is this $12,000 intended to be appropriated here in addition to the $25,000?

Mr. TAWNEY. It will be in addition to that for this year. Hereafter the $25,000 will provide for the care and maintenance of the automobiles purchased under this appropriation of $12,000.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Then, whereas $25,000 has heretofore been appropriated, this session we will appropriate $37,000. Am I correct?

Mr. TAWNEY. That is the practical effect of it, making the appropriation $37,000 for the current fiscal year instead of $25,000, due to the fact that the President-elect intends to use automobiles instead of horses and carriages.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Has the gentleman any idea about how many automobiles this $12,000 will purchase?

Mr. TAWNEY. I have no idea; but it will not only include the cost of the automobiles, but the care and maintenance of them from March 4 until July 1.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Is this $12,000, sought to be appropriated in here, based upon estimates received by the committee-not only as to the original cost of the automobiles, but as to the cost of their maintenance likewise?

Mr. TAWNEY. The present secretary of the President is the gentleman who communicated with the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations on the subject, who had looked into the matter of cost of automobiles, and it was the judgment of the committee—although very few, if any of them, knew any-thing about it from actual experience—that $12,000 would not be any more than was necessary to purchase a couple of automobiles and maintain them for four months.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Is this amount of $12,000 based upon the estimate which the gentleman says he received from the secretary?

Mr. TAWNEY. Yes.
The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.
Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I want to ask the gentleman from Minnesota a question. I understood the gentleman to state that this $12,000 must cover the cost of the automobiles and their maintenance from March 4 to July 1.

Mr. TAWNEY. Yes. Mr. GARRETT. There was $25,000 appropriated for this fiscal year for the purchase and maintenance of the general expenses, incidental expenses. Would all of that $25,000 have been used up by the 4th of March?

Mr. TAWNEY. I do not think it will. I know what the gentleman wishes to bring out, I think. The purchase and main-tenance of the automobiles from March 4 to July 1 should leave something of a surplus appropriated for the fiscal year, for the reason that no horses and carriages will be maintained or purchased.

Mr. GARRETT. What will become of the horses and carriages there now after the 4th of March next?

Mr. TAWNEY. I do not know. They will be disposed of.

Mr. GARRETT. They belong to the Government? Mr. TAWNEY. They belong to the Government; and some of them, as I am informed, belong to the President personally.

Mr. GARRETT. I mean those that have been bought out of these appropriations.

Mr. TAWNEY. Yes.
Mr. BARNHART. What will become of the appropriation to be used for horses and carriages in the future?

Mr. LIVINGSTON. There will be none.

Mr. TAWNEY. In the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill as it passed the House at this session of Congress the language was so changed as to hereafter permit of the purchase and maintenance of automobiles out of that $25,000.

Mr. BARNHART. And this $12,000 is to buy a new outfit and then continue the old appropriation?

Mr. TAWNEY. Yes; to buy a new outfit and maintain it until the next appropriation becomes available on the 1st of July.

Mr. BEALL of Texas. Can the gentleman tell us how many horses are in the stables now, purchased by Government money? Mr. TAWNEY. I can not.

Mr. BEALL of Texas. Or how many carriages? Has any information in regard to this matter ever come to your committee?

Mr. TAWNEY. Well, there has never been any official information that the committee has received on the subject. I noticed that when the President moved to Washington from Oyster Bay last fall the newspapers stated that he brought 16 horses with him. Now, I do not know how many of them were horses belonging to the Government or how many belonged to him personally, and I do not know whether that is the number or not.

Mr. BEALL of Texas. Does the gentleman know whether there has been any detail of horses from any department to the Executive Mansion as there has been of clerks from different departments of the Government?

Mr. TAWNEY. I do not. Mr. MANN. The law authorizes a detail of clerks. Is there any law authorizing a detail of horses?

Mr. TAWNEY. Not that I know of.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the chairman one more question to see whether or not I understood him correctly a moment ago. I desire to ask him whether or not there is any statute now in force that will authorize Congress to appropriate money for the purpose of buying automobiles for the President.

Mr. TAWNEY. I do not think there is any specific authority, but it is one of the incidental expenses of maintaining the executive branch of the Government.

Mr. MANN. And dignity of the Government.

Mr. TAWNEY. There has been no question of the general authority which Congress has to provide the necessary means authority which Congress has to provide the necessary means for maintaining that branch of the Government.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, as the gentleman announces there is no statute in force authorizing Congress to make this appropriation, I want to make the point of order.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the point of order comes too late.

Mr. COX of Indiana. I suspect the gentleman is correct on that.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order of the gentleman from Minnesota. Unless there is objection the pro forma amendments will be considered as withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

For miscellaneous items and expenses of special and select commit-tees, exclusive of salaries and labor, unless specifically ordered by the House of Representatives, $40,000.

Mr. BENNET of New York. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word in order to ask the chairman of the committee to explain this item.

Mr. TAWNEY. This item, Mr. Chairman, is a miscellaneous appropriation for the House of Representatives, exclusive of salaries, paid for labor and other employees and for all select committees. I have a letter here from the Chief Clerk of the House which will explain the amount that has been expended and the amount estimated to be expended during the remainder of this session.

Mr. BENNET of New York. Will the gentleman have it inserted in the RECORD without having it read?

Mr. TAWNEY. I will insert it in the RECORD, and I ask that this letter be printed in the RECORD for the information of the

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The letter is as follows:

We have on hand in this fund at the present time $20,000. Yours, very truly, WM. J. BROWNING, Chief Clerk.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be considered as withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the Patent Office, as follows: For printing the weekly issue of patents, designs, trade-marks, and labels, exclusive of illustrations, for printing, exclusive of illustrations, and binding the monthly volumes of patents, and for printing, engraving illustrations, and binding the Official Gazette, including weekly, monthly, bimonthly, and annual indexes, $106,500.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking the gentleman to explain the reason for this large appropriation in a deficiency appropriation bill.

Mr. TAWNEY. For the Patent Office?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes. Mr. TAWNEY. I would state, Mr. Chairman, in answer to the inquiry of the gentleman from Wisconsin, that this expenditure is a statutory expenditure. They are obliged to publish these patents from time to time. During the last fiscal year the cost of this printing was increased by the Public Printer to the Department of the Interior 20 per cent. I may say that that is one of the reasons for all of these deficiencies in the appropriations made for printing for other departments-that is, for the Department of the Interior proper, and also for the Interstate Commerce Commission. When before the committee Secretary Garfield said:

The printing of the Official Gazette has been increased by the Public Printer 55 per cent over what it was last year, and 10 per cent in the printing of patents—

And the 20 per cent I referred to was the increase in the ordinary departmental printing in the Department of the Interior.

I will read further:

The CHAIRMAN. Fifty-five per cent?
Secretary Garfield. Yes. The scale that was in existence when the estimate was made last year has been increased by exactly that much, and therefore, this being a business that we can not stop, that has

The CHAIRMAN. It is a statutory obligation?
Secretary Garrield. A statutory obligation to print the specifications in the patents.

It is the result of the revised estimate?

Mr. STAFFORD. It is the result of the revised estimate? Mr. TAWNEY. It is the result of the revised estimate of the cost.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to return to the section regarding the Department of Agriculture, the section that we passed a moment ago, for the purpose of offering an amendment at the end of the last line.

Mr. TAWNEY. I will have to object, Mr. Chairman. I do not know what the amendment is.

Mr. HEFLIN. I will explain to the gentleman. It is an amendment to make a slight increase in the appropriation to supply Members with improved vegetable seeds for distribution among the people.

Mr. TAWNEY. I will have to object, Mr. Chairman. Mr. HEFLIN. Then I move, Mr. Chairman, that we return to that section for the purpose of offering an amendment to it.

Mr. TAWNEY. I make the point of order that the motion is not in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. OLLIE M. JAMES. Would not an amendment of the character mentioned by the gentleman from Alabama be in order now as a separate and independent section?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is not called upon to pass upon that question now.

Mr. HEFLIN. I wish to offer the amendment at the end of the last section.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Alabama please state his amendment as he desires to make it, and indicate where he wishes to make it?

Mr. HEFLIN. At the end of the section, under "Department of Agriculture," following "one hundred thousand dollars," on page 5.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order. Mr. HEFLIN. Or as a separate section, to read thus:

To supply deficiency in the quota of vegetable and other valuable seed authorized to be furnished each Senator and Representative, the sum of $30,000, which the Secretary of Agriculture is required to purchase.

The appropriation is not sufficient now, I desire to state to the gentleman from Minnesota, to give the supply of seed that we have had heretofore, and unless we can send out the number that we sent before and supply those who have been receiving them, it will be a great injustice to those not supplied—some will get seed and some will not.

Mr. TAWNEY. I make the point of order, Mr. Chairman, that the amendment is not in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. HEFLIN. I would ask to offer it at the end of the bill. The Clerk read as follows:

For printing and binding for the Interstate Commerce Commission, $40,000.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment:

The Clerk read as follows:

After line 23, page 6, add the following:

"The Postmaster-General is hereby authorized to rent offices for division headquarters, Railway Mail Service, in Washington. D. C., for the remainder of the current fiscal year out of the appropriation heretofore provided 'for rent, light, fuel, telegraph, and miscellaneous office expenses, schedules of mail trains, telephone service, and badges for railway mail clerks.'"

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, I desire to add to that, at the beginning, "and postal service," so that the amendment I have just offered will fall within the postal service. Make it as a center head, like the other center heads in the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. OVERSTREET].

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to. Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to add a new paragraph at the end of the bill, on page 6, the amendment which was read a little while ago.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the amendment is not in order. The amendment is in relation to an appropriation for the Department of Agriculture, and we have passed that part of the bill appropriating for that department, and the gentleman can not now do by indirection what he failed to do directly, namely, in effect, return to that para-graph in relation to the Department of Agriculture. Besides, the House is not in possession of any information that this is a deficiency appropriation in the seed appropriation. This bill a deficiency appropriation in the seed appropriation. This bill carries deficiency appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations heretofore made. The estimates have been regularly submitted to the House by the departments for which the original appropriations were made.

Mr. CANDLER. Mr. Chairman, this being a deficiency bill, and intended to supplement the appropriations that have been made heretofore, it seems to me that any appropriation, so far as that is concerned, that is insufficient for the purpose intended would necessarily come within the provisions of this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. What does the gentleman say to the point of order made by the gentleman from Minnesota, that this is not strictly a deficiency?

Mr. TAWNEY. We have no knowledge that there is a de-

Mr. TAWNEY. We have no knowledge that there is a deficiency in the appropriation for the distribution of seed.

Mr. CANDLER. We all know that the appropriation is not sufficient to furnish the number of packages of seed that has heretofore been furnished to each Member of Congress and to Senators, and to that extent there is a deficiency.

Mr. TAWNEY. If the contlemen will popult Members of

Mr. TAWNEY. If the gentleman will permit, Members of Congress may, perhaps through the press, have gained information tion to the effect that this appropriation will not be sufficient; but we are not receiving and acting upon appropriations that are estimated for through the press of this country.

Mr. CANDLER. Why can not we act upon our own knowledge? You and I know there is a deficiency in the number of packages of seed this year.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. TAWNEY. Certainly. Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. The deficiencies appropriated for in this bill are upon the estimates furnished by the departments?

Mr. TAWNEY. Yes. Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Does not the gentleman know it to be a fact that the reason the chief of the bureau of the Department of Agriculture has given various Members of Congress, over his own signature, why the amount is so small is because the appropriation is not sufficient to furnish the amount?

Mr. TAWNEY. Well, the appropriation may not be sufficient to give to the Members of the House and the Senate all the agricultural seeds that they desire. But that is not the question.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. But we all know that Mr. Galloway, the chief of this department, has written to every Member of Congress, assigning as a reason why the usual amount of last year and the year before was not assigned to us was because the amount appropriated for the purpose was not sufficient to meet the deficiency by reason of the insufficient amount of appropriation.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. If I have any time to yield, I will.

Mr. MANN. Has the Department of Agriculture any authority to incur any expense, or to provide any seed, except out of the appropriations which were made in the current law? Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Why, of course not.

Mr. MANN. Then there can be no deficiency while that appropriation is still in existence.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. If there is no power to appropriate for a deficiency in this way, why do we appropriate $12,000 for automobiles for the Executive?

That is another proposition. Mr. MANN.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. It is the same as the other, so far as I am concerned.

Mr. MANN. And that was subject to the point of order. Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. I think we ought to be as willing to give seed to the farmer as automobiles to the President.

Mr. MANN. It seems to me very clear that this is not a deficiency item.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. MANN. Certainly. Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Do you not know we have all been notified that there is a deficiency of 2,000 packages in the seeds this year for each Member?

Mr. MANN. Oh, if we could appropriate 2,000 packages of seed, it would probably be in order, but the difficulty is that you can not appropriate seed.

Mr. CANDLER. Money will get the seed.

Mr. MANN. The deficiency is in the amount of seed which the sum we have appropriated will purchase. The deficiency is not in the appropriation; and deficiency here must be a deficiency in the amount authorized to be expended. There is no authority for the Agricultural Department to purchase these seeds except the authority in the appropriation law, and there is not a deficiency in that appropriation. The mere fact that there was not enough money appropriated, in our judgment, to buy the seed we want would authorize us to make an appropriation; if carried to its fullest, might extend to a million more. The amount of seed received is not a deficiency in the appropriation at all, and the estimate would properly go for the purchase of seed to the Committee on Agriculture. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Colorado.

Mr. CANDLER. I want to ask, Mr. Chairman, if I did not have the floor?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield to the gentleman from Mississippi?

Mr. CANDLER. I yielded to the gentleman from Illinois.
The CHAIRMAN. Debate is proceeding under the five-minute

Mr. CANDLER. I yielded to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann], and he talked my time out. [Laughter.] I admire him, and in discussion he always sheds light on any and all questions. [Applause.]

Mr. MANN. I ask that the gentleman from Mississippi may be allowed to proceed for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has recognized the gentleman from Colorado. The gentleman from Mississippi will have an opportunity later.

Mr. COOK of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, in the hearing before our Committee on Agriculture, I asked Doctor Galloway, Chief of the Bureau of Plant Industry, by what authority the quota of seeds has been reduced to each Member of this House, and he replied:

Owing to the lack of money to purchase the seeds, and the price of seeds was very much higher than a year or two ago, and it is therefore necessary to cut down the quota.

Mr. CANDLER. Mr. Chairman, the effect of this amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama is simply to increase the amount that has heretofore been appropriated for this purpose. It is not to change a single word, line, or syllable of the statute as it now exists. It is simply for the purpose of adding to the appropriation the amount of $30,000, which the Chief of the Bureau of Plant Industry says will be sufficient to restore the quota of seed that has heretofore been given to each Member of Congress and each United States Senator. We have up to this time received 12,000 packages of seeds. Under this year's appropriation each Member of Congress and each Senator will receive 10,000 packages of seeds. So there is a deficiency of 2,000 packages of seeds in comparison with what each Member has heretofore received. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] says we can not appropriate 2,000 packages of seeds. Of course we could direct 2,000 packages of seeds to be purchased, and in that way appropriate 2,000 packages of seeds, but we all know that it takes money to buy the seed. If Members of Congress have got to the point where they do not realize that money will buy seed, then vote this $30,000, and you will find out that it will provide for each Member of Congress 2,000 packages, according to the statement made by the gentleman in charge of the Bureau of Plant Industry.

Now, if there is any deficiency in automobiles to be furnished to the incoming President, I should like to know where the deficiency exists. The President likes a horse. The Presidentelect likes automobiles; but the fact that the President of the United States likes a horse, while the incoming President prefers an automobile, does not create a deficiency, and I do not see any reason why we should give automobiles even to the President-elect of the United States and refuse to the farmers of this country a few vegetable seeds which they ought to have. I have more requests now than I can provide seeds for, and I dare say that every Member within the sound of my voice finds himself in the same situation to-day.

It has been stated that the majority in this House can do business. Now, the only thing I ask and the only thing that the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN] asks is that the majority may have an opportunity to say whether or not they want to appropriate this $30,000. If they are given that opportunity, and the majority do not want to appropriate it, why let that be the end of it; but I appeal to the chairman of this committee who makes this point of order not to insist upon it, but to let each and every man have the opportunity to express his views upon the floor of this House and say by his vote whether or not he wants to buy seeds for the farmers or automobiles for the President-elect of the United States. [Great applause.] So far as I am concerned I am for the farmers I am not favorable to automobiles. They frighten horses and kill too many people to suit me. [Applause.]
Mr. POLLARD. May I ask the gentleman a qu

May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. CANDLER. With great pleasure.

I should like to inquire whether any of Mr. POLLARD. these seeds are grown in the valley of the Tombigbee?

Yes; they grow in great luxuriance in the valley of the Tombigbee. Nowhere on the face of the earth do they grow with greater vitality than by the beautiful rippling waters of the Tombigbee. [Great applause.] In past years there has been complaint that some of these seeds were not there has been complaint that some of these seeds were not Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I will ask the Chairman if it is good. I have no doubt that they are all good, but if they were not true that the precedents are the other way? A year or deficient in the matter of vitality, or anything else, all you would have to do would be to plant them upon the banks of the Tombigbee and they would bring forth the most beautiful and luxurious results that have ever been seen in all the great country in which we live. [Laughter and great applause.] And I want to say to you that unless you give the farmers who live along the valley of the Tombigbee these 2,000 extra packages of seeds, you will be taking away from this Republic an opportunity to demonstrate the glorious and marvelous possibilities which exist in this valley which is blessed with the waters of this lovely river. [Applause.] I want to know whether you will find it in your heart, any of you, to deny this request that comes through the motion of the gentleman from Alabama, who, like myself, is always for the people. If you have the hardihood to deny it, then the time will come when you must give an account to the great bar of public opinion which now demands this small and economical appropriation. [Applause.] The people look with amazement at the marvelously extravagant appropriations which oftentimes are made, when the small and economical appropriations are denied.

I want to put it up to you again squarely to say whether or not you will refuse to grant to the farmers of this country the small additional appropriation which is requested, when you give automobiles to the President-elect of the United States, who is no better than I am, no better than you are, and no better than the humblest citizen in my district; because, as President, he is the servant of the people, as you and I are servants of the people. Can you give to him, in response to a mere letter which he writes to the Committee on Appropriations, $12,500 to buy automobiles in which he may spin around the city of Washington, when the farmers of my country and the farmers of yours want these vegetable seeds, a part of which will go to bring happiness and prosperity to the people along the beautiful valley of the Tombigbee, and there demonstrate the beauties and glories and the fertility of American soil? [Great applause.

Mr. TAWNEY. Speaking to the point of order I simply want to say, Mr. Chairman, that this amendment can not be in order for the reason that I have heretofore stated, and in addition to that, we have the antideficiency law, requiring the heads of de-partments to apportion their appropriations at the beginning of each fiscal year. The only deficiency that could be asked for would be a deficiency arising because of the happening of some unusual or extraordinary circumstance subsequent to the time of the apportionment. In that case the apportionment could be waived and the reason for the waiver stated to Congress that would accompany the estimate. We have no information whatever as to there being a deficiency in the seed appropriation, and it is not therefore a deficiency appropriation, and is not in order.

The CHAIRMAN. For a long period of years it has been the ruling of the Chair that an amendment to be in order must be made in connection with the portions or the paragraph of the bill to which it is germane. This amendment would have been germane in connection with the paragraph under the head of the Department of Agriculture. It was not offered until the end of the bill.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Chairman, I understood the Chair a little while ago to rule that it would not be in order to return to that section. I made the motion, if I remember correctly, to return to the paragraph relating to the Department of Agriculture on page 5 for the purpose of offering an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understood the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. HEFLIN. But I understood the Chair to rule that had we returned to that paragraph at the end of the section this amendment would have been germane—that it would have been germane to that paragraph ending on the last line of page 5, under the head of the Agricultural Department.

The CHAIRMAN. It would have been germane.
Mr. HEFLIN. Why would it not be proper to move to return to that section for the purpose of offering an amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. Because it is contrary to the practice of the House. The practice of the House is that to return to a section or paragraph can only be done by unanimous consent. Unanimous consent was asked by the gentleman from Alabama and objection was made. Then the gentleman from Alabama moved that the committee return to that paragraph, whereupon the gentleman from Minnesota raised the point of order, which was sustained by the Chair.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

two ago the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Burron] got into some kind of a squabble about whether the public building at Cleveland should be built of granite or sandstone, and he happened to be out of the room when the matter came up, and afterwards he came in and asked unanimous consent to return to that particular section, but somebody objected. The gentleman from Ohio moved to return to it, and the House voted with him, and it was so done.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will say to the gentleman from Missouri, in response to the inquiry, that that was under different conditions. These conditions were that the reading of the bill had been completed; and the gentleman having the bill in charge moved that the committee rise and report; this was voted down. Under those circumstances, the Chair held that a motion to return to a paragraph was out of order, but the committee reversed this decision on appeal from the Chair.

Mr. TAWNEY. I move that the committee do now rise. Mr. HEFLIN. One moment. I wish to know what the Chair's ruling is.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order. Mr. HEFLIN. I wish to appeal from the decision of the Chair. [Cries of "Oh, no!"] I withdraw the appeal for the

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota moves that the committee do now rise.

Mr. OLLIE M. JAMES. Did I understand the Chair to rule that in case we voted down the motion of the gentleman from Minnesota that the committee rise then we might recur to the paragraph?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair simply stated to the gentleman from Missouri, in answer to a parliamentary inquiry, the conditions under which and the manner in which a motion to return to a paragraph was held to be in order.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota moves that the committee do now rise.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. TAWNEY) there were 70 ayes and 77 noes.

Mr. TAWNEY. I ask for tellers.

Tellers were ordered.

The Chair appointed as tellers the gentleman from Minnesota, Mr. TAWNEY, and the gentleman from Alabama, Mr. HEFLIN.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported that there were 79 ayes and 79 noes.

The CHAIRMAN. Upon this vote the Chair votes "aye," and the vote is then 80 ayes and 79 noes.

So the committee determined to rise; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. Foster of Vermont, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that the committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 20399, the urgent deficiency bill, and had instructed him to report the same back with an amendment, with the recommendation that the amendment be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and amendment to its final passage.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Speaker—
The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?
Mr. HEFLIN. A parliamentary inquiry. Would it be in order now to move to recommit the bill?

The SPEAKER. It would not.
The question on the motion of Mr. Tawner for the previous question was then taken; and the Chair being in doubt, the House divided; and there were 95 ayes and 78 noes.
Mr. CLARK of Missouri and Mr. HEFLIN called for the yeas and navs.

The yeas and navs were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 149, nays 109, answered "present" 6, not voting 123, as follows:

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to. The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

Mr. TAWNEY. I move to recommit the bill to the Committee on Appropriations, and on that I move the previous question.

The question was taken, and the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read the third time, and was read the third time.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, I move to recommit the bill to the Committee on Appropriations, and on that I move the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota moves to recommit the bill to the Committee on Appropriations, and upon that motion he demands the previous question.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Speaker—
The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. HEFLIN. A parliamentary inquiry.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.
Mr. HEFLIN. Would that motion take precedence over a motion to recommit to the committee with instructions?

The SPEAKER. The previous question would have to be voted down to make the motion amendable by instructions. The gentleman from Minnesota having made the motion for the previous question upon a motion to recommit the bill to the Committee on Appropriations instructions, of course, can not be offered unless the previous question should fail.

Mr. CANDLER. Mr. Speaker-

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise? Mr. CANDLER. The gentleman from Minnesota having made the motion for the previous question, then the only way to amend would be to vote down the previous question.

The SPEAKER. That is correct.

The question was taken on ordering the previous question, and the Chair announced the ayes seemed to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. CANDLER) there were-ayes 144, noes 97.

So the previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to recommit.

The question was taken, and the motion was rejected.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken, and the bill was passed. On motion of Mr. TAWNEY, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bills of the following titles:

S. 2253. An act for the relief of Theodore F. Northrop;

S. 6136. An act authorizing the Secretary of War to grant revocable license lands to Boise, Idaho; and

S. 8143. An act granting to the Chicago and Northwestern Railway Company a right to change the location of its right of way across the Niobrara Military Reservation.

SENATE BILL REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bill of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to its appropriate committee, as indicated below:

S. 3751. An act authorizing the Secretary of War to issue discarded arms to camps of the United Spanish War Veteransto the Committee on Military Affairs.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 26394, the naval appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly, the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 26394, the naval appropriation bill, with Mr. MANN in the chair.

On motion of Mr. Foss, by unanimous consent, the first reading of the bill was dispensed with.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I desire to state to the committee that I have made a very full, and I trust not too exhaustive report upon this bill, referring to all the items, and I shall take but little time of the committee in a general explanation, pre-ferring to make my explanations as we reach the different paragraphs.

This bill carries $135,662,888. The estimates that were submitted by the Department, exclusive of new construction, amounted to $134,869,527. The amount carried by this bill, exclusive of new construction, is $119,860,116. The committee, after a careful consideration of these estimates that were submitted to it through the Secretary of the Treasury, and after hearings, day after day, reduced these estimates to the amount of over $15,000,000. And our appropriation bill which is presented here, exclusive of new construction, will carry sented here, $119,860.116.

But the committee have recommended in this bill a naval programme, and it has been necessary to make appropriation toward the construction of that naval programme, and therefore it has added to this $119,860,000 the sum of $15,802,000 for armor and armament, construction and machinery, and equip-ment, which will be required during the next fiscal year in the construction of these ships which are authorized by this bill. So much for the amount carried by the bill.

Now, as regards the personnel, we have 42,000 men. not asking for any increase in the number of men this year. so far as relates to the naval programme, I desire to make a brief statement. In this bill the committee recommend the building of two large battle ships of 26,000 tons which will cost approximately $10,000,000, or $20,000,000 for the two; and then in addition to this the committee recommend the building of one fleet collier, and in connection with that you will recall that a year ago we authorized the building of two fleet colliers at a cost not exceeding $1,800,000 each. Now, the Secretary of the Navy has received bids from some of the large shipbuilding concerns in this country, and he finds that he can build two colliers for practically what he estimated would be the cost of one last year. In our law last year we authorized that one of these colliers be built in a navy-yard on the Pacific coast, but in this bill we ask for a repeal of that provision, so that the Secretary of the Navy, if this is adopted by the House, will be able to build four fleet colliers instead of two, as authorized in the bill of last year.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Will the gentleman yield to a question?

Mr. KNOWLAND. Will the gentleman yield to a question?
Mr. FOSS. Yes.
Mr. KNOWLAND. How can you expect to change an existing law in an appropriation bill?

Mr. FOSS. By act of Congress. I trust the gentleman from California [Mr. Knowland] will not make any point of order against the repeal of this provision.

Mr. KNOWLAND. The gentleman certainly will.

Mr. FOSS. Here is an opportunity to save the Government $800,000 to $1,000,000.

Mr. KNOWLAND. I have a statement to make that will show that there is not this difference in the cost between building at a navy-yard and by private contract.

Mr. FOSS. We have also recommended as part of the naval programme the building of 5 torpedo-boat destroyers. These will cost each of them in the neighborhood of $800,000, or, for the 5, $4,000,000. Then, in addition to that, we have authorized the building of 4 submarine boats, at a cost of approximately $500,000 each, or in all $2,000,000. This comprises the naval programme which the Committee on Naval Affairs recommends to this House this year. The naval programme therefore consists of 2 battle ships, 5 torpedo-boat destroyers, 1 fleet collier, and 4 submarines. The cost of this naval programme will be approximately from $27,000,000 to $28,000,000. The Secretary of the Navy, when he appeared before the committee, recommended a naval programme that was double this, which would have cost between $65,000,000 and $70,000,000 probably. It was recommended in the department by the naval board, and I will just briefly read to you what the recommendation was.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Before the gentleman reads, will he allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. FOSS. Yes.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I see that the detailed estimates of the department were given at $134,896,527.71.

Exclusive of new construction.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. The total of the bill is $135,662,888.

Mr. FOSS. Yes.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. So, really, including the increase of the navy which the committee has allowed, the committee reports about $1,000,000 more than the department has asked for.

Mr. FOSS. The department made no estimates on the new construction, because it did not know what the committee would

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Does the gentleman mean to say that the Navy Department makes an estimate to Congress amounting to $135,000,000, without any increase at all, without taking into consideration the increase in the amount which would be required under that construction?

Mr. FOSS. In the general estimates which are sent to Congress there are no estimates sent as to the cost of the battle ships or cruisers.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Then this really means, with what the Secretary of the Navy asks the committee, if you add that amount to the $135,000,000 you would have a naval budget of nearly $200,000,000.

Mr. FOSS. If you added the cost of the ships recommended by the department and if we should appropriate in one year for the construction of all of them, then that would practically amount to $200,000,000.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I merely wanted to call the attention of the House to these facts.

Mr. FOSS. Now, in regard to the naval programme recom-mended by the Secretary of the Navy. He recommended 4 battle ships, 4 scout cruisers, 10 destroyers, 4 submarines, 3 colliers, 1 repair ship, 1 ammunition ship, and 2 mine-laying ships. The President in his message, in addition to this programme, recommended 2 hospital ships.

I say that if this programme had been recommended by the committee it would have cost in the neighborhood of $65,000,000 or $70,000,000. The committee, after careful consideration, have here recommended a programme which, as I said a moment ago, can cost very much less—less than half, about $27,000,000 and we believe it to be a fair, sensible, and reasonable pro-

Mr. LLOYD. I find on the estimates made by the department, on page 27, the amount of estimates for 1910-$134,000,000.

Mr. FOSS. These are the estimates for this year.

Mr. LLOYD. I understood you to say the Secretary of the Navy asked for an appropriation which would amount to nearly $200,000,000.

Mr. FOSS. Oh, no. I said that if we adopted the naval programme recommended by the Navy Department and should make the appropriations for the construction of all the ships in that naval programme in a single year that that added to the estimates would make in the neighborhood of $200,000,000.

Mr. LLOYD. The estimates show that for construction and machinery there would be appropriated fourteen and a half millions.

Mr. FOSS. That is, the ships already authorized. Mr. LLOYD. Well, then, this $22,000,000 which you appropriate?

Mr. FOSS. That is, $14,000,000 that is necessary.

Mr. LLOYD. Do you appropriate that this year for the ships which are authorized in this bill?

Mr. FOSS. The $14,000,000 relate to the ships already authorized last year. If we authorize two battle ships this year, it will be necessary to appropriate enough to make up the $22,000,000.

Mr. LLOYD. Then next year you will have to carry the balance of it?

Mr. FOSS. Next year we will have to carry the balance of it, Mr. LLOYD. Approximately $13,000,000 of the amount is on account of the battle ships?

Mr. FOSS. Well, whatever will be necessary under this construction and machinery, which is an approximate estimate.

Now, Mr. Chairman, unless there are some questions, I do not care to use any more of the time of the committee.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I would like to ask the gentleman how much money this bill carries for powder?

Mr. FOSS. Six hundred and fifty thousand dollars, I believe, for the manufacture of smokeless powder. That is the powder But when we reach that item I will-

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I would like to have a little information before we reach that. This $650,000 is to be used at the government factory down here?
Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. Yes.

Mr. FOSS. Yes; it is to be used in the manufacture of smokeless powder.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. How much does it cost per pound to make this powder?

Forty-three cents this year.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Was it not 35 cents last year?

No; about 45 cents last year, I believe, Mr. FOSS. Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. How much this year?

Mr. FOSS. Forty-three cents.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. How much are we buying this year?

Mr. FOSS. We are buying, I believe, 2,400,000 pounds. Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Last year it was 2,000,000 pounds. Why is it 400,000 pounds more this year?

We have more ships; a larger navy. Mr. FOSS.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Why do we not make that extra amount of powder at the factory at 35 or 45 cents a pound, rather than to pay 65 cents to the powder concern?

Mr. FOSS. We manufacture about half as much as we purchase, a little over 1,000,000 pounds.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. The figures last year were 65 cents and 2,000,000 pounds, and we made a million pounds for about 35 or 45 cents.

Mr. FOSS. In those figures they do not take into consideration the cost of the plant, nor the pay of the officers in charge, nor a number of other things. All they take into consideration is the cost of the labor and material.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. We have invested so much down here at the powder factory, and do not count that in the making of the powder. Now, you say you are buying 400,000 pounds more this year. My information last year, as I recall it, was that we could make all the powder we used. Now, why do we not make at the government factory all this increased amount of 400,000 pounds, as long as we can make it for 35 or 45 cents a pound?

Mr. FOSS. I would say to the gentleman that the price of powder is fixed by a joint board of the army and navy.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I understand that. Mr. FOSS. And it is the belief of both the army and the navy that we are getting the powder at a very fair price.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. If we are making it at 45 cents in a powder factory that is not running at full blast, and we have an increased number of ships and an increased demand for powder to the amount of 400,000 pounds, I do not see why we do not increase the output of the factory. I do not want to take up any more time of the committee now, but if to-morrow the gentleman can answer that more fully I shall be very glad to know, because I do not see why we do not run our factory when we can make powder at 45 cents, especially when we need 400,000 pounds more powder than we did last year.

Mr. SHERLEY. The gentleman made the statement that powder was being manufactured for 45 cents a pound, excluding the pay of the officers and the interest on the investment. I think the gentleman is somewhat mistaken in his figures, and as we have just had this matter up in the committee and considered it in connection with the fortifications bill I should be very glad if he could supply the exact figures, giving the items and putting the information in the RECORD as to the cost of powder at Indianhead.

Mr. FOSS. I will try and furnish the figures for the gentleman, but I am quoting from the testimony of Admiral Mason, Chief of the Bureau of Ordnance, in which he says:

Counting the cost of material and labor alone, the price, under the present processes, has averaged about 45 cents per pound. For the last fiscal year it was about 43 cents, the reduction being due to the efficiency of the acid plant.

Mr. SHERLEY. What I am anxious to get is a detailed statement, not showing the conclusion as to the price, but as to the items that go into it. Then we can draw our own deductions.

Mr. FOSS. I shall be very glad to call upon the department for such a statement.

Mr. SHERLEY. Is not the gentleman also in error as to the price we are paying for powder? Is not that 67 cents?

Mr. FOSS. I did not state the price.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Will the chairman of the committee permit an interruption?

Mr. FOSS. Certainly. Mr. HITCHCOCK. Will the gentleman indicate as to the capacity of the government plant?

Mr. FOSS. I think we can manufacture down there about one-third of what we use.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. It is now being worked to its full capacity?

Mr. FOSS. I think it is, nearly.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Can the chairman of the committee present figures on that point from the department?

Mr. FOSS. I have not the figures here to-day, but I presume I can get them.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. FOSS. Certainly.
Mr. FITZGERALD. I wish to ask the gentleman whether he will at this time explain the provision with reference to the payment of clerical employees at navy-yards?

Mr. FOSS. I would rather do that when it comes up.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I should like to have it in the RECORD, in order that I may examine it before that time. I should like to ask some questions about its effect. It may help to satisfy a number of Members of the House as to whether it is wise or not.

Mr. FOSS. We will reach that early in the bill, and I purposely have not alluded to it, but wanted to wait until we reached that provision. I will refer the gentleman to document 1224, a letter from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting a detailed statement of the employment of classified employees under the lump-sum appropriation.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I have examined that document. What I wish to know particularly at this time, for instance, is whether under the language of this provision it is intended to permit the Secretary of the Navy to transfer clerks from one station

Mr. FOSS. It is in his discretion to do so, I think, but I do not understand that it is his intention to do so.

Mr. FITZGERALD. My inquiry is, What does the committee

Mr. FOSS. I think he has no greater authority in that respect than he has to-day.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think he has. The per annum clerks in the navy-yard to-day can not be transferred to any other navy-yard. Could that be possible under this provision?

Mr. FOSS. I think that he can transfer any clerks that he wants to.

Mr. FITZGERALD. When a clerk is specifically appropriated for in a particular department in a certain navy-yard, he can not be transferred, according to my understanding, to any other yard.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. Does the gentleman mean the office or the official can not be transferred?

Mr. FITZGERALD. The particular clerk.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. The particular official can be transferred now, but the office can not.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I catch the meaning of the gentleman. He means the particular individual can be changed from one place to another.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. Yes; but the office can not.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Under this provision it would enable the Secretary to transfer the office?

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. My own opinion about the matter is that it does give the Secretary of the Navy the discretion to change the office as well as the individual, and to add to one yard additional officers if the work demanded and take away from the other yards where the work does not demand it. That is my opinion about the change.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I wish to ask whether it was considered by the committee that it would be desirable to provide that where some clerks are in the employment of the department and it is advisable to reduce the number employed at any particular place those clerks then dropped should be given preference in employment out of these particular appropriations when the force is to be increased—in other words, to prevent what, perhaps, is not now done, the arbitrary reduction of the force in order to get rid of some employees and in a short time increase the force back again and take in new employees?

Mr. FOSS. I would say to the gentleman that that whole matter is left in the discretion of the Secretary of the Navy under this provision. He can enlarge or reduce the force as the work under the Navy Department may increase or decrease. You have to leave a large discretion somewhere. As to the motive behind it, whether he does it to get rid of these men or not, I am not in sufficient confidence with the Secretary of the Navy to know what his mind may be.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I am not making reference to any individual. This is a radical change in the practice that exists, and I desire to ascertain as far as possible just what power the Secretary of the Navy will have. I believe that some change is advisable, and I think the committee should be able to state the effect in every respect of this change which is to be made.

Mr. FOSS. I should say that the Secretary of the Navy had full discretion to do just that thing. Now, if there is no further question, I will reserve the balance of my time.

[Mr. PADGETT addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. PADGETT. I now yield three minutes to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. LASSITER].

Mr. LASSITER. Mr. Chairman, by an overwhelming majority the voters of this country have instructed the Sixty-first Congress to enact tariff legislation in which the principle of protection to American industries shall be recognized. Realizing that the bill which will be reported by the Ways and Means Committee will contain a continued affirmation of this policy, and in obedience to the demands of a large number of my constituents, whose only industry is agriculture, and whose chief if not sole market crop is peanuts or ground beans, I ask for a careful consideration of paragraph 271 of the act of 1897, known as the "Dingley tariff law," which provides as follows:

Peanuts or ground beans unshelled, one-half of 1 cent per pound; shelled, 1 cent per pound.

The cultivation of peanuts may be said to have been unknown in this country until after the civil war. Beginning in southeastern Virginia it has extended to the States of North Carolina, Georgia, Alabama, Florida, Tennessee, Texas, and South Carolina, which States according to the census of 1899, produced 11,964,957 bushels on 516,656 acres. It is understood that since the last census this crop has extended into other States, particularly California and Nevada, though in the lastmentioned States the industry has been a very struggling one, owing to immediate competition with Japan. I shall ask to subjoin a table showing the acreage and production of peanuts in the United States according to the censuses of 1889 and 1899. It is probable that the next census will not show any very great increase in the home production, owing to the precarious condition of the industry. A total production of 15,000,000 bushels would probably be a liberal estimate. According to the information prepared for the use of the Committee on Ways and Means-

It is estimated that the world's annual product of peanuts reaches the enormous total of 600,000,000 bushels. The value of the United States product which is consumed almost entirely by the American people is $10,000,000.

This is a most liberal estimate, especially in view of the fact that the census of manufactures for 1905 gives $7,260,810 as the value of this article after it has gone through the process of cleaning or manufacture into candy and has become a finished product.

There are two kinds of peanuts produced in this country, called, spectively, from their origin, "Virginias" and "Spanish." respectively, from their origin, "Virginias" and "Spanish." Of the former 30 pounds make a bushel, of the latter 22 pounds make a bushel. Peanuts are not adapted to heavy soil nor can they be raised profitably by high-priced labor. The cultivation began upon the worn-out sandy soils of the Southern States, and was profitable with labor at an average price (male and female) of something less than 50 cents per day under a rate of duty of 1 cent on unshelled and 11 cents on shelled peanuts, which amounted to an ad valorem rate of 72.86 per cent. With the increase of population and general appreciation of this luxury the total production of this crop has greatly increased, though the price to the farmer has only increased from 2 cents per pound in 1884 to .036 in 1907. In the meantime wages of labor have increased nearly 100 per cent and the ad valorem rate of duty has decreased from 72.86 to 14.02 per cent. At the same time the farmer to-day has to pay higher duty on more articles of necessary consumption than ever before in the history of the country. Nor if the protective principle is to continue, can he hope to secure from the Sixty-first Congress any appreciable relief from tariff taxation on his purchases, though he acquiesce in the complete abolition of the duty on his product.

The importations come principally from Japan, Spain, and Africa, where labor cost is low. I invite attention to the tables which I shall print herewith, showing the average ad valorem rate of duty on unshelled and shelled peanuts since 1883, taken from "Imports and duties 1894–1907, by William W. Evans, assistant clerk" (Ways and Means Committee); and "Customs Law of 1894 compared with the Customs Law of 1890 with rates of the Mills bill of 1888 and Wilson's bill of 1894."

Though Canada has a duty of 3 cents per pound on peanuts, shelled and unshelled, 3,116,345 pounds out of our total exportations of 6,386,012 pounds, valued at $278,236, find a market in that country. This is mentioned to show that the Canadian duty is not prohibitive, and that people will have luxuries even though they have to pay for them. It will be observed from the tables that our importations of peanuts have been comparatively small until the year of 1907, when they amounted to 10,432,828 pounds unshelled, valued at $371,967, and 4,780,054 pounds shelled, valued at $244,709. The figures for 1898 are not given in the table, but have been ascertained to be, unshelled, 6,498,202 pounds, valued at $255,346; of shelled, 1,775,946 pounds, valued at $88,370. The partial failure in the crop of those years accounts, in a measure, for the large increase in the importations, which, though relatively not large compared with the total home crop, caused an infinite deal of distress both to the farmers and to the native cleaning industries, for reasons to be explained.

The fact seems to be well ascertained that the peanut industry is unique in the respect that there is a very close interdependence between the peanut grower and the peanut buyer. This arises from the conditions of the trade. When the domestic peanut reaches a price on the Atlantic coast which produces a living profit to the peanut farmer, the peanut buyers are confronted with foreign importations of an indefinite quantity. For this reason—though in actual experience the importations from Spain and Africa have not been very large—the peanut buyer claims he can not pay to the domestic producer more than it costs to produce the foreign nut, plus freight, until it is definitely ascertained at the end of the crop year what will be the foreign importation. It seems to be ascertained that, owing to the cheap ocean transportation across the Pacific, the California and Nevada growers can not successfully compete with the cheaply produced Japanese peanuts on that coast. Prior to the Japanese trade invasion the consuming public of the Pacific coast were glad to buy the Atlantic coast and southern peanuts at a price which included the railroad transportation across the continent.

The domestic dealers require large banking credit during the buying season, which extends from November until the end of the following spring. By the time the more thrifty farmers are willing to market their year's product, and before the cleaning operations have been completed and the finished product ready for the consuming market, experience shows that the quotations of farmers' peanuts on the market first begin to reach a figure when they are barely profitable to the farmer. At this juncture large importing and jobbing houses have learned that it is profitable to introduce a form they are hard barble learned that it is profitable to introduce a form they are hard barble learned that it is profitable to the farmer. able to introduce a few thousand bushels of Spanish or African nuts to break the domestic market. By a system of wide correspondence with the local jobbers in every city of the United States, the importer finds it to his interest to offer imported peanuts at a price lower than the home market. By expert manipulation only a small quantity of imported nuts is sufficient to demoralize entirely the American market by offering imported peanuts at a price lower than they can be sold by domestic dealers. These latter, with a year's stock on hand, immediately find their customers canceling previous orders or de-clining to make further purchases. In this commercial situa-tion the American buyers are confronted with the alternative of renewing their notes with continued interest charges, insurance, depreciation, and shrinkage, or of throwing their whole stock upon the market at a price to meet the foreign competition. Whether or not the peanut dealers ought to be able to take care of themselves with the peanut importers is beside the question so far as the farmer is concerned. The farmer gets the worst of it.

With this brief review of an industry upon which many thousand American farmers are entirely dependent, I submit that in a general revision of the tariff laws, necessarily governed by the principle of protection, the provisions of the present act are inadequate. It was intended by the schedule of the act of 1897 to fix the duty at 46.91 per cent ad valorem. Changed conditions have reduced this rate in ten years to 14.02 per cent in 1907 and 12.72 per cent in 1908 on the farmers' product. The situation speaks for itself and the peanut growers ask simple justice.

The duty should be increased.

First. Because there is so great a difference, absorbed by middlemen, between the price received by the farmer and that paid by the consumer that the consumer would receive no material disadvantage by a tariff tax which would enable the farmer to produce peanuts profitably. The whole peanut crop of this country is finally sold in small packages costing 5 or 10 cents per package. A reasonable increase in the duty would greatly benefit the farmer, while there would be no appreciable reduction in the standard 5 and 10 cent packages.

Second. Because peanuts are not a necessity, but a luxury. Third. Because the declared object of the forthcoming revision is to equalize "the difference between the cost of production at home and abroad, together with a reasonable profit to American industries." The countries which compete with the peanut industry are among those which have the cheapest labor in the world. Our soils are no better, if as well, adapted to this crop than the soil of our competitors. It is possible that any question of superior skill of the competing producers would be resolved in favor of the foreigner. Surely in this revision of the tariff the American farmer, whether hired hand or small proprietor, will not be expected to live on the cheap rations of the frugal Spanish peasant or the Japanese cocile.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. EDWARDS].

Mr. EDWARDS of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to the bill providing for an appropriation for the erection of consular, legation, and court buildings abroad. This bill was called up in the House a few days since, and after considerable discussion went over until a later date. I take advantage of this opportunity to register my protest against it.

The Committee on Foreign Affairs has made a favorable report upon it, and the bill as reported provides:

That the Secretary of State be, and he is hereby, authorized to acquire in foreign countries such sites and buildings as may be appropriated for by Congress for the use of the diplomatic and consular establishments of the United States, and to alter, repair, and furnish said buildings, suitable buildings for this purpose to be either purchased or erected, as to the Secretary of State may seem best, and all buildings so acquired for the diplomatic service shall be used both as the residence of diplomatic officers and for the offices of the diplomatic establishment: Provided, That hereafter not more than $1,000,000 shall be appropriated for the purposes set forth in any one fiscal year.

SEC. 2. That the sum of $1,000,000 is hereby appropriated, to be paid out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the purchase, erection, repair, alteration, and furnishing embassies, legations, and consulates, the said sum to be expended within the purposes of this act, at the discretion of the Secretary of State; not to exceed one-half thereof to be expended to secure consular and court buildings at Shanghai and Yokohama, and not to exceed one-half thereof to be expended to secure embassy buildings at Berlin and Mexico City.

In this metter I do not want to be misunderstood. I helieve

In this matter I do not want to be misunderstood. I believe that we should be progressive, and that we should, as far as possible, maintain our national dignity at home and abroad, but I do not believe in extravagance such as this bill proposes. do I believe it will, if carried out, add materially to our national dignity abroad-I believe that our standing as a nation is already fixed as the first of all powers. With able representatives this can be maintained as long as we merit that standing and dignity which we to-day enjoy.

One of the arguments advanced by gentlemen in support of this measure is that in proportion to the show and expenditures our foreign representatives are able to make will our country be esteemed by foreign powers. So far as I am concerned—and I believe I voice the sentiment of millions of Americans who are vitally interested in this important matter-I would rather have better financial conditions and more money in our Treasury here than so much dignity, at such a high price, abroad. [Applause.]

It is a well-known fact that the American people, as a whole, are heavily burdened with taxation; and if it were a direct levy of taxes upon them instead of an indirect taxation they would never stand for it. The people have the burden to bear, however, and it is by taxation upon them, and every dollar that is appropriated out of the Treasury and which is not applied in a way to materially benefit the country is necessarily placing additional burdens upon the shoulders of the taxpayers of this country and giving them absolutely nothing in return. Taxation at its best and in its easiest form is hard to bear, and always material benefits should result from the expenditures of such money. It is much easier for us to submit to taxation when we know we are at least getting a part of it back in some needed improvement. I think, sir, that the time has come when we should consider a way to curtail and reduce rather than increase taxation. I think, too, that if we are to make appropriations that they ought certainly to be in the interest of the people and for improvements here at home, and in the interest of economy and in keeping with good business judgment, rather than to make such large and extravagant appropriations in the interest of a few high-salaried officials in order that they might entertain lavishly and display a pomposity, which is foreign to Americanism, in foreign countries. [Applause.]

Of course I have due respect for the committee reporting the bill to the House and asking favorable action upon it, but that does not deter me from candidly and frankly expressing my views upon it. I oppose the bill because I believe it is unnecessary, extravagant, and untimely to make appropriations for the purposes stated in the bill.

It is pretty safe to assume that if this bill becomes a law it will not stop with the million that is asked for, nor with the million that will be asked for each year, but that amount will be increased from time to time.

It is unnecessary, because the remuneration which the United States Government grants its diplomatic officers is ample to enable them to live in style befitting an American citizen. know that it is urged that the dignity of this Republic requires that its diplomatic representatives should be properly housed; that their salaries are not large enough to meet the high rentals of the capital cities of foreign countries and make proper provision for the decent support and appearance of their families. I know the assertion is made that under present conditions none but rich men can afford to accept these positions, and that the erection of these official homes for our ambassadors and ministers would enable the man of small means to make a respectable showing and, on the other hand, would obviate such glaring extravagances as have been exhibited to the world in the experience of one of our chief representatives abroad.

All this, Mr. Chairman, is the merest buncombe. It is in line with the great clamor, some years ago, as to the attire in which American diplomats should appear at court functions, and we all remember how one of our ministers literally made Rome howl by presenting himself in the gorgeous uniform and paraphernalia of a militia colonel of his native State. Just as one of our diplomats of yore, who asked how he should dress for a foreign court function, was advised by the then Secretary of State to dress like an American gentleman, so I say our ambassadors and ministers should house themselves and live like American gentlemen, and thus exemplify to other nations the vaunted simplicity of the Republic. [Applause.]

The proposed legislation is untimely for many reasons. We are confronted with a huge Treasury deficit, which, I understand, will not be less than $130,000,000 when the current fiscal year closes. The paring knife is applied to all departmental estimates. It is impossible, we are told, to have a river and harbor bill this session on account of this deficit. Soil surveys in agricultural districts all over the country are refused for the same reason. As for appropriations for good roads, rural mail routes, forest preservation, conservation of our natural resources, much-needed public buildings, and such other projects in which every man, woman, and child at home are interested, these are not to be thought of.

The Isthmian Canal project, with all its elements of uncertainty and its enormous cost, swallows hundreds of millions in its insatiable maw. This is no mere rhetorical figure, for has there not already been introduced a bill calling for $500,000,000 for the completion of that big ditch? When that enterprise was first mooted and its cost put at a hundred millions, or thereabouts, it staggered us somewhat, but additional millions have been voted almost joyously, and this five hundred millions will no doubt also be granted sooner or later.

We are importuned to grant the use of the Pension Office building for the purposes of an inaugural ball. The ball is no part of the inaugural ceremonies. It will cost the Government nearly a hundred thousand dollars, and endanger valuable records in that building which could not be replaced if destroyed by fire, if it complies with this request which will benefit a purely private enterprise; but I fear that in spite of all the cogent arguments, in spite of all the facts and figures that have been arrayed against the proposition, Uncle Sam will be made to bleed again for the benefit largely of the hospitable and much-favored citizens of the city of Washington, who have never learned to walk without the appropriation crutch.

All the economies which are preached to us affect the rural population; they are all at the expense of the farmers. this fact that I propose to address myself briefly, and beg those who hear me to remember that "God made the country and man made the town." I might also add that large governmental appropriations and salaries have made the beautiful city of Washington.

The Yearbook of the Department of Agriculture for 1907 tells us that the grand total of values of farm products for that year was $7,412,000,000, and for the last nine years it amounted to the fabulous sum of $53,000,000,000. Besides, there were farm dairy products in 1907 which nearly reached $800,-000,000, poultry and eggs produced on farms $600,000,000, and animals sold from farms and slaughtered on them in 1907 were worth about $1,270,000,000. The balance of trade in farm products in favor of this country in 1907 was $444,000,000; in other products the trade balance of 1907 in favor of the United States was only $2,500,000. The aggregate of trade balances in the eighteen years since 1890 produced in favor of the United States by farm products amounts to $6,500,000,000, while the trade in other commodities during those eighteen years resulted in a grand adverse balance of $456,000,000. Let me quote a little further from the Yearbook:

A great stream of wealth has consequently been sent from farms to foreign countries to offset the adverse balance of trade in commodities other than agricultural, to pay the ocean-freight costs on imports conveyed in foreign-owned ships, and to pay the interest, dividends, and principal on investments in the United States by foreigners. It is the farmer who has sent credit to expatriated Americans; it is he who has provided the immigrant with millions to send every year to the loved ones in the old countries; and if there is still any credit to dispose of, the farmer has provided the American traveler in foreign countries with his pocket money.

The miner can not restore the mineral to the mine. With the farmer it is different. The primal forces and atoms of the universe are his. The sun shines and the rain falls, and the farmer applies his art and science to inexhaustible resources, ever adding enormously to the country's wealth, capital, credit, and welfare.

From the Yearbook we also learn the following values of the leading crops for the year 1907:

	Quantity.	Value.
Cornbushels	2,592,320,000	$1,836,901,000
Wheatdodo	634,087,000	554,437,000
Oatsdo	754,443,000	334,568,000
Barleydo	153,597,000	102,290,000
Ryedo	31,566,000	23,068,000
Buckwheatdo	14,290,000	9,975,000
Potatoesdodo	297,942,000	183,880,000
Haytons	63,677,000	743,507,000
Cottonbales	11.107.179	613,630,436
Tobaccopounds	698,126,000	76,234,000
Flaxseedbushels	25,851,000	24,713,000
Ricedo.:	18,738,000	16,081,000

The number and values of farm animals for the same year are equally significant:

	Number.	Value.
Horses. Mules Milch cows Other cattle. Sheep. Swine.	19,992,000 3,869,000 21,194,000 50,073,000 54,631,000 56,084,000	$1,867,530,000 416,939,000 650,057,000 845,938,000 211,736,000 339,030,000

Mr. Chairman, just at this juncture it may prove interesting to point out briefly how penuriously the National Government deals with the farmer in the matter of granting him facilities to get his products from the farm to market. In 1906 it cost the farmers of the United States $28,361,645 to carry to market the crops I shall name, viz, hay, tobacco, cotton, cereals, and potatoes. During a period of sixteen years, ending with 1907, the Government of the United States appropriated the pitiful total of $526,000 for the object of road improvement. In 1904 the individual States spent for the same purpose a grand total of nearly $80,000,000. It has been estimated that an annual appropriation by Congress of from twenty to twenty-five million dollars, for ten or fifteen years, allotted to the different States in proportion to population, would within twenty years put the public roads of this country in such excellent condition that they would bear comparison with the best of Europe and would enable our farmers to save from 40 to 75 per cent of the cost of hauling their produce to market. Talk about economies. Here is one that comes home straight to the agricultural population of the United States, and especially of the South. Bills in-numerable have been introduced, year after year, proposing appropriations for the construction of good roads, but none of them has yet been placed on the statute books.

them has yet been placed on the statute books.

The cost of bad roads to the farmers of the United States is perhaps a difficult matter to estimate. However, when it is considered for the entire country upon the basis of highway mileage and the results of experiments relative to the cost of hauling farm produce, the figures are most surprising. The Federal Department of Agriculture states that there are 2,151,578 miles of public roads in the United States. Of this mileage statistics for the year 1904 show that about 7 per cent are improved. During the crop year 1905–6, $5,748,000,000 pounds of farm products were hauled over common roads from farm to market. As no figures are included for forest or mine products or for the general commodities of life that go from city to country, it is evident that the slightest saving in cost of hauling per ton would assume striking proportions when considered for the entire country. Figures show that these great crops traveled in wagons over the country roads 208,432,644 miles merely in being transported from the farm to the railroad shipping point.

point.

Investigations have established the fact that the average cost of hauling per ton per mile is about 25 cents. The cost on stone roads, dry and in good order, is about 8 cents; on stone roads in ordinary condition, 12 cents; on earth roads containing ruts and mud, 29 cents; on sandy roads when wet, 33 cents; on sandy roads when dry, 64 cents.

A reduction in the cost of hauling from 25 cents to 12 cents would mean an average saving of over $250,000,000."

The facts and figures just stated, Mr. Chairman, I have adduced to show how little the legislative body of the greatest agricultural country in the world has done and is inclined to do for the agriculturists. To be sure, the farmer is praised on every possible occasion, but, sir, "fine words butter no parsnips," and the farmers of the United States would rather have one ounce of performance than any number of pounds of promises. [Applause.]

From general conditions I am going to pass to a specific instance. The district which I have the honor to represent is composed of 12 counties. It is essentially an agricultural community, if we except the great and important seaport of Savannah, about which I shall have something to say later on. people are among the most industrious, thrifty, and frugal to be found anywhere in this land. Their material reward comes from honest toil. They are not continually shouting for "the old flag and an appropriation;" they work for and merit all they get. Their demands are not upon the generosity of the Government; they simply ask for fair treatment. When they ask for bread, they look somewhat askance upon the stone that is handed them. When a request is made by their Representative in Congress for a soil survey or a rural mail route in that district, they resent it when they are told that no funds are available for that purpose, for they remember with what cheerful alacrity millions are voted for nonproductive purposes

When bills are introduced here for needed public buildings in the rapidly growing cities of the district, and are met with hard-luck stories of actual and prospective deficits-deficits growing out of inexcusable extravagance and not caused by providing for real necessities—then my people wonder if there is not something wrong with legislation that "saves at the spigot and wastes at the bung." I have brought in bills here for public buildings which are greatly needed at Statesboro, Waynesboro, Swainsboro, and other thriving towns in my district, the aggregate of appropriations asked not exceeding $500,000, but thus far I have heard nothing but "not now; some other time, perhaps." And yet the agricultural importance of that section ranks high even when compared with others that have been less modest in their demands. The following table, compiled from the agricultural yearbooks, shows the total of agricultural products of the First Congressional District of Georgia by counties, the production of cotton being taken from the Yearbook for 1907, the other figures from the Yearbook for 1905:

I have no figures for the counties of Jenkins and Toombs, except as to cotton, but the output there would easily bring the grand total of values for the district up to, if not above, $10,000,000.

In support of the statement that our section of the country is well adapted to the production of vegetables, I wish to quote from the Sylvania Telephone:

THESE ARE THE CHAMPIONS.

My, my; we thought there was a limit to everything, but there seems to be none at all to the size that turnips may attain in Screven County. For some weeks now the Telephone has been reporting a turnip from this one, and a ruta-baga from that one, and a cow horn from another—the story gradually tending upward every time; and not only the story, but the turnips as well, for we always bad the "proof of the pudding" before relating the tale.

So, as we say, these have been no Baron Munchausen tales of wonderful and fabulous growth, but actual turnips that were planted and grew in this very Screven County soil.

But now listen. We are going to give you the climax to it all. The limit has at last been reached, and here we'll rest, for this season at least. We can't tell you about them like they are—you will just have to see them to know what we mean. One of them is a purple top, weighs 11 pounds, and measures 12 inches through. The other is a cow horn—but no cow in this county ever had a horn that big. it is 26 inches long and big around in proportion.

As we said before, you just ought to see them. It's the biggest sight that has ever been brought into the Telephone office. They were raised by Mr. Joshua Daughtry, of Woodcliff—the fair home of the orange and of many other splendid fruits and products, but more especially now that garden spot of the ruta-baga and purple top.

I think, in view of the small size of the turnip and ruta-baga referred to and by way of apology, that I should add that no doubt larger ones could have been produced but for the fact that this has not been a very good season for turnips and rutabagas in that section. [Laughter.]

The importance of Savannah as a seaport is universally conceded, and yet I doubt if many of my colleagues in this House, especially those of the West, have even an approximate appreciation of its commerce. It is worth while to give a few figures on that subject. For the three fiscal years 1905, 1906, and 1907 the exports and imports at Savannah figured up thus:

Year.	Exports.	Imports.	Duty collected.
1905 1906 1907	$62,244,837 64,839,551 63,039,824	$1,488,692 1,503,069 2,203,867	$25,823 47,029 71,015
Total	190,124,212	5,195,628	143,867

In this connection I wish to quote a clipping:

[From the Savannah Morning News, Tuesday, October 6, 1908.]

SAVANNAH'S BANK CLEARINGS.

A glance at Savannah's bank clearings once in a while will be helpful to Savannah's business men and real-estate owners who are disposed to think Savannah isn't going ahead as fast as she ought to. The last week's report of the clearings of cities in the South Atlantic section showed Savannah ahead of any other city. Savannah's were $5,845,000, an increase of 2.7; those of Richmond were next to Savannah's, being $5,265,000, a decrease of 15.2; Atlanta's were $4,522,000, a decrease of 6.6; and Jacksonville's were $1,046,000, a decrease of 17.1.

When it is remembered that in October last year, just before the panic, business was exceptionally good, the showing made by Savannah a year after the panic is remarkable. In fact, it is a showing to be proud of. All the other cities last week, in the list for this section, showed a decrease in their clearings in comparison with the clearings a year ago, except Savannah. Savannah's increase was not large, but it was an increase. Savannah's business, therefore, is booming ahead, notwithstanding the fact that the effects of the panic are still felt.

That Savannah is steadily advancing is apparent from the number of dwellings that are being erected. All over the southern section new houses are being built; and if we are rightly informed, many more are projected. While Savannah has the business building will continue, and that she will hold her business and increase it there is not a doubt. Last week's bank clearings are an excellent advertisement of the city. Particularly do they speak volumes to those who understand their full meaning.

the city. Particular

This much, Mr. Chairman, I have brought forward in support of the bill, introduced by me at the first session of this Congress, for widening and deepening the harbor at Savannah, a work imperatively called for by the ever-increasing commerce of that port. I do not know if the fiat that we are to have no river and harbor bill this session is irrevocable; I trust it is not. I trust that some money can be found for projects that will benefit cities and States that contribute to the wealth and prosperity of the country. I trust that we shall find money for things like that before we spend it on frills and furbelows like palatial residences for our diplomatic officers in foreign cities.

Mr. Chairman, I shall be excused, I hope, for dilating upon this topic of liberality in one direction and niggardliness in the other. It is a subject on which I feel deeply. We need not take wonder, sir, that the farmers of the country grumble when appropriations are withheld which, judiciously expended, would vastly improve the conditions with which they have to contend. Look at the tariff! It is constructed with greatest solicitude for the interests of the manufacturer, who is hedged in with protection on every side. There isn't much in it for the farmers; on the contrary, the extravagant protection accorded to the manufacturers, especially those who manufacture agricultural implements, bears heavily on the tillers of the soil. The United States sells to the farmers of the world more agricultural implements than almost all the other nations combined. The surpassing excellence of the American implement is acknowledged by all the world. And yet, in the face of this universal demand for the American product, the tariff maintains a prohibitive duty on this class of manufactures, and thus enables the International Harvester trust to charge the American farmer twice as much as he would pay if under a lower tariff. Competition could be established by the importation of plows and harrows and harvesters and thus the price be lowered to our farmers.

Far be it from me to enter upon a discussion of the iniquities of the present tariff policy of the Republican party. We shall get quite enough of debate on that topic when the Sixty-first Congress convenes in extra session after the 4th day of March. What I have said about the tariff is merely incidental to the general subject of my complaint about the lack of consideration shown the farmer. This indictment is based upon striking specifications. The total of appropriations for the fiscal year 1907–8 amounted to $920,798,143.80. Of this the farmer's as shown by the agricultural appropriation bill-was only $9,447,290, a fraction more than 1 per cent. For the fiscal year 1908-9 the proportion is about the same, for of a total of $1,008,804,894.57 there was appropriated for the work of the Department of Agriculture only $11,672,106. In other words, Mr. Chairman, that interest which adds annually more to the wealth of the country than any other of the great sources from which the Nation's wealth flows, gets the smallest share. increase in appropriations for agricultural purposes for 1908-9 over 1907-8 was a little more than $2,000,000, while for the army it was nearly seventeen millions; for fortifications, $2,500,000; for pensions, seventeen millions; and even the diplomatic service profited to the amount of half a million. All these branches of the public service are nonproductive; the agricultural appropriation alone gives into a field that yields returns a hundred, aye, a thousand fold. [Applause.]

The appropriations for the army, the navy, and pensions for the fiscal year 1909 aggregate $380,000,000. One per cent of that enormous sum, Mr. Chairman, expended every year in aid to the States for the purposes of road improvements would be of incalculable advantage to the farmers of the country, would save them many, many more millions in wear and tear of horses, mules, and vehicles; would make intercommunication easier; would in many ways contribute toward making life on the farm would in many ways contribute toward making life of the less monotonous and far more happy, and would be an important factor in allaying the desire of the farmers' sons and daughters for life in the city, because it would mean better schools and churches in the rural sections. This is but one of schools and churches in the rural sections. the items in respect of which Congress should be more liberal toward the farmer, but it is an important one. There are many others, such as improving the navigability of our rivers; draining our swamps and lowlands; establishing inland waterways, so as to cheapen freights; appropriating sufficient funds to make soil surveys wherever these are advisable and profitable; and to otherwise encourage the agricultural interest of this country. [Applause.]

The great Napoleon laid it down as a maxim of statecraft that agriculture must be regarded as the first interest of the state. It is a maxim that should not be lost sight of by the Congress of the United States. [Applause.]
Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask my colleague from Tennessee a few questions. I would like to ask if the powder factory at Indianhead is running to its full capacity

Mr. PADGETT. I think not. Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Why is it not running to its full

Mr. PADGETT. I do not think they run it to its full capacity, but they are running it to the capacity of the appropriations made for it.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Then, if the appropriation for running the powder factory were increased we could get more powder from the government powder factory:

Mr. PADGETT. Yes; but I do not know that that would be indicious.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Why not?
Mr. PADGETT. We want to maintain establishments that could supply the Government if necessary in time of emergency. Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. What other concern do we buy powder from?

Mr. PADGETT. We buy in the open market, and the price is fixed by our own officers.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Who gets the bids, as a rule? Mr. PADGETT. The Secretary of the Navy and the Secretary of War.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Who furnishes the powder under the bids?

Mr. PADGETT. I do not know the individuals. Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. What concern?

Mr. PADGETT. I do not know. They buy in the open market, and the Government fixes the price under a board of Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. The gentleman is unable to tell what firm furnishes it?

Mr. PADGETT. I do not know. I have never inquired.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Can the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Foss] inform me from whom the Government buys?

Mr. FOSS. I think the Du Pont Powder Company. Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Yes; that is exactly who it is; the most infamous powder trust that ever existed on God's earth, and a trust which is now being prosecuted in the federal courts of the United States in Delaware.

Mr. PADGETT. I do not know that the trust question can cut much figure when the government officers fix the price.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. We have been a number of years trying to get the price down from $1 to what it is now. My colleague states that we are not running the government powder factory to its fullest capacity, because we are not appropriating money enough to do it, and the point I want to accentuate is that fact, that if we give more money in this bill to run the powder factory, we would have less to buy from the so-called private" concerns, to wit, the powder trust.

Mr. PADGETT. The price at which we are manufacturing and the price at which we are buying do not afford a very strong argument for manufacturing more.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Before we built the government powder factory the Du Ponts were charging us a dollar a pound, and because of that outrage Secretary Long recommended that we put up this powder factory; and now we are making it for 47 cents, all told, and buying it at 65 cents from the Du Ponts.

Mr. PADGETT. Forty-seven cents does not include the cost of the interest on the outlay, nor does it represent the cost of the salaries of the officers and men furnished by the Government.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. So far as the department is concerned, and as I understand the action of the committee, the committee has given every dollar that the department asks this year for that purpose.

Mr. PADGETT. I understand so. Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. For running the powder plant at Indian Head; and as I understand it, it is running practically all the year round, except what time may be absolutely neces sary to make repairs, as in any other plant of that kind and character.

Mr. PADGETT. By running it continuously night and day it might make more. The gentleman asked me if it was making all it could make, and I said "no," but it is being run to extent of the appropriation.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Does my colleague think that we should enlarge that plant, or should we have another?

Mr. PADGETT. I do not see any necessity for it at the present time.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I just want to state-I do not want to prolong the debate-that we were paying $1 before, and we paid about 80 cents during the Spanish war, and because of those prices, and because of that "monopoly," and I think he used that word, Secretary Long recommended the building of this government powder factory. The powder we bought was not good powder; Secretary Long said so, I think. Now, if this government concern can turn out more powder, and at 47 cents, I do not see why we do not appropriate more money, rather than pay the powder trust, or any other concern,

Mr. PADGETT. I think when the other man makes it, and we fix the price at which we will buy it, we are not at a dis-

Mr. SHERLEY. The gentleman does not mean by that statement to imply that the Government arbitrarily fixes the price. What the Government does is through an army and navy board. That board enters into trade relations with the powder manufacturers, and a price is agreed upon.

Mr. PADGETT. But they have the right, and they fix the price and compel the other men to accept their figures.

Mr. SHERLEY. They fix the price, but they have to fix that price with regard to whether the companies will furnish any powder at the figure or not.

Mr. PADGETT. No; they fix the price with a view of what is right and proper.

Mr. SHERLEY. I understand; but they also have to bear in mind whether they can get the powder. Now, the gentleman does not mean to tell the committee that adding to the cost of material and labor in the manufacture of powder, which is 45 cents, as stated by the chairman of the Committee on Naval

Mr. PADGETT. About 47. Mr. SHERLEY. Forty-five cents, as stated by the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, that adding to that the payment of officers, insurance, and interest on investment would increase it to 67 cents or anywhere near that.

Mr. PADGETT. And a reasonable profit on the investment. Mr. SHERLEY. With a reasonable profit, The gentleman The gentleman surely does not mean to make that statement?

Mr. PADGETT. Well, I do not think that 67 cents is an exorbitant price from the proof.

Mr. SHERLEY. I will state to the gentleman that we have had a hearing of General Crozier on the fortifications bill for the last two hours on this subject, and he said a very liberal estimate for all the additional items would be 10 per cent increase on the labor and material price, and 10 per cent of 45 cents would make 4½ cents, a total of a little under 50 cents. You would not get up anywhere near the 67-cent price that is now being paid the powder manufacturers.

Mr. PADGETT. Admiral Mason and others before the committee stated to the committee that that price was a fair and reasonable price that was fixed by the board. I am only basing my statement upon the statement of the men who are at the head of the bureau in the department.

Mr. SHERLEY. But that conclusion is not warranted by the subsequent facts as to the cost at Indianhead as to what should be charged in addition as representing a fair profit on the investment and risk. Counting all those things in, and the loss from powder not being up to the standard and being rejected, would not bring it anywhere near 67 cents.

Mr. PADGETT. I do not know myself, and I can only state that Admiral Mason stated it was a fair price. I can not state personally because I do not know.

Mr. SHERLEY. Well, I simply did not want the statement to go unchallenged, because I think we will have very shortly some detailed figures on the subject.

Mr. PADGETT. I am only stating what those gentlemen stated to the committee. I am not a powder expert and do not state my personal opinion. I will insert the statement of Admiral Mason and the report of the joint army and navy board.

On page 124 of the hearings of the first session, Sixtieth

Congress, the following appears:

Mr. Dawson. We have heard a great deal, and we will hear more when this bill comes on the floor, about the powder monopoly—about the deterioration of the powder and the low grade of powder supplied to the Government by the so-called "Powder trust." Have you any views that you would give to us that would enlighten us on the subject and prepare us against these attacks if they should come?

Admiral Mason. I would be very glad to give the committee any information that I can. I am not prepared offhand to go into particulars, but all I can say is that we are not in the hands of a powder monopoly in any way, and I should say, to the contrary, that the powder people are in our hands, because we make the price, we prescribe the specifications, and we have inspectors and subinspectors to watch the processes and to make them do just exactly as we say.

Mr. Dawson. Was there a joint army and navy board created to consider this whole powder question?

Admiral Mason. Yes.

Mr. Dawson. Where will their report be found—is it in your annual report?

Mr. Dawson. Where will their report be found—is it in your annual report?

Admiral Mason. I think it is a public document, but I will be very glad to look it up and give you all the information on the subject.

Mr. Dawson. Will you please do that?

(Copies of joint board's reports and correspondence concerning price of smokeless powder are hereto appended, marked "A, B, C, D, E, and F.")

Mr. Thomas. Is there a powder trust?

Admiral Mason. As far as the Navy Department is concerned, no; we have control of it.

Mr. Robers. I would like to ask if we are getting as good powder from the private manufactories as from Indianhead?

Admiral Mason. Decidedly, yes.

Mr. Mudd. Admiral, if they make powder just as good, and just as cheaply, what is the particular reason for maintaining a government establishment? Do you claim it tends to prevent monopoly?

Admiral Mason. By having the government plant we have control of the situation. We know exactly how much that powder costs us, and when these people come in with exorbitant prices we say, "You can not get such prices, and if you do not come down within reason, we will go to Congress and ask them to give us a plant in which we can make all of the powder, although we do not like to do that, because we want to keep two or three outsiders going in case of accident to our plant."

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. Then another thing, it keeps you posted as to the evolution and manufacture of powder.

Admiral Mason. Yes; we are making experiments as well as the powder companies.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, BUREAU OF ORDNANCE, Washington, D. C., February 23, 1906.

Sir: This bureau has to request that the department communicate with the Secretary of War, suggesting the appointment of a joint army and navy board to consider the present specifications for the manufacture and test of smokeless powders for the army and navy, with a view to a revision of these specifications where such revision is found to be advisable, and, further, to take up all questions relating to the granulation, manufacture, and tests of smokeless powders which may be referred to the board by this bureau and by the ordnance office of the army.

2. To this end it is requested that the board be directed to report to the chief of this bureau and to the Chief of Ordnance, United States Army, for instructions.

3. The following officers are nominated for the personnel of this board on the part of the navy: Commander Austin M. Knight, Lieut. Commander A. C. Dieffenbach, and Lieut. John Halligan.

Respectfully,

N. E. Mason.

N. E. MASON, Chief of Bureau of Ordnance.

The SECRETARY OF THE NAVY.

MARCH 16, 1906.

Sir: In accordance with the order of the Secretary of the Navy, No. 3799-69, of March 9, 1906, constituting a board for the consideration of all matters connected with the subject of smokeless powder which may be referred to the board by this bureau and by the ordnance office of the army, the board is requested to consider the following subjects and to make such recommendations in connection with them as may be found expedient:

(a) Specifications for the manufacture and test of smokeless powder. This is intended to include all matters directly or indirectly included in manufacture, beginning with the selection and preparation of all material and ending with ballistic tests for acceptance.

(b) The granulation of powders.

This will include a consideration of the relations between army and navy guns and the feasibility of assigning a granulation for a given caliber in the navy to the same or a different caliber in the army.

(c) The cost of manufacture of smokeless powder.

Under this head the board should estimate, as accurately as may be, the cost of manufacture of powder at the government plant at Indian Head, including a fair allowance for interest on capital invested, repairs, insurance, salaries, etc. Consideration should be given to losses which may result from the idleness of plant at seasons when the work in hand is insufficient to keep the plant fully employed, and to the possible loss from enforced discharge, at such seasons, of trained employees.

(d) Other commercial features connected with the manufacture and ployees. (d) Other commercial features connected with the manufacture and ployees.

(d) Other commercial features connected with the manufacture and delivery of powder.

Under this head consideration should be given to the purchase of alcohol (by the companies or the Government) and to questions connected with "Solvent recovery;" also to questions relating to boxing and boxes, freight charges, and, in short, to all questions of business and business methods which may be found to be at issue between the Government and the companies.

As a result of (c) and (d), above, an expression of opinion is desired as to the price which the Government should pay for powder with fairness to all interests concerned.

(e) The care of smokeless powder in storage and transportation and the tests to which it should be subjected in service.

This includes all precautions connected with the powder from the date of its delivery to the Government.

(f) It is the intention of the bureau to give the board very wide discretion in its investigations, and no subject properly connected with smokeless powder should be regarded as excluded because not specifically mentioned in the preceding paragraphs.

(g) The board is authorized and instructed to call into consultation such experts as it may desire, and especially such representatives of the powder companies as may desire to be heard. To this end, notice of the existence and objects of the board should be given to the companies at the proper time and an invitation extended to them to send representatives for consultation.

The officers and employees of the bureau are at the service of the board, and very careful consideration is suggested of the methods of manufacture and test which are used at the naval powder factory at Indianhead.

(h) The preceding instructions are to be considered by the board in manufacture and test which are used at the naval powder factory at Indianhead.

(h) The preceding instructions are to be considered by the board in connection with such further instructions as may be received from the Chief of Ordnance, United States Army.

Respectfully,

Chief of Bureau of Ordnance.

Commander Austin M. Knight, U. S. Navy, Senior Member, Joint Board on Smokeless Powder.

Joint Army and Navy Board on Smokeless Powder,

Bureau of Ordnance, Navy Department,

Washington, D. C., September 26, 1906.

Sir: Following an earlier report, dated August 1, 1906, forwarding revised specifications for the manufacture of smokeless powder, the Joint Army and Navy Board on Smokeless Powder submits the following report dealing with the price which should be paid private manufacturers for smokeless powder for cannon, to be made for the Government in accordance with the specifications above referred to. In arriving at the price hereinafter recommended the board carefully considered all data which it could obtain, including the actual cost of manufacturing powder at the Naval Powder Factory at Indian Head, Md., and statements and information presented by the powder makers who were afforded an opportunity to appear before it to discuss the subject involved, to present their views as to the cost of manufacture, and to answer the questions of the board.

2. The price charged for smokeless powder for some years past has tions of the board.

2. The price charged for smokeless powder for some years past has been 70 cents per pound, exclusive of the cost of the alcohol used, which heretofore has been supplied by the Government. The actual price paid, including the cost of the alcohol, has thus been approximately 74 cents per pound. Taking the figures furnished by the naval powder factory for the cost of raw material and labor and accepting its estimate as to maintenance, depreciation, and fire loss, the cost of a pound of powder, based upon an output of 1,000,000 pounds, which is approximately the yearly output of that factory, working night and day, is 54.6 cents. By adding the interest on capital invested in grounds, building, and machinery, the interest on capital invested at any time in material on hand, powder in process of manufacture and powder in dry houses, taxes, administrative expenses not considered in the data furnished from the naval powder factory, profit, etc., the price per pound is increased from 54.6 cents to approximately 69 cents. In the judgment of the board, it is probable that the experience of the private manufacturers enables them to cheapen the cost of production at certain points, and that the actual cost of their powder is somewhat less than that of tile naval powder factory. Such advantage as they may gain here, however, is probably offset by expenses to which they are subject for pensions in the case of employees killed or injured in their works, by damages exacted by neighboring property owners, and by other expenses necessarily incident to the manufacture of powder. From an economical standpoint a government powder factory has advantages, some of which are the following: Smaller salaries for administrative officers, and plant probably worked to full capacity, while those of existing private manufacturers have been generally worked much below their maximum capacity as a result of limited orders. These advantages are, however, offset in a measure by a labor day of eight hours, while the labor day of private manufacturers is ten hours, and by the expense incident to a large number of holidays during the year, for which the government employees are given full pay.

It is considered probable also that private manufacturers have an advantage over the Government in the purchase of raw materials; but this subject is a difficult one to investigate, and the board has no accurate information concerning it.

Based upon all data at its disposal, the board is of the opinion that a price of 69 cents per pound is a fair one to be paid private manufacturers for smokeless powder, the manufacturers to furnish their own alcohol. The board considers that the arrangement under which the Government has heretofore supplied the alcohol to the manufacturers has many disadvantages, and recommends that in future it be abandoned, and that manufacturers be required to supply their own alcohol, which may be removed 'from bond free of duty under proper regulations of the Treasury Department.

3. In view of the more economical operation

NAVAL PROVING GROUND, Indianhead, Md., August 2, 1906.

NAVAL PROVING GROUND, Indianhead, Md., August 2, 1906.

Sir: By direction of the Bureau of Ordnance:

1. I have to submit the following estimate of the probable cost of smokeless powder at private works.

2. The cost of manufacturing 1,000,000 pounds of powder at the Indianhead works during the fiscal year recently closed has been 47.7 cents per pound, exclusive of alcohol. Every item due to its manufacture is included in this cost. All raw materials, chemicals, laboratory expenses, heat, light, power, care of grounds, buildings, etc., have been reckoned; also a charge for loss by fire based upon the mean fire loss for the last six years.

3. Included in this is an allowance of 5 per cent for a depreciation on buildings and improvements. Another allowance of 10 per cent depreciation on the machinery of the entire plant is also included.

4. In comparing the cost of powder at this plant with private manufacturers, it would be fair to assume generally that private purchasers obtain their material at least 10 per cent less than the Government does. It has been hinted to me that the Tennessee Fibre Company sells its material to private manufacturers at 4½ cents per pound; we pay 5½ cents per pound. A paper manufacturer told me several years ago, when we were paying 6 cents, he was paying considerably less for this cotton. The same thing is probably true of acid. But on known data the following amounts should be subtracted from the cost at this place:

14, 760 44, 685 474, 000 Deducting this from _____ or, say, 42.9 cents per pound to the private manufacturer.

5. The total rejections of powder amount to 1.7 per cent during the history of its manufacture. These rejections have not affected Indianhead, and should not other makers. However, adding 1.7 per cent to their cost, we have a total of 43.6 cents. If the powder can be reworked or used for other purposes, this item should not be considered.

6. It may be urged that there is a business hazard attached to the manufacture of this material; that is, that we may be making a different powder some day that will render much or all of the plant useless. Such an argument should have no weight, since we have already been using this powder for seven years or more, and in the account of cost given above, 10 per cent of the machinery is expended each year off the books, which would provide for a total elimination of the plant in ten years. Attention is called to the powder "cordite," which, in spite of its manifest disadvantages, has continued in use some fifteen years without any immediate prospect of some other powder being substituted for it tuted for it.

7. On the basis of 1,000,000 pounds of powder manufactured per annum, it will be seen that a price of 70 cents per pound yields a profit of $264,000, and this considers every possible charge except the pay of the officers connected with the financial administration of the pay of the officers connected with the manner of the enterprise.

8. Judging from the cost of the Indianhead plant, the total investment will amount to about $650,000. On this basis the stockholders should receive a dividend of over 40 per cent on the capital invested if the powder is sold at 70 cents. If it were sold at 55 cents per pound, this would yield 17.5 per cent profit on the capital invested, and in case the orders were cut down during any one year to one-half, the profit should still be satisfactory.

Sirs: Referring to proving-ground letter 3023, of August 2, 1906:

1. I beg to call attention to the following items that should be considered in calculating the cost of powder at private factories:

(a) Powder on hand in dry houses and raw material, such as cotton, nitrate of soda, and other supplies. This will amount, at a factory of the capacity of the one at Indianhead, to approximately $500,000, and must be added to the capital invested.

(b) Local taxes, which will vary in the location of the plant.

(c) The cost of indemnifying employees who have been injured. Respectfully, Jos. Strauss.

Smokeless Powder Specifications,
Washington, D. C.

Dear Sir: Complying with your request that we give you our reasons for opposing any reduction in the price now paid by the Government for smokeless powder, we submit the following discussion:

In opening this discussion we desire to say that, in our judgment, the price paid for the powder is far less important than its quality, and that at the present time, with the processes of the manufacture and even the composition of the powder in a more or less experimental and uncertain condition, an effort to reduce the price is likely to be false economy. With the army and navy it should always be the aim to have the best possible powder regardless of the cost. The desire should be to give an adequate price and to expect a constant improvement in the article. In order to produce a superior article we must be allowed a reasonable and fair margin of profit, so that we may be able to purchase the best materials, employ the best skilled labor, and be allowed to work and rework the material until the desired result is obtained. If we must stop short of that because of price it is easy to determine what the natural result will be—either loss on our part or an inferior powder. We have spared no expense in our efforts to improve our product, and we should receive an adequate compensation.

At the beginning, when the price was fixed at $1 per pound, the manufacturers had little knowledge of the subject, and their plants were not suited to economical production. Before experience had shown us how to make a profit the Government reduced the price to 80 cents a pound, and again to 70 cents, while we were making powder at a loss or with no profit. It is only within the last three years that a profit has been made. It would be a great injustice to the companies who have continued under these circumstances to produce a good powder, and who have spared no expense to improve it, to insist now that we must submit to another reduction, under more rigid specifications, before we have rec 80 to 85 cents.

The Government has a system of inspection that grows daily more rigid, to which inspection we do not object, but which tends to increase the cost of production. The bureaus have just adopted new specifications which are more exacting and to which they have added new and untried tests, which will probably add to the number of rejections. These specifications undertake to control each step of the processes to be used, to specify raw materials, number of washings, their duration, etc., and in the end we are still held responsible for the results.

In arriving at the cost of powder manufactured by the Government, its experts lose sight of many items of expense which the Government pays through other channels, as salaries of officers, technical men, book-keepers, clerks, traveling expenses, etc. The Government charges some of these items to other accounts, and overlooks them in estimating the cost of manufacture of powder. Upon examination of our books we find that the following result would be obtained by taking what we are informed is the cost of powder at Indianhead on the manufacture of 1,002,000 pounds.

We find that during the past year of our operations the ratio of rejections to the amount of powder manufactured and delivered to the Government was 5.23 per cent. If from the manufacture of powder at Indianhead there be deducted the same percentage for rejections, the result would be that instead of delivering 1,002,000 pounds of powder, Indianhead would produce 949,000 pounds of acceptable powder, and the cost per pound would be increased from 47.45 cents (their cost of powder manufactured, exclusive of alcohol) to 49.98 cents, and their cost of 54.63 (including alcohol) would be increased to 57.63 cents. If to this there be added the amounts paid by our company, which have not been taken into consideration by the Government in their estimate of cost—mill superintendence, 1.96 cents per pound of powder manufactured; the sum instructive cost, 2.98 cents per pound of powder manufactured; the sum instructive cost, 2.98 cents per pound of powder manufactured in the cost would be 62.20 cents, exclusive of alcohol) or 69.85 cents, including alcohol. This showing clearly demonstrates the fact that the only profit that we could obtain in the manufacture of powder at 70 cents per pound (and alcohol furnished by us) would be brought about by a more economical expenditure of labor in factory operations, because it is beyond dispute that the Government is paying approximately the same prices for cotton, acids, and other raw materials as we are.

Progress in the manufacture of powder sometimes causes the abandonment of whole plants, as was the case when the change from brown prismatic to pyrocellulose powder was made. This company had, at large expense, equipped two plants for the Government's used during the Spanish war, which were utilized for a short time to manufacture the powder. Experiments with a new powder, which, if adopted for the smokeless, powder was made, pense, and the costly extensions to our plants are rendered unnecessary and useless.

We would further call the board's attention to the fact that the policy of this company has always been, regardless of expense, to improve the powder by adopting every suggestion made by the Government. For instance, in the Government's efforts to standardize the process of manufacture of powder, we have been called upon at large expense to change our plants to insure a uniform process of manufacture. In this connection we have recognized the great importance of pure water in the manufacture of powder, and although the water supplies of two different plants had been used for upward of five years with satisfactory results, we realized that improvements in the product would result from corresponding improvements in the water supplies of two different plants had been used for upward of five years with satisfactory results, we realized that improvements in the product would result from corresponding improvements in the water supplies of water. This expenditure will result in an improvement in the powder and a corresponding benefit to the Government.

A very important item in the cost is the rejection of powder by the Government. It may be argued that we should not produce a powder that would not meet the requirements. The art of powder making has not yet reached the point where rejections are not to be expected. Furthermore, add to this the fact that the Government is constantly changing the specifications, insisting upon making additional tests, some of which are purely empirical in their nature, so that their influence and result can not be foreseen. The chances of rejection are thus vasty increased, and should be a large item in the fixing of the price of powder.

The manufacture of powder is a hazardous business far beyond the of powder.

The manufacture of powder is a hazardous business far beyond the conception of inexperienced men. The danger of fire and explosion which may destroy valuable plants is great, and greater still is the cost of life.

which may destroy valuable plants is great, and greater still is the cost of life.

We may have touched on many things in this letter which you will consider irrelevant in fixing a just selling price for powder. We believe that all these factors have an important bearing on the subject, and each must be given its due weight.

To conclude our arguments we may note:
First. The necessity of your having the very best powder which can be made. Your ships and your men demand it. This can not be had if you put the price too low.
Second. The painstaking and careful attention which we have given to the improvement of the powder, the money which we have risked in our experiments to develop it, and the capital which we are risking today in our efforts to produce for you a new and better powder are all worthy of compensation and the Government should consider its own interests by encouraging us.

Third. During the experimental stage of the manufacture of smokeless powder, which continued until the last three years, we realized little or no profit. It is discouraging to think that such a condition may continue. Progress in the production of powder is the most expensive item to be considered, for it means constant expenditure of money, which rarely develops value, and when it does produce something the result means entire abandonment of old methods. To illustrate, you are to-day experimenting with a powder which has already cost us several hundred thousand dollars. If the experiment is a failure, the money invested is lost. On the other hand, if it succeeds our present plants are, in a large measure, rendered valueless. We recognize the importance and value of the initial steps taken by the Government in developing the present powder and the work done in the government laboratories. It is a fact, however, that the manufacture would not have reached the present standard had it not been for the very large expenditure of money made by us in experiments and in designing and perfecting the necessary machinery. We have freely given to the Government the benefit of these experiences for use at its own plants. We are not desirous of taking to ourselves an undue credit for this development, but we believe that the bureaus will agree with us that the art of manufacture would not have reached the present improved condition had we not undertaken the work, for the reason that Congress has always failed to appropriate sufficient funds to enable the Indianhead plant to do it.

Fourth. We are selling to the Government to-day a better powder, made under rigid inspection and subject to rejection, for a less price than we are paid by the commercial trade, which takes powder made without specifications or inspection and in which we have constant, wide-awake, active competition. This in itself is sufficient proof that the Government is buying its powder at a fair and just price.

Fifth. The Government, by its own experience at Indianhead, is well aware of the cost of making powder. If to this cost there be added a fair margin, to correspond to the items which we have enumerated and to the losses which we must allow for, we feel sure that it will be shown that the present price is not unreasonable, but it is a just and fair price, made necessary by the expe

Joint Army and Navy Board on Smokeless Powder,

Maj. O. C. Horney, U. S. Army; Maj. J. E. Hoffer, U. S. Army; and Lieut. T. C. Hart, U. S. Army. The Du Pont Company was represented by Mr. H. F. Brown, chemical director.

2. The inclosed statement of the cost of manufacturing at the Indianhead plant for the fiscal year ending June 30 was presented and considered the basis for fixing the price of powder. From this statement it is found that powder is being manufactured at a cost of 4.2 cents per pound less than it was for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1906.
Of this reduction, 3 cents per pound is due to the use of cheaper nitrating material and 1.2 cents to increased output. In recommending a price for new contracts the board does not deem it proper to consider as a factor the resulting cheapening at the Indianhead plant due to the increased output, since the private manufacturer, having but one market, must limit his output to the demands of the Government.

3. The price of 69 cents per pound fixed last year was based upon the cost at Indianhead. That cost has now been reduced 3 cents per pound, and the reduction rests wholly upon the lessened cost of raw material. Allowing for possible fluctuations in the price of raw material and considering that the manufacturer should also profit by its reduction, the board recommends that the price of powder be reduced by 2 cents per pound—that is to say, that the price on new contracts be fixed at 67 cents per pound, the manufacturer to furnish the alcohol.

The CHIEF OF BUREAU OF ORDNANCE, Navy Department, Washington, D. C.

Referring to bureau's indorsement No. 19277/34, of the 5th instant, on the communication of the joint army and navy board on smokeless powder:

1. I beg to state as follows:

Summary of expenditures for the production of powder for the past year at Indianhead.

$454, 790. 64 13, 829. 10
10, 991, 83 6, 952, 46
13, 812, 66
31, 180. 65

531, 557, 34

Dividing by 1,047,063, product for the year, the cost per 0.5077 pound is______ Deduct cost of alcohol expended per pound_____ Cost of powder without alcohol ...

In comparing this with the cost during the past fiscal year, which was 47.4 cents, we find that it has been cheapened 3.6 cents; this is accounted for to the extent of 2.4 cents per pound by the fact that the cost of cotton per pound of powder in 1905-6 was 7.21 cents and in 1906-7, 4.82 cents, the reduction being due to the use of the cheaper Tennessee fiber. The remaining 1.2 cents is accounted for in the fact that the fixed charges, amounting to some $77,000 plus a considerable share of the labor, are not increased with the increased output.

These exhibits fully explain the matter. In his hearings before the committee at the present session, Admiral Mason in substance reaffirmed the foregoing statements.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, there is no further demand for time on this side, and I suggest that we proceed with the reading of the bill by paragraphs.

Mr. PADGETT. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GAINES] asks for five minutes-

Mr. FOSS. Wait until the end of the first paragraph is reached.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the following sums be, and they are hereby, appropriated, to be paid out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the naval service of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1910, and for other purposes.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I simply want to make a few observations. We are not, judging from the statement that my colleague [Mr. Padgert] has just made, running the government powder factory to its fullest capacity, because we do not appropriate enough money to do so. I insist this bill should be amended in some way so that we can enlarge the output. It seems we are buying 2,400,000 pounds of powder from a private concern. That private concern is what is known as "the powder trust." Gentlemen, my colleague, and in fact most of the committee, state we have a board which fixes the price which we pay to a private concern. Now let us see. That concern controls practically all cern. Now, let us see. That concern controls practically all the powder concerns in the United States. There are a few so-called "independents." Now, what kind of a concern is this with which we are dealing, this so-called "powder trust." Here are the figures right before me, gentlemen, in a letter from Secretary Metcalf to me, which I printed in the Record of April 13, 1908, when this very question was up here in the House. I read from Secretary Metcalf's letter:

In 1897 we bought 300,000 pounds at a dollar a pound; in 1898 we bought 2,543,500 pounds at 80 cents a pound; in 1899 we bought 350,000 pounds at 80 cents a pound; 1900, 695,000 pounds at 80 cents per pound; 1901, 1,401,000 pounds at 74 cents per pound; 1902, 1,551,000 pounds at 74 cents per pound; 1903, 2,258,000 pounds at 74 cents per pound; 1904, 4,642,710 pounds at 74 cents per pound; 1905, 4,492,000 pounds at 74 cents per pound; 1906, 2,025,000 pounds at 69 cents to 74 cents per pound; 1907, 2,875,000 pounds at 69 cents per pound.

Now, then, on the next page Mr. Metcalf informs me that the cost of powder, without alcohol, per pound is 47.45 cents, and that the expenditure for alcohol per pound would make the total cost 57.63 cents per pound. That is what it cost a year ago. It seems the price has gone up this year for making a pound of powder. I have just read you these official figures, showing that when we were in the clutches of this concern, it was charging this Government a dollar per pound for powder. When the din of war was sounded they were charging us a dollar a pound, and during the Spanish war they charged us 80 cents a pound. In time of war, when we use millions and millions of pounds of powder, they charge us more than they charge us in peace. That is the kind of a patriot we are dealing with to-day—a conare making to-day for 47 cents. The only way, it seems, to extricate ourselves is to increase the appropriation and run a government powder factory at its full extent. Without intending the contribution of ing to criticise the committee—for I do not—I would like to ask why we do not do that? What is the matter? This concern that controlled us in time of war dictates to us to-day— and it so dictated in time of war—that, as I said a while ago, Secretary Long came in here and urged Congress to put up an experimental government powder factory, and we did so at a small cost. And what is the result? We were not only making it at 47 cents last year, but we brought this monster monopoly down from 80 cents to 67 cents per pound.

Now, would it not be wise, would it not be just to the Government, as it seems we are making more dogs of war, and must make them, and as we are making more powder, and must have it, as the demand for powder is greater now in time of peace than heretofore, that we should enlarge the appropriation so that, as the demand increases, we may furnish it ourselves, and at 47 cents, as against paying out 67 cents to this concern that made the Government pay a dollar a pound before the Spanish war and 80 cents during that war? That is all, and the only reason why I have taken up your time to say a word on the subject. The Government is making it at 47 cents, while this concern is making it at 67 cents. They formerly charged us 80 cents and just before the Spanish war $1. The little old powder factory, not much larger than a cabin down in the southland, has brought it down to 47 cents. And I want to say it has given us the best powder the world has ever seen, whereas, previous to this, the powder was defective, and Secretary Long so said in his report to us about the time of the starting of the Spanish war.

It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, and I repeat it in conclusion, that we should enlarge this appropriation, for the demands for powder are greater, and because it is cheaper and better, and because it hurts no one.

Some say that building a government concern interferes with private enterprise. It may do so sometimes, but, gentlemen, here is a plain case of where it did not hurt and does not, and it is not only the largest powder concern in the United States, but I dare say the largest in the world. It is so very large and so very powerful that he have not only had to appoint a board to bring down and fix the price of powder we take from it, but go into the federal court to enjoin it from its lawless performances

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. Mann, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that the committee had had under consideration bill H. R. 26394, the naval appropriation bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

PEPUBLIC OF LIBERIA.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States (S. Doc. No. 666), which was read, referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and ordered to be printed:

and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

The inclosed letter from the Secretary of State, with the accompanying documents, in reference to Liberia, explain themselves. I very earnestly hope that the recommendation of the Secretary of State will be approved and that Congress will grant the appropriation of $20,000 to pay the expenses of a commission, who shall go to Liberia to examine into the situation, confer with the officers of the Liberian Government and with the representatives of other governments actually present in Monrovia, and report recommendations as to the specific action on the part of the Government of the United States most apt to render effective relief to the Republic of Liberia under the present critical circumstances. The relations of the United States to Liberia are such as to make it an imperative duty for us to do all in our power to help the little Republic which is struggling against such adverse conditions. I very earnestly hope that the action proposed will be taken.

The West Monroll of States and Theodore Roosevelly.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, January 19, 1909.

RETURN OF BILL TO SENATE.

He also introduced a bill (S. 8658) for the relief of Edward Breassey, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. McENERY introduced a bill (S. 8659) for the benefit of the Citizens' Bank of Louisiana, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. DICK introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 117) relating to the celebration of the one-hundredth anniversary of the birth of Abraham Lincoln and making the 12th day of February, 1909, a legal holiday, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on the Library.

AMENDMENT TO OMNIBUS CLAIMS BILL.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill H. R. 15372, commonly known as the "omnibus claims bill," which was referred to the Committee on Claims and ordered to be printed.

COMPANIES B, C, AND D, TWENTY-FIFTH INFANTRY.

Mr. FORAKER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 5729) to correct the records and authorize the reenlistment of certain noncommissioned officers and enlisted men belonging to Companies B, C, and D of the Twenty-fifth U. S. Infantry, who were discharged without honor under Special Orders, No. 266, War Department, November 9, 1906, and the restoration to them of all rights of which they have been deprived on account thereof, which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

IMPROVEMENT OF MATTAPONI RIVER, VIRGINIA.

Mr. MARTIN submitted the following concurrent resolution (S. C. Res. 75), which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

*Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause an examination and survey to be made and submit estimates for the following improvements in the Mattaponi River, Virginia:

For a channel 200 feet wide and 14 feet deep from York River to the landing one-half mile above the bridge at Walkerton.

For a channel 100 feet wide and 7 feet deep from the above-mentioned landing to Ayletts.

For a channel 60 feet wide and 5 feet deep from Ayletts to Dunkirk.

For a channel 7 feet deep accept the Mattaponi River.

For a channel 7 feet deep across the Middle Ground, connecting the Mattaponi and Pamunkey channels, just off West Point.

For a suitable turning basin at Ayletts.

For the straightening and cutting off certain bends and points of land projecting into the river at several points between Walkerton and

For a thorough snagging and removal of logs from the river between Walkerton and Dunkirk, and the clearing of the river banks of all trees, stumps, etc., which make navigation dangerous at times of extra high tides or freshets in the river.

MILITARY ACADEMY AT WEST POINT.

Mr. DICK submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 256), which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be directed to furnish to the Senate of the United States copies of all reports, recommendations, and other correspondence of record in the War Department, or at the United States Military Academy at West Point, relative to the subject of hazing at the Military Academy since January 1, 1908; also copies of all reports, recommendations, and other correspondence of record in the War Department relative to cadets of the Military Academy reported as deficient in either conduct or studies, or both, as a result of the last general examination held at the Military Academy.

USE OF CARRIAGES BY OFFICIALS.

Mr. FLINT. I submit a resolution and ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The resolution (S. Res. 257) was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Appropriations be, and they are hereby, directed to ascertain and report to the Senate whether any officers of the Government, including the army and navy, are devoting to their personal or private use any carriages, automobiles, or other vehicles which are the property of or are provided by the Government.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from California asks for the present consideration of the resolution. Is there objection?

Mr. GALLINGER and Mr. HALE. It had better go over. The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is made, and the resolution will lie over.

HOUSE RILLS REFERRED.

H. R. 26203. An act making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1910, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

H. R. 26399. An act making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1909, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

FORT DOUGLAS MILITARY RESERVATION, UTAH.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the bill (S. 7396) for the exchange of certain lands situated in the Fort Douglas Military Reservation, State of Utah, for lands adjacent thereto, between the Mount Olivet Cemetery Association, of Salt Lake City, Utah, and the Government of the United States, returned from the House of Representatives in compliance with the request of the Senate.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I ask for action on the motion I entered the other day to reconsider the votes by which the bill was ordered to a third reading and passed.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I move that the bill be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

REPORT OF INTERNATIONAL TUBERCULOSIS CONGRESS ..

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States (S. Doc. No. 671), which was read and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith for the information of the Congress a communication from the secretary of the Smithsonian Institution, together with reports from the superintendent of construction of the new National Museum building, the disbursing agent of the Institution, and the secretary-general of the International Tuberculosis Congress, as to the details of the work done by the Smithsonian Institution in fitting up the building for the meetings of said congress and the results accomplished by the congress.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, January 20, 1909.

REPORT OF JAMESTOWN TERCENTENNIAL COMMISSION.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Com-mittee on Printing:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

In compliance with the provisions of the acts of Congress approved March 3, 1905, and June 30, 1906, respectively, I submit herewith the final report of the Jamestown Tercentennial Commission, embodying the reports of various officers of the Jamestown Exposition, held at Norfolk, Va., in 1907.

It is recommended by the commission that if the report is published as a public document the illustrations be included. If it should be so published, I would recommend that a sufficient sum be authorized from the unexpended balance remaining in the appropriation of $50,000 for expenses of the Jamestown Tercentennial Commission to cover the expenses of printing 2,000 copies—500 for the Senate, 1,000 for the House of Representatives, and 500 for distribution to public libraries throughout the country. out the country.

THE WHITE HOUSE, January 20, 1909.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

OMNIBUS CLAIMS BILL.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The morning business is closed. Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, I ask that Senate bill 5729 be laid before the Senate.

Mr. FULTON. I do not, of course, wish to interfere with the Senator from Tennessee. I only want to inquire whether his proceeding now will affect the unanimous-consent agreement for the consideration of the omnibus claims bill, if it is laid aside for other business than that mentioned in the agreement. If so, I simply ask the Senator to allow me to have that bill laid before the Senate, and then he can proceed with his remarks just the same.

Mr. FRAZIER. Very well.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Oregon asks that the omnibus claims bill be laid before the Senate. It will be stated by the Secretary.

The Secretary. A bill (H. R. 15372) for the allowance of certain claims reported by the Court of Claims under the provisions of the acts approved March 3, 1883, and March 3, 1887, and commonly known as the "Bowman" and "Tucker" acts.

COMPANIES B, C, AND D, TWENTY-FIFTH INFANTRY.

Mr. FRAZIER. I ask that Senate bill 5729 be laid before the

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 5729) to correct the records and authorize the reenlistment of certain noncommissioned officers and enlisted men belonging to Companies B, C, and D of the Twenty-fifth United States Infantry who were discharged without honor under Special Orders, No. 266, War Department, November 9, 1906, and the restoration to them of all rights of which they have been deprived on account thereof.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, when the resolution under which the investigation of the Brownsville affray has been carried on by the Military Committee was before the Senate in the Fifty-ninth Congress, I cast my vote against it. I did so for two reasons: First, because I believed that, under the law, the President had the right to discharge an enlisted soldier before the expiration of his term of enlistment when, in his opinion, it was necessary and proper to do so for the good of the service, and the President having exercised the discretion vested in him by law, I did not believe it was wise, even if within the scope of the powers of the Senate, to attempt to review or annul his action; and, second, because I believed that such investigation would tend to stir up, keep alive, and accentuate race feeling and prejudice, and that its effects would be hurtful both to the army and to the country at large.

I have had no occasion, Mr. President, to change the views I at that time entertained.

The fact is, Mr. President, if that had been a battalion of white soldiers instead of negroes, there would never, in my opinion, have been any legislative investigation, and the control and discipline of the soldiers of the army would have been left undisturbed in the Commander in Chief of the army, where it properly belongs.

But it seems, Mr. President, that whenever any question arises affecting the negro, there are certain people, including the negro himself, who seem to think that he should be dealt with in an exceptional and unusual way; that he is to be treated as the ward of the Nation, and must be the constant object of its care and solicitude. No greater wrong can be done the negro and no greater injury can be inflicted upon the country as a whole than to impress upon the negro such false and erroneous teachings. Mr. President, those who have been instrumental in placing practically the entire negro population of the country in the attitude of defending criminals of their race, because they were of their race, have assumed a grave responsibility, indeed. They have inflicted a lasting injury upon the country and upon the negro himself. If those people in every section of the country, who are especially solicitous for the negro's welfare would, by word and act, teach the negro that he is to be shown no exceptional consideration, but must stand or fall on his conduct and merit alone, they would render him incalculable benefit and the country a lasting service.

But it is not my purpose at this time, Mr. President, to discuss the action of the Senate in passing the resolution and ordering the investigation. The resolution was passed; the investigation has been made at the expense of much time, labor, and The committee has reported. Nine out of thirteen members of the committee find and report that the shooting up of the town of Brownsville was done by the soldiers of the Twenty-fifth Infantry then stationed at Fort Brown.

Mr. President, I would have been content to sit silent and leave this question where the report of the majority of the Committee on Military Affairs and the order of the President left it, but for the fact that two bills have been introduced and are now on the calendar of the Senate, both having for their purpose the restoration to the army of the men of the Twenty-fifth Infantry discharged under the President's order. It is true that both of said bills come before the Senate from the Military Committee with adverse reports, but both bills are here and their consideration is being pressed. It therefore becomes important, in fact, essential for the Senate in the consideration of these bills, to pass upon and determine the question as to whether the negro soldiers of the Twenty-fifth Infantry, stationed at Brownsville, were the perpetrators of the assaults and murder committed there on the night of August 13-14, 1906.

If some of the negro soldiers were guilty of the crimes enacted there on that night, and the most searching investigation has failed to reveal and identify the actual participants, then the whole battalion is contaminated, and surely no part of it should be taken back into the service. If, upon the other hand, all of the soldiers were wholly innocent of any participation in that riot, then the President, by his order of dismissal, did them a great wrong. I shall therefore address myself first to the question, Who shot up the town of Brownsville? It is a simple question of fact to be determined from the evidence. town was raided at the dead hour of midnight, by a band of armed desperadoes who shot into houses of citizens, endangered the lives of women and children, wounded the lieutenant of police, and killed one unoffending citizen, nobody denies. Who were the guilty perpetrators of those outrages? That is the first question to be determined.

Mr. President, perhaps no event of like character in the history of this country was ever so often investigated, and by so many different people and tribunals and with such elaboration, as this shooting affair at Brownsville. It has been dignified into a question of national importance. Not less than seven separate, distinct, and independent investigations have been made by individuals of high character and great responsibility, by courts, both civil and military, and by committees.

And while it is not conclusive, it may be persuasive for the Senate to know that the verdict in each and every one of these investigations, as to the negro soldiers, has been guilty. The affray was first investigated immediately after it occurred by Major Penrose, the commanding officer of the post, in connec-tion with a committee of the citizens of Brownsville. That committee was headed by Captain Kelly, an ex-federal soldier and a Republican, and its other members included citizens of the highest standing and respectability in the city of Browns-The events were fresh in the minds of the witnesses who testified before them, and the committee and Major Penrose were on the ground and were doubtless moved by an earnest desire to reach the truth. Both found and reported that the assault was made by soldiers of the Twenty-fifth Infantry

The citizens' committee embodied its findings in a telegram to the President, of date August 15-16, 1906, a portion of which I quote:

which I quote:

The undersigned, a committee of citizens appointed at and by a mass meeting of the people of Brownsville, held in the federal courthouse in this city on Tuesday, the 14th instant, to investigate the attack made on the city by negro troops stationed at Fort Brown, adjoining the city, after an almost continuous session of two days, find as follows: That a few minutes before midnight on Monday, the 13th, a body of United States soldiers of the Twenty-fifth Infantry (colored), numbering between 20 and 30 men, emerged from the garrison inclosure, carrying their rifles and an abundant supply of ammunition, and also began firing in town and directly into dwellings, offices, stores, and at police and citizens. During the firing one citizen, Frank Natus, was killed in his yard, and the lieutenant of police, who rode toward the firing, had his horse killed under him and was shot through the right arm, which has since been amputated at the elbow. After firing about 200 shots, soldiers retired to their quarriers. After the most diligent inquiry we find that no shots were fired from the town into or toward the garrison, nor any provocation given for the attack.

Major Penrose reported to the War Department, of date August 15, 1906, in which he said, among other things:

August 15, 1906, in which he said, among other things:

The mayor again called upon me about 10 a. m. (August 14) and informed me that a few empty cartridge cases and used clips for our Springfield rifle had been found in the streets, and later in the morning he told me there had been picked up between 75 and 100 empty cases and used clips, as well as a few cartridges that had not been fired. Some of these I examined, and there is no doubt they are those manufactured by our Ordnance Department and issued to the troops.

Were it not for the evidence of the empty shells and used clips I should be of the firm belief that none of my men was in any way connected with the crime, but with this fact so painfully before me, I am not only convinced it was perpetrated by men of this command, but that it was carefully planned beforehand.

Major Blocksom an inspector-general of the army was sent Major Blocksom, an inspector-general of the army, was sent Brownsville immediately after the affray, and after a thorough and exhaustive examination and investigation, reported to the same effect, that the shooting was done by the negro soldiers. The grand jury of Cameron County, Tex., in which Brownsville is located, after a careful investigation, reported that the negro soldiers made the raid and did the shooting, but they properly found no indictment, because the proof failed to identify the individuals guilty of the crime. No indictment will lie against a battalion of men.

Mr. Purdy, an Assistant Attorney-General of the United tates—a man of judicial temperament—a northern man and a Republican—after a searching investigation, reached the same conclusion of guilt on the part of the soldiers.

The Penrose court-martial, composed of eight officers of the highest character and standing, and certainly not prejudiced against the soldiers, after a hearing lasting four months, likewise found that the shooting was done by the enlisted men of the Twenty-fifth Infantry, stationed at Brownsville.

It may be said that in the trial of Major Penrose the question of the guilt of these men did not properly arise, and hence that finding was gratuitous. But an examination of the specifications filed against Major Penrose shows that it was one of the questions raised. In fact, the chief contention raged about it, for if it could have been established that the soldiers did not commit the outrages of the night of August 13-14, then no blame could attach to Major Penrose, and he must go free.

And finally, Mr. President, the Military Committee of this Senate, after an investigation lasting for more than a year, and of the most thorough and exhaustive character, has found and reported to the Senate, by a majority of 9 to 4, as follows:

First. That in the opinion of this committee the shooting in the affray at Brownsville on the night of August 13-14, 1906, was done by some of the colored soldiers belonging to the Twenty-fifth U. S. Infantry, then stationed at Fort Brown, Tex.

Fortunately for the truth of history, the committee charged with the investigation of this shooting affray were able to secure the testimony of at least 15 witnesses who saw and recognized the raiders as soldiers, and by whose testimony they can be traced from their gathering near to or within the walls of the reservation throughout the length of their murderous foray and until they started on their return to the reservation. I shall briefly and as concisely as possible quote the substance of the testimony of some of these witnesses who trace the raiding party from beginning to end. I shall not consume the time of the Senate in reading the testimony of the witnesses, but shall try to state it, so far as I undertake to do so, fairly and impartially.

and impartially.

Mr. George W. Rendall and wife lived over the telegraph office, situated on the corner of Elizabeth street and Garrison road, opposite the gate or entrance to the reservation. Mr. Rendall is a large property owner, was a member of the Perry expedition that opened Japan to the world and to modern civilization, and is a man of the highest standing and respectability in Brownsville. When the firing began, he looked out of his window toward the reservation and across the street, only 30 feet wide, and, by the lights over the gate, saw and recognized a bunch of soldiers on the inside of the wall going toward the mouth of Cowan alley. He saw these men jump the wall and go in the direction of that alley. His wife also saw the bunch of men on the inside of the wall going in the direction of the point where they scaled the wall.

José Martenez, a drug clerk, lived at the house at the corner of Cowan alley and Garrison road. He was sitting in his room reading. The door was open. He heard the first shots, as he thinks, inside the wall, and distinctly heard the voices of the men calling to each other to "hurry up," and "jump," and heard them as they jumped the wall and proceeded up Cowan alley. He recognized them as dressed in the uniform of United States soldiers.

These three witnesses, who are unimpeached and whose testimony is straightforward and clear, would seem to establish beyond question that the raiders proceeded from within the wall of the reservation.

The raiders proceeded up what is known as "Cowan alley," a narrow alley between Elizabeth and Washington streets, and running parallel with them. At the corner of Cowan alley and Fourteenth street they fired a large number of shots into the Cowan house, occupied by Mrs. Cowan and her children and a servant girl. The house was still lighted, it having been only a short time before filled with the laughter and joy of a children's party. The rear room of this house extends along the alley, and its window was only a few feet from the alley. There was a light in the room. As the firing approached, the servant girl, Amanda Martinez, went to close the window opening on the alley, and as she did so, by the light of the lamp in the room, she saw and recognized, only a few feet from her, the negro soldiers, with their guns, firing into the house. This witness had exceptionally favorable opportunity of seeing and recognizing the raiders, and her testimony is in no wise impeached or contradicted. This witness was a plain, working girl who entertained no prejudice against the negro soldiers. She could not have been a party to any conspiracy, if there was one, to charge the crimes of that night upon the soldiers. such a purpose was plotted and carried out by anybody, surely this poor working girl would not have been taken into the plot. She was where she could see. She swears she did see, and unless she deliberately perjured herself, without motive or reason, the men who fired into the Cowan house that night, shot out the lighted lamp that stood near to her, shot over the prostrate forms of the mother and children, who had thrown themselves prone upon the floor and lay there crouching while a shower of bullets passed only a few feet above their prostrate forms, were negroes, dressed in the uniform of American soldiers.

Just across Fourteenth street from the Cowan house is the rear of the Leahy Hotel. Herbert Elkins, a young man of some 18 or 19 years of age, was occupying a rear room on the second floor of the hotel. That room was only a few feet from the corner of Fourteenth street and the alley. He had just retired, but had not gone to sleep, and as the raiders came up the alley firing he looked out of the window and saw and recognized them as United States soldiers. He states that the leaders of the party proceeded up the alley, and that some of the party turned into Fourteenth street, apparently uncertain which way to go; and that the leaders up the alley called them to come that way; and as they turned to follow the leaders they were directly opposite his window and just beneath him, and only a short distance from him; and he distinctly recognized them as negroes dressed in the uniform of United States soldiers, armed with guns.

Mrs. Leahy, the proprietress of the hotel, who stood at a window in one of the nearby rooms on the second floor, also saw and recognized the men as negro soldiers.

The raiding party proceeded up Cowan alley to the corner of Thirteenth street, and there fired into the rear rooms of the Miller Hotel. One of these rooms on the second floor, with a window opening on the alley, was occupied by Mr. Hale Odin, his wife, and children. They stood at the window and saw the raiding party approach, and state that they recognized them as negro soldiers. One soldier fired directly at them, there being a light in their room, and the bullet entered the sill of the window and passed up through the room. Hale Odin was not even a citizen of Brownsville; he was a northern man; a graduate of Ann Arbor, and could have had no possible interest in unjustly fixing the blame upon the negro soldiers.

When the firing began the lieutenant of police, M. Ygnacio Dominguez was at the police station. He immediately mounted his horse, rode down Washington street to Fourteenth street, and there met another policeman, who told him that the negro soldiers were raiding the town and that they had gone up Cowan alley. He at once rode back to Washington street, along which he was joined by another policeman on foot, and together the three policemen proceeded down Thirteenth street toward Cowan alley, up which the raiders were proceeding. When they approached near to Cowan alley, the two policemen on foot, realizing the danger of encountering a band of desperadoes, numbering from 10 to 20, armed with high-power rifles, begged the lieutenant of police not to proceed down Thirteenth street to the alley, but the old officer, who had been on the police force of Brownsville for more than ten years and had made a most enviable record, both as a citizen and as an officer, seeing, as he stated, lights burning in the Miller Hotel, and realizing that the lives of its occupants were in danger, rode down the street and intercepted the advancing raiders at the junction of the alley and Thirteenth street. As he advanced into what seemed the very jaws of death, he cried out to the people "to put out their lights," and as he came to the junction of the alley and Thirteenth street, he was, as he says, within 20 to 25 feet of the raiding party, and he recognized them as negro soldiers, armed They fired upon him as he rode hastily across the alley and down Thirteenth street, with a rain of bullets flying about him. He was shot in the arm so severely that amputation was necessary. His horse was shot under him and fell dead a short distance beyond at the corner of Thirteenth and Elizabeth streets.

Those who are interested in the defense and exoneration of the negro soldiers may question the integrity and good faith of other witnesses; may question the opportunities to see and know who the murderous assailants were; but Dominguez, who, in the discharge of his duty, was brought within a few feet of these men, and who rode that night upon his white horse amidst a rain of bullets fired from high-power rifles, could not be mistaken as to the men who fired the deadly missiles at him as he cried out to the people to put out their lights and save their lives. If there was a conspiracy of citizens or saloon keepers or smugglers or anybody else to shoot and kill and then charge it upon the soldiers, surely Dominguez was no party to it, for he carries an empty sleeve, which is testimony convincing alike of his innocence of conspiracy and of the fact that he was there in the thick of the fray and knew whereof he spoke. He bore no ill will against the soldiers. He had no motive to unjustly lay the blame upon them. He had no friends to shield. He could have had no purpose to misrepresent or to swear falsely. He, above all others in Brownsville that night, save one, was the sufferer, and he would have been equally interested in detecting the guilty men, whether they had been citizens or smugglers or soldiers. With one accord every witness who was questioned upon the subject testified to the honesty, the sincerity, the high character for truthfulness, as well as the universal popularity, of Lieutenant Dominguez among the people with whom he lived and whom he had so long and faithfully served. Can it be possible that that honest man, without rhyme or reason or purpose, deliberately perjured himself? I do not believe it.

but had not gone to sleep, and as the raiders came up the alley firing he looked out of the window and saw and recognized them as United States soldiers. He states that the leaders of the party proceeded up the alley, and that some of the party fired upon by the soldiers, but retreated back up Thirteenth street beyond Washington. The hat of one of the policemen was pierced by a bullet fired by the raiders.

Mr. Chase, Mr. Bodin, Mr. Canada, and other guests of the Miller Hotel, not citizens of Brownsville, looking out of the windows of the hotel, saw and recognized the raiders as men dressed in the uniform of United States soldiers. The desperadoes proceeded up Cowan alley to what is known as the "Tillman Saloon," the proprietor of which had been loud in his protests against the negro soldiers being sent to Brownsville, and who had refused accommodations at the same bar to the negro soldiers with his white patrons. He had established a bar in the rear or side of his saloon, and allowed negro soldiers to be served apart from white people, if they would come in that way, but they had refused his proffered offer. In the rear of this saloon was a courtyard, in which patrons were served drinks. It was lighted by a number of When the firing began, the bartender closed the front door of the saloon opening upon Elizabeth street; and as the firing proceeded up Cowan alley toward the saloon he started through the courtyard to close the rear door opening upon the alley; but before he reached the door the band of assassins stepped within the door and fired upon him, one bullet passing through his body. He fell in the courtyard and died almost instantly. A more wanton, cold-blooded, and unprovoked murder has seldom been recorded in the criminal annals of this country.

Paulino Preciado and another Mexican were sitting in the courtyard in the rear of the saloon waiting to be served when the firing began. They went with the bartender to the front when he went there to close the door. Preciado was following Frank Natus, the bartender, to the rear to close the gate leading into the alley when Natus was shot and killed and was within plain view of the men who fired the fatal shot. He himself was shot through the hand and through the clothing. By the light of the lamps in the courtyard—it was practically as light as day—he could see and recognize them as negro soldiers. They stepped within the door when they fired upon Frank Natus, as this witness testifies.

This man, who is the editor of a paper published in Spanish in the city of Brownsville, if to be believed, establishes beyond the possibility of doubt the guilt of some of the soldiers of the Twenty-fifth Infantry. It is claimed that his testimony is, at least to some extent, discredited by the fact that he testified before the grand jury and others, and that in such testimony he did not state that the soldiers came within the door of the courtyard; but his explanation of that is that he testified through an interpreter and only answered the questions that were propounded to him, and that that particular question was not asked him. The explanation seems reasonable and plausi-That he was there in the saloon both before and after the death of Frank Natus, that he had the opportunity to see how he was killed, and that he was within the range of the bullets fired is not disputed, and it seems scarcely reasonable to suppose that this man would deliberately swear falsely as to the material fact of the identity of the murderers. He was a Mexican and had no prejudice against the negro soldiers. His character was not impeached. He appeared to be a man of education and respectability in the community in which he lives.

But, more than that, Preciado is corroborated by the fact that at the Miller Hotel, at the corner of Thirteenth street and Cowan alley, eight witnesses recognized the raiding party as soldiers and saw them cross Thirteenth street and go on up the alley toward the Tillman Saloon, only half a block away. If they were negro soldiers at the Miller Hotel, they were negro soldiers at the Tillman Saloon. They were the same band of men who had started from the barracks upon their mission of death. No others were seen or heard of that night.

Preciado was further corroborated by the testimony of Ambrose Littlefield, who, at the moment of the shooting into the Tillman Saloon, was standing in Cowan alley, less than a block away, and was looking at the raiding party. He saw the flash from the firing of only one gun, and yet he heard at the same time five or six guns fired into the saloon. If those firing had all been outside the door when the volley was fired, he would undoubtedly have seen the flashes from the other guns. Where were those who fired that volley? They must have been within the wide door of the courtyard, as Preciado says.

within the wide door of the courtyard, as Preciado says. From the Tillman Saloon the raiding party returned along the alley to Thirteenth street, and thence to Washington street, where they fired into the house of a Mr. Starck. Adjacent to the house of Mr. Starck is the residence of Mr. Tate, the customs officer who had had a difficulty with the soldier, Newton, whom he had knocked down with a revolver some days before. The two houses were cottages, and similar in size and shape. As the raiders left the Tillman Saloon, returning along Cowan alley and thence up Thirteenth street to the Starck house, they were followed at some distance by Mr. Littlefield, a former deputy sheriff and a man of intelligence.

He followed at a safe distance, and as he was passing along the Cowan alley, between the saloon and Thirteenth street, the firing occurred at the Starck house, to his left. He ran to the corner of Thirteenth street and looked around the corner up in the direction of Washington street, a distance of only 120 feet from him, and as he did so he saw the raiders running diagonally across Thirteenth street and Washington street, in the direction of the barracks. There was a street lamp at the corner of Thirteenth and Washington streets, and as the raiders ran by and under that lamp Mr. Littlefield recognized them as wearing the uniform of soldiers and carrying guns, and as one of the raiding party ran near to the light he looked back in the direction of Mr. Littlefield, and he recognized him as a negro.

There were other witnesses who corroborated in many respects the testimony of the witnesses to whom I have referred. There were 15 or more witnesses who testified positively and unequivocally that they saw and recognized the raiding party as dressed in the uniform of United States soldiers and armed with rifles, and many of them recognized them as negroes. We are asked to believe that these witnesses were all mistaken, and that they could not have seen what they swore they saw because of the darkness of the night. It was a clear, starlight night and not a dark night. Many of the witnesses were very near to the raiders, and many had the aid of artificial light. theorize as to how far a soldier or a negro could be seen and recognized as such on a different night and at another place and by different eyes is pure speculation and utterly worthless as evidence. No man could tell what a particular witness could see at those places and on that night unless the occurrences all the accompanying conditions could be reproduced. And even then, what one eye could see might not be visible to a different eye. These 15 witnesses, in no wise personally interested in the subject of this investigation, entertaining no prejudice against the soldiers, swore that they could see, and that they did see and recognize them. Their testimony can not be brushed aside on the mere speculation that it was in the darkness of the night, and that they could not, therefore, recognize what they unequivocally swear they did recognize. Either those 15 witnesses, some of them not even residents of Brownsville, saw and identified the raiders as soldiers, or we must conclude that all of them theretofore known as truthful and respectable people, deliberately transformed themselves for the purposes of this investigation into a band of perjurers. Four witnesses—Hale Odin, Mr. Littlefield, Mrs. Leahy, and Herbert Elkins—saw soldiers immediately after the shooting ceased running back toward Fort Brown, carrying their guns. Thus the raiders are traced from their starting point, at the garrison wall, throughout their murderous foray, and are finally seen hurrying back toward the fort only two blocks away. The positive testimony of these 15 disinterested witnesses

The positive testimony of these 15 disinterested witnesses would, in any ordinary case, even where men were being tried for their lives or liberty, be sufficient to satisfy any unbiased jury of the guilt of some of the negro soldiers, and to overcome the plea of not guilty, which is practically what is offered in contradiction of it. In fact, Mr. President, if a particular individual charged with this crime was identified with the certainty and precision that these 15 witnesses identified these raiders as soldiers, I can not see how he would escape conviction before any unbiased court.

But there are other facts and circumstances corroborative of the testimony of these witnesses which, it seems to me, when taken in connection therewith, is absolutely conclusive that the soldiers of the Twenty-fifth Infantry were the men who were guilty of the outrages and who committed the murder on that night. That the shooting was done with high-power rifles is conceded by all parties. Early in the morning following the raid, in fact in one instance before daylight, a large number of shells, clips, and some unexploded cartridges were picked up in the streets of Brownsville at the places where the firing occurred. These same shells and unfired cartridges and clips were identified beyond controversy as being government ammunition such as the Twenty-fifth Infantry were armed with. Clips of the kind picked up are only manufactured for and used with the Springfield rifle, model 1903. The shells and unexploded cartridges had on them the stamp of the manufacturer for the Government, so that there is no question that these shells and cartridges and clips were those used only by the Government, and with which the Twenty-fifth Infantry were supplied

A number of witnesses, including Major Penrose himself, testified that the shells picked up were not corroded and appeared to have been recently fired. Bullets were extracted from the Yturria House, the Cowan House, the Miller Hotel, and other houses into which they had been fired. These bullets were of substantially the size, weight, and by analysis were shown to be of the material of the bullets with which the Twenty-fifth Infantry were supplied. The proof is unquestioned that, if these bullets were fired from the empty shells picked up on the streets of Brownsville, they could not have been fired out of any other gun known, either military or sporting gun, except the Springfield rifle, model 1903. Those bullets had on them the marks of the four lands of the Springfield rifle. Other highpower rifles, except the Krag, have more than four lands.

But it is said that the Springfield cartridge might have been fired out of the Winchester or the Mauser rifle; but the bullets taken from the houses were not fired from either the Winchester or the Mauser rifle. Why do I say so? Because those guns have six lands, and the bullets found had on them the marks of only four lands. But it is said that these bullets may have been fired from the Krag gun, which has four lands. That is true, so far as the bullets are concerned; but if the bullets found in the houses were fired out of the shells found on the ground where the shooting occurred, then they could not have been fired out of the Krag gun, because the Springfield cartridge is too long and too large to be fired from the Krag. The proof is clear that the Springfield cartridge can not be fired from the Krag rifle, so that if the bullets found in the houses were fired from the Krag gun, they must have been fired from shells other than those picked up where the firing took place. If the bullets were fired from other shells than those found on the ground, what became of the empty shells from which they were fired? Could the raiders, in the darkness of the night and in the hurry of the raid, have picked up and removed every empty shell of the 200 or more fired, as they were thrown from their guns and scattered on the ground, so that not one was left? Of course that was impossible and could not have been done. It seems to me to follow, therefore, that the bullets taken from the houses must have been fired from the shells found upon the streets where the firing occurred; and if this be true, they could only have been fired from the Springfield rifle.

If the shells picked up in the streets after the shooting were government shells, if the bullets extracted from the houses were government bullets, and if it be true that the bullets and shells combined, forming the cartridges, could not have been fired from any other gun than the Springfield rifle, it leads logically and irresistibly to the conclusion that the soldiers, who alone had such guns and such ammunition, must have done the shooting.

There is no possible escape from that conclusion.

Now, what are the facts? It is conceded by all that the shells picked up in the streets were government shells. It is proven that the bullets taken from the houses, in combination with the shells picked up, could only have been fired from the Springfield rifle, which rifles nobody in that country had except the soldiers. Then, were the bullets extracted from the houses government bullets? If so, the chain is complete and the conclusion can not be avoided.

Mr. President, a circumstance occurred in the investigation of this case by the committee which, in my judgment, was fortunate in the interest of truth, and which settled beyond the possibility of doubt the fact that the bullets taken from the houses were government bullets. When the bullets which were taken from the houses were presented in evidence before the committee, the Senator from Ohio, who has been diligent and untiring and able in his defense of these soldiers, requested that they be analyzed. Doubtless, in preparation for what might be revealed by that analysis, the distinguished Senator obtained and had placed in evidence the specifications according to which the bullets were to be made, prepared by the War Department and furnished to the manufacturer, the Union Metallic Cartridge Company, which manufactures a large part of the ammunition for the army. The shells and cartridges picked up upon the streets of Brownsville bore the stamp of that company. The specifications furnished by the War Department did not that the bullets manufactured by the Union Metallic Cartridge Company for the Government were to contain anti-The specifications called only for lead and tin. When the report of the analysis was furnished to the committee it appeared that a number of these bullets were composed of three ingredients-lead, tin, and antimony-and doubtless it was then believed by some that there had been discovered a circumstance which demonstrated that the bullets extracted from the houses in Brownsville, fired there on the night of the 13th of August by the raiders; were not government bullets at all, and, therefore, that the soldiers could not have been the guilty parties.

and when the bullets were being manufactured by the Union Metallic Cartridge Company, in 1905, it was discovered that the bullet manufactured by the formula furnished by the department was not sufficiently hard at the point to stand the test prescribed, and that therefore the manufacturer, with the consent and approval of the government inspector, had put into these bullets antimony, to a certain extent, for the purpose of hardening the point of the bullet and increasing its resisting power. It appears from these records that 2,200,000 of the bullets manufactured by the Union Metallic Cartridge Company, under the contract of 1905, were made of the three ingredients lead, tin, and antimony-and that a portion of those cartridges were sent to and were in the possession and use of the Twentyfifth Infantry.

It is further proven by the testimony of the officers of this company that no other bullet manufactured, either for army purposes or sporting purposes, was ever manufactured by them, either before or after that time, which contained the three constituent elements of lead, tin, and antimony. Thus the bullets taken from the houses were not only shown, by reason of their peculiar and unusual composition, to have been government bullets, but the records further show that these peculiar and unusual bullets were the very bullets with which the Twenty-fifth Infantry were supplied. This search for antimony in the bullets which the Senator from Ohio had instituted, doubtless with the expectation of proving that the bullets taken from the houses were not government bullets, and that they must therefore have been fired by others than the soldiers, turned out, to my mind, an absolute and conclusive demonstration of the guilt of the soldiers. And thus the Senator from Ohio was "hoist with his own petard."

Of all the people in Texas or elsewhere who used bullets for sporting purposes, and of all the soldiers in this country who were armed with cartridges, the Twenty-fifth Infantry were the only ones near to or in the vicinity of Brownsville, were armed with this peculiar bullet, distinct and different in its constituent elements from all others, and these peculiar bullets were those fired into the houses in Brownsville on the night of the raid, and they had on them the marks of the four lands made by being fired from the Springfield rifle, with which these soldiers were armed.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President-The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. FRAZIER. I do.

Mr. FORAKER. I hope it will not interrupt the Senator from Tennessee for me to suggest that the testimony shows that this precise bullet was also furnished to the Twenty-sixth Infantry, which preceded the Twenty-fifth Infantry at Brownsville, and that such bullets were to be found in the saloons there as well as in other places in Brownsville, which had been obtained from the Twenty-sixth Infantry—precisely this same kind of bullet. So that, instead of being hoist with my own petard, while I was disappointed-I will admit that-in the effect of the testimony, yet the testimony is clear that, so far as the bullets belonging to the Twenty-fifth Infantry are concerned, they might just as well have come from the Twenty-sixth Infantry.

Mr. FRAZIER. It is true, Mr. President, the Twenty-sixth Infantry, or a portion of them, were furnished with the same bullets, and it is true that there was some testimony that some saloon keepers had some of those bullets on their bars.

Mr. PILES. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. FRAZIER. I do.

Mr. PILES. I should like to ask the Senator from Tennessee if all the bullets which were found were analyzed; and if so, were they all found to contain antimony?

Mr. FRAZIER. I am not sure that they were all analyzed. In fact, my recollection is that they were not all analyzed; but I am not distinct on that question. Perhaps the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] can enlighten us.

Mr. FORAKER. They were not all analyzed. Only a few were analyzed that were collected for that purpose.

Mr. PILES. I should like to ask the Senator from Ohio, Was any bullet that was analyzed found to contain anything different from what the Senator from Tennessee has stated?

Mr. FORAKER. My recollection is that all the bullets that were analyzed contained antimony, but there was one bullet analyzed which did not contain the percentage of antimony that was found in the regular army bullets.

Mr. PILES. But all contained some antimony? A closer investigation, however, of the records of the department revealed the fact that long before the affray occurred, no metal casing such as the regular army bullets bad.

Mr. WARNER. Mr. President—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. FRAZIER. I do.

Mr. WARNER. I think that we all agree that the bullets which were analyzed were selected generally; that no special bullets were sent up for analysis; so that they might be taken fairly as representative of all.

Mr. FRAZIER. That is undoubtedly true.
Mr. FORAKER. It was thought at the time that they would be a fair representation.

Mr. WARNER. I think so. Mr. FRAZIER. That was done with the idea that it was not necessary to analyze every bullet.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. FRAZIER. I do. Mr. CULBERSON. At the suggestion of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. Money], I ask the Senator from Tennessee this question: Although bullets might have been left by the soldiers of the Twenty-sixth Infantry, was there any proof that any of that infantry left their guns out of which such bullets could have been shot?

Mr. FRAZIER. None whatever; and I was just coming to that in the argument which I expect to make a little later. would make no difference, Mr. President, if somebody else did have these shells or bullets. If they had the Springfield shells or bullets, they could only have fired them out of the Springfield gun; but there is no proof that anybody else had a Springfield gun at Brownsville at that time, except the soldiers of the Twenty-fifth Infantry. Now, with the permission of Senators, I shall proceed.

Thus we find, Mr. President, these bullets, peculiar and dis-tinctive from all others, and only in the possession of these soldiers, as the bullets which were fired into the houses of Thus we find on them the marks of the four lands Brownsville. made by the Springfield rifle, with which these soldiers were armed. Thus we find the empty government shells picked up in the streets, and bearing marks of having been recently fired. Thus we find the undisputed proof, that if these bullets were fired from these shells, they could not have been fired from any other gun then known or in use, except the Springfield rifle, model 1903, with which these soldiers were armed.

It may be said that others may have, in some way, procured from the soldiers these Springfield cartridges, with their anti-mony bullets, and fired them into the houses. If so, they must also have procured Springfield rifles, for they could not have been fired out of any other gun than the Springfield rifle, and there is no pretense that anybody else at Brownsville had that gun except the soldiers.

With this chain of evidence complete and unbroken and incontrovertible, all of which could not possibly exist and the soldiers still be innocent, can there remain room for doubt as to their

While it may be charged that witnesses were prejudiced, or that they exaggerated their capacity to see and identify the guilty raiders, these facts and circumstances, about which there is and can be no controversy, it seems to me, must establish beyond reasonable doubt or uncertainty the fact that the soldiers committed the outrages and murder on the night of August 13-14, 1906.

But that is not all, Mr. President. Not only did 15 or 20 reputable witnesses swear they saw and recognized the raiders as soldiers; not only was it proven beyond the possibility of doubt that the shells picked up in the streets were government shells, and that the bullets shot into the houses were government bullets, and that this shell and this bullet forming the cartridge could not have been fired from any other gun than the Springfield rifle, which only the soldiers had, but 5 witnesses testified that shots were fired from within the walls of the reservation. Three of these witnesses swore that shots were fired from the upper gallery or porch of B Company quar-These witnesses were corroborated by another circumstance, convincing in its nature, and that is, an examination of the course and alignment of the bullets which were fired into the Yturria house, at the corner of Cowan alley and Garrison road. That house is surrounded at that point by a solid board fence some 6 feet in height. The bullets which entered the house—the fence was not struck—ranged down, the place of exit being nearer to the ground than the place of entry. A number of witnesses made careful examination of the range of these bullets and from the alignment were able to locate with approximate accuracy the point from which the bullets were fired, and all of them agree that they must have been fired from an elevation above the ground. This must have been so, or the fence would have been struck, and the range of the bullets would not have been downward. They say that they could not have been fired from any other place than from the upper porch of B Company quarters. If these witnesses and these circumstances establish the fact that shots were fired from the upper gallery of the barracks, inside the reservation, then it would seem to follow irresistibly that the soldiers, who alone occupied the quarters, must have done the firing.

But it is said that it is unreasonable to suppose that men who were starting out to raid and shoot up a town would first fire within the reservation, and thus arouse the garrison. Upon the other hand, Mr. President, that was the most natural and reasonable thing for them to have done to enable them to do their bloody work and yet conceal their identity. Even if there was no understanding with the guard, and I am inclined to think there was some understanding of that kind-though I confess the proof is not distinct upon that-that they should give the alarm and sound the call to arms. Being soldiers of experience, they knew that as soon as such a terrific firing began inside of or near to the garrison, the natural and inevitable result would be the call to arms and the consequent turmoil and confusion which would follow. They knew that in the midst of the darkness and confusion, when men who were not actually engaged in the raid were coming out of their quarters with their guns, they could easily join them with their guns, and thus escape detection. And that, in my opinion, is exactly what occurred.

It must not be overlooked that at once, as soon as the call to arms was sounded, soldiers began to circulate the report that the garrison was being attacked, and so successful were they in repeating this unfounded story that they actually convinced their white officers of its truth, though no shot was fired at the barracks, no shot struck them, and the firing was constantly going from the garrison and not toward it. It diverted suspicion from the soldiers and undoubtedly contributed to their escape without detection.

If those who sounded the call to arms had been in league with the raiders they could not have hit upon a plan better calculated to enable the midnight marauders to join their companies and conceal their identity. The barracks were in darkness. No lights were burning. Everything was in confusion. The formations were being made on the campus with the barracks between them and the town. There were entrances to the barracks from the town side, and nothing to hinder the returning marauders from entering that way, passing through the buildings, and joining their companies, and no one could tell whether they procured the guns which they carried from the gun racks in the quarters or brought them fresh from the scenes of their murderous assaults.

Now, Mr. President, what defense is offered to this mass of positive and circumstantial evidence, so incriminating in its First, it is said the enlisted soldiers swore they were not guilty, and though it has been more than two years they have not yet confessed it. Would any one, of common observation of men, expect that they would have sworn that they were guilty, even if they were? Do men usually admit that were guilty, even if they were? Do men ust which would place a halter about their necks?

Why, Mr. President, it is hardly to be supposed that those who actually participated would certainly have confessed their Right here I want to say that I give no credence whatever to the alleged confession of one of these soldiers, as reported by the detective and sent to the Senate in the recent message of the President of the United States. I base the conclusions which I have reached in this case upon the testimony taken before the Committee on Military Affairs and upon the testimony taken otherwise.

I have had some experience with detectives in the practice of the criminal law. I would not charge that detectives as a class are unworthy of belief, but, Mr. President, with my experience, if I were sitting upon a jury sworn to do justice according to the law and testimony, I would be very slow to base a verdict of guilty upon the unsupported testimony of any detective that I ever heard testify in a court of law, and I never heard of a negro detective who signed his name with his mark upon whose testimony I would base a verdict of guilty.

I do not know anything as to the matter of the conduct of these detectives about which we are told in the President's message; neither do I propose to stop to discuss the question of the lawful use of the money in the Treasury in the payment of those detectives. I stop at this point merely to make plain that I do not base my conclusions in the slightest degree upon the alleged confessions made to one of these detectives by Boyd Convers.

It will be borne in mind, Mr. President, that the controversy is, not what particular soldier was engaged in the riot, but was any soldier so engaged. So that the testimony of the soldiers should have little more weight than would the testimony of a number of defendants jointly charged with the commission of crime.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from Michigan? Mr. FRAZIER. I do.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I should like to ask the Senator from Tennessee right there, if he wants to be understood as saying that, if any soldier of that battalion was engaged in the shooting, all the soldiers of the battalion are guilty?

Mr. FRAZIER. Oh, no, Mr. President; I did not say any such thing. I said in the early part of my remarks—and I repeat it, for I believe the Senator from Michigan was perhaps not in the Chamber at that time-that if some of these soldiers were engaged in this affray, if they committed these outrages and this murder, and, after the most careful and searching and diligent investigation, it was impossible to separate the guilty from the innocent, then, to a certain extent, the entire battalion became contaminated, and I do not believe that it was for the interests of the army or of the country to have them taken back

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President, if I am not disturbing the Senator from Tennessee

Mr. FRAZIER. The Senator will not disturb me by asking

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I should like to pursue the inquiry a little further. Now, suppose a midnight assassin was to enter the home of a defenseless person, take his life, and then escape to the great body of the people, where the identity of the particular assailant could not be ascertained, does the Senator from Tennessee believe that the whole body of the people would be guilty because, forsooth, they could not fix the guilty one with definiteness?

Mr. FRAZIER. O, Mr. President, the Senator knows that I do not believe any such thing as that.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Well, then, I want to ask one more question. How many men of this battalion were in the hospital sick and unable to participate in such a crime the night it is said to have been committed?

Mr. LODGE. I think there were two.
Mr. FRAZIER. I am not advised, Mr. President, or rather I do not recall at this moment, how many of them were in the

Mr. Lodge says that there were two in the hospital.

Mr. Lodge says that there were two in the hospital.

Mr. Lodge. That is as I remember, but I am not sure.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. If there were two in the hospital, are they guilty; and if they were in the hospital, should they be convicted by a proclamation? Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. Presider Mr. President, I do not recall, as I say, whether or not there were any soldiers in the hospital, and that is not very material to the point I am making.

Again, it is said that the soldiers could not have committed the crimes charged, because about the time the firing ceased the companies were formed, the rolls called, and all of the soldiers were reported present or accounted for. But it must be borne in mind that the men who called the rolls, and the men who answered not by name, but merely present, were the soldiers charged with the commission of the crimes. full credence be given to the testimony of those soldiers, who claimed to have called the rolls, and found all present or accounted for, it in no wise militates against the conclusion that certain soldiers were in the riot and did the shooting, for abundant time elapsed after the shooting ceased, and before the rolls of the company were finally completed and verified, for any soldier who participated in the riot to have returned and answered to his name. It will be remembered that the greatest distance from the reservation at which any of the firing took place did not exceed 350 yards. That those participating in the crime could have run back, gone into the reservation and into the quarters and joined their companies being formed in front of the barracks and answered to their names, is conclusively proven by the testimony of at least two of the soldiers

There were entrances to the quarters from the side next to the garrison road, and there were stairways on that side which returning soldiers could have mounted and then come down from their quarters and out to the front and joined their companies; or, in the darkness and confusion of the formation, they could have passed directly through the buildings from the side nearest to the garrison road and the town and gone out where the companies were being formed and no one could have detected those who thus came in from those already in the quarters. Quartermaster-Sergeant Taliaferro was sleeping, as he swore, in the administration building, located near to D Company barracks, and when the firing began he dressed and went back of the officers' quarters and around them and finally to the door of Major Penrose's residence and knocked or rang the bell and, receiving no response, passed on, maneuvering, as he stated, along a depression in the ground, until he came to the hospital, and finally to the guardhouse, and thence to Major Penrose in front of the quarters, where the men were being He thus traversed a distance of over 800 yards, and formed. yet when he reached the companies, the rolls were being called and the companies were being formed. The men who did the firing had to traverse a distance of only 350 yards. They were dressed. He had to dress to go out of his house.

Corporal Miller testified that he was out on pass that night, He had been across the river to Matamoras, in Mexico, and returned during the early part of the evening and visited at a kinsman's house in the town, and from there went to a gambling house near the corner of Twelfth and Adams streets, and was engaged in gaming at the time the firing occurred. He remained there until the firing ceased and then started for the barracks. In going from the gaming house to the barracks he had to travel at least two blocks, and possibly three blocks, farther than the men who had done the firing had to travel to reach the barracks, and yet he reached the reservation, entered it, joined his company as it was being formed and the roll was being called. And no one knew when he came in or how he got there. This demonstrates clearly that the raiders had ample time, after they had done their bloody work, to hasten back to the reserva-tion, and in the darkness and confusion of the night incident to the call to arms to join their companies and answer to their names

Another witness whose testimony it was not attempted to either impeach or to contradict, and whose standing as a citizen and a man was above reproach, an ex-federal soldier, a man who had been more than twenty years in the employment of the telegraph company and who had served the greater part of the four years of the civil war in the telegraph service of the federal army-Mr. Sanborne-was sleeping in the room adjoining the telegraph office at the rear of the building, at the corner of Elizabeth street and Garrison road. About the time the firing ceased, and while looking out of the window which opened on the Garrison road, he saw a man whom he recognized under the lights over the gate of the entrance to the reservation, only 30 feet from him, as a negro soldier, come along Garrison road from the direction of Cowan alley, carrying his gun, and saw him enter the gate and go into the garrison. This soldier, undoubtedly, was returning from the firing squad, and joined his company and doubtless answered the roll call when it was taken, and reported "present," and yet he came in from the town with his gun after the shooting ceased.

It is further claimed by those who deny the guilt of the soldiers, that they could not have procured their guns from the gun racks. These gun racks were located in the quarters of the men, and the keys to them were in the possession of the colored officers in charge of the quarters. It will thus be seen that the very soldiers who are charged with the commission of this crime had the keys to these racks. How the keys were secured from those charged with their possession, or whether other keys were used, does not, of course, appear from the evidence, but that the gun racks were opened and that the rifles were in the hands of the soldiers is proven by the overwhelming weight of testimony adduced before the committee. Certainly, the soldier Sanborne saw enter the gate with his gun, after the shooting ceased, had his gun out of the gun racks.

It is claimed that an inspection of the guns next morning did not disclose that any of them had been recently fired. But it will not be forgotten that when the guns were replaced in the gun racks after the firing, the keys to those gun racks were still left in the hands and custody of the enlisted men charged with the commission of the crime, and the same keys that unlocked the gun racks when the guns were taken out to make the raid doubtless unlocked the gun racks to take them out for the purpose of wiping them out after the white officers had left the quarters. That this was possible and probable is shown by the report of Major Penrose, in which he says:

Some one of them must have had a key to the gun racks, and after check roll call was taken—for all were reported present at 11 p. m. roll call—they slipped out of quarters, did the shooting, returned while the companies were forming, and at some time during the early hours of the morning cleaned their rifles. This is made possible from the fact that the shooting all occurred within two short blocks of the barracks.

There is much contradiction in the proof as to the time required to clean a gun after it has been fired, but from experiments actually made by competent and reliable officers, and other testimony of witnesses of unquestioned integrity not involved in this unfortunate affair, it has been established, as I believe, by the weight of testimony that where a gun is cleaned within a few hours after having been fired it can be wiped out and cleaned, either in the light or in the dark, so as to pass inspection within the space of two or three minutes.

It is further claimed that the soldiers could not have committed this crime, because all the ammunition with which they were charged was accounted for. But the testimony of practically all of the witnesses, except the negro soldiers of the Twenty-fifth Infantry, was to the effect that soldiers almost universally had a surplus of ammunition in their lockers, or elsewhere concealed, and that it was easy for them to procure this surplus ammunition. Even the white officers of the Twenty-fifth Infantry so testified. In fact, it was the universal and unvarying testimony of all the soldiers who testified, except the negro soldiers themselves. They, with suspicious uniformity, swore that it was impossible for them to get extra ammunition, while everybody else swore that it was easy and practically universal. They could get it on the target range, where it was carried out in boxes and given to them for practice and no account or record kept of what they used.

The Senator from Ohio lays much stress on the fact that the ammunition with which each company of the Twenty-fifth Infantry was charged was accounted for, and yet he says that the Twenty-sixth, who preceded the Twenty-fifth at Brownsville, had so much surplus ammunition that clips of it, given away by the soldiers, adorned the bars of the saloons in Brownsville, and was even left lying around the quarters when they went away, to be picked up by visitors.

On the one hand we are asked to believe that citizens procured and had enough of this surplus ammunition which they could only have procured from the soldiers to shoot up their own town, and on the other we are asked to believe that the soldiers themselves could not possibly have procured any surplus ammunition, and hence could not have had any with which to do the shooting. However they may have procured this ammunition, it can not be questioned that both empty shells and unexploded cartridges of the government manufac-ture were found in the streets of Brownsville immediately after the shooting occurred nor that government bullets were taken from the houses shot into that night, so that somebody must have had a surplus of ammunition, and there is no evidence to show that anybody else had it other than the soldiers of the Twenty-fifth Infantry.

Mr. President, was there a motive for the soldiers to have committed this outrage? It is said that there was no adequate motive to have moved the soldiers to commit those crimes. No motive is adequate, Mr. President, for the commission of murder, and yet murders are committed. What may be a compelling motive for one man may not be so for another. are committed almost daily throughout this broad land, to the shame of the American people, for causes which, to a man of high moral instincts, would seem to furnish utterly insufficient motive. Murders have been committed for a few paltry dollars, for some fancied wrong, and sometimes in wanton, devilish

That the occurrences preceding and following their arrival at Brownsville were such as to arouse in the negro soldiers a feeling of resentment, if not of retaliation, toward some of the people of Brownsville I do not think can be questioned. It can not be doubted, from the testimony taken before the committee, that the soldiers knew that some of the citizens of Brownsville objected to and had protested against their being stationed at Fort Brown. Neither is it reasonable to suppose that the colored soldiers, who were denied the privileges of the bars patronized by white people, which they had been accustomed to enjoy elsewhere, did not resent what they regarded as a discrimination on account of their race.

No one, Mr. President, not familiar with the real character of the negro race knows or can fully appreciate the intensity of feeling with which he resents any apparent discrimination against him on account of his race and color. This is strikingly illustrated in the intense opposition of the negro to those laws in effect in some States, providing for the separation of the races in railway coaches, even where the accommodations are equal and exactly alike. It was admitted by many of the soldiers in their testimony that this subject, together with the subject of other indignities which they claimed had been inflicted upon some of them, were frequent matters of discussion in the barracks of the soldiers.

Allison, a discharged soldier of the Twenty-fifth Infantry, opened a bar on the garrison road near to the reservation on pay day, which was Saturday before the outbreak on Monday night following. This bar was so popular with the men and was so freely patronized by the soldiers that, as one witness stated, it took four or five bartenders to wait upon the patrons. There, in that den of vice, was in all probability hatched the diabolical plot which culminated in riot and murder.

There had been several difficulties, or what the soldiers regarded as indignities, inflicted upon them since their arrival at Brownsville by customs officers. The soldier Newton had been knocked down on the street by Mr. Tate, a customs officer, The soldier Newton had because he claimed the soldier had been rude and offensive to his wife and other ladies. Another soldier, Reed, had been knocked or pushed off the gangway into the mud at the ferry which plied between Brownsville and Matamoras. Another customs officer had struck a negro soldier in a barroom, as related by Lieutenant Thompson, because he sought to drink at the same bar with the officer and remarked that he was as good as any white man. These and other instances enumerated in the testimony taken would naturally arouse the prejudice and enmity of the soldiers against certain people of Browns-

It was evident from the testimony that the incidents to which I have referred, and others, to which for want of time I have not alluded, taken in connection with the order issued by Major Penrose, on the evening of the 13th, recalling all passes and prohibiting the soldiers from leaving the reservation, had undoubtedly wrought the soldiers up to a high state of resentment, and doubtless kindled in their minds a spirit of retaliation and revenge. While it is true that in the consideration of a case such as this the presence or absence of a motive for the commission of a crime is a circumstance to be looked to, even the entire absence of a motive is not sufficient to overcome or annul facts otherwise proven and established. If the soldiers had a motive, and I believe that the testimony in this case clearly establishes that fact, then it is a circumstance to be looked to to prove their participation in the riot. If there was an absence of sufficient motive on the part of the soldiers to shoot up the town, how much more was there an absence of motive on the part of the people of Brownsville to shoot up their own town and kill their own neighbors. It may be that there was feeling on the part of some of the people against the soldiers, as there was on the part of the soldiers against some of the people; but there was no feeling on the part of the people against themselves, nor of one part of the people against any other part.

And the soldiers were not attacked. No shot was fired at tem. No bullet entered the barracks. No soldier was injured, The attack was on the people of the town, and it was a deadly, malevolent attack. The shots were not fired in the air to frighten, but into the houses and at the people, to kill. Not at one house or at some individual to satisfy a personal revenge, but at many houses and at many people, showing that those who fired them were moved by a deadly, murderous purpose, to seek revenge upon and terrorize a whole people.

The Tillman Saloon and the Tate house were clearly the objective points of the raiders, for when they had finished their deadly work there they turned and fled back to the post. Tillman had refused to serve the negro soldiers with white people at his bar, and had been loudest in his opposition to the sol-diers being sent to Brownsville. Tate had doubtless incurred their enmity by what they regarded as an unjustifiable assault on one of their comrades. In their murderous foray they seemed to have especially directed their fire at the house of Louis Cowan, who had been loud and noisy in his objections to and denunciation of the negro soldiers, especially on account of the Evans affair, in which it was charged that Mrs. Evans had been dragged from her horse by a negro soldier. After the Cowan house, the Miller Hotel seemed to be the especial object of their attack. Its proprietor, Mr. Moore, had likewise done much talking in opposition to the negro soldiers being stationed at Brownsville. In short, the places singled out for especial attack were the very places against which the soldiers had some ground for enmity and ill will.

Finally, Mr. President, if the soldiers did not commit these offenses, who did? No proof whatever was offered before the committee which points to the guilt or even tends to implicate any others than the soldiers. Various theories have been suggested, based on the merest speculation, but one after another has been abandoned, because not an iota of proof has been ob-tainable to show that any other people had either a motive or the opportunity to have committed these crimes.

It was first suggested that possibly Mexican soldiers might So much did the soldiers feel what they regarded as a discrimination against them by the saloons of the town that one for having committed such a crime could be found. But when it appeared from the proof that the bullets extracted from the houses which had been shot into on the night of the 13th and 14th of August could not have been fired from the Mexican mauser, with which the Mexican soldiers were armed, because the bullets were larger than the bore of that gun, that theory was abandoned.

It was then suggested that the Texas Rangers might have committed the crimes, though no possible reason or motive for them to have done so was suggested. But it was proven that no Texas Rangers were in that part of the State, and that they were not armed with a gun out of which the cartridges used could have been fired. So that theory was abandoned.

It has been suggested that smugglers might have committed the crimes, but not one syllable of proof was adduced before the committee, even tending to show that there was any organized band of smugglers in that vicinity at that time, or that they were armed with high-power rifles, or government ammunition, or that they had any motive to raid upon and shoot up the town of Brownsville. Nobody saw a smuggler. Nobody heard of a smuggler being in or near Brownsville on the night of the raid.

It is suggested in one of the minority reports that possibly the saloon keepers of Brownsville committed these offenses for the purpose of driving the soldiers away from Brownsville because they were not receiving the profits from their trade.

Mr. President, it was because of their own action that the saloons did not receive the trade of the soldiers. But is it conceivable that the saloon keepers could have organized themselves into a band of 10 to 20 men, armed with high-power rifles, and gone through the streets of Brownsville and not have been identified by any of the many residents who saw the raiders? And is it probable that such saloon keepers would have gone to the Tillman Saloon and in cold blood murdered one of their own number, and he a young man scarcely more than a boy in years, against whom no man in all that city had aught of ill to say, either before or after his untimely death? This theory, from the evidence, is as groundless as the many others that have been suggested and abandoned for want of proof to give them even color of plausibility.

Finally, Mr. President, it has been charged that the people of Brownsville themselves shot up their own town and murdered their own citizen, with a view of laying the blame at the door of the negro soldiers for the purpose of securing their removal from Brownsville. This charge, Mr. President—which has been distinctly made, I believe, by some of the negro soldiers only, though it has been suggested and insinuated by others—is a gross, unwarranted, and an utterly unsupported slander upon the people of Brownsville. It challenges their intelligence as well as their character as a law-abiding people.

Let us view it for a moment in the light of known and admitted facts, and put to it the test of common sense. We are asked to assume, for there is absolutely no proof, that a band of 10 to 20 citizens organized themselves, procured high-power rifles, clothed themselves in the uniforms of United States soldiers, blacked their faces, and thus equipped, deliberately marched through their own city, in the midst of their own homes and those of their neighbors, and shot into houses where innocent women and children were sleeping, endangered the lives of unoffending citizens, and finally wounded their old, faithful, and popular lieutenant of police, and murdered in cold blood one of their own citizens.

But that is not all, Mr. President. Our credulity must be put to a still further test. We are asked further to assume, in the absence of proof, that these people stole from the quarters of the soldiers empty shells (though no shells were missed), and not only scattered them upon the streets at the points where the firing occurred, but that in the darkness of the night they were able to find and pick up, and that they did find, pick up, and remove every shell which they themselves fired, and which their high-power guns scattered as they fired; all this, with the hope and for the sole purpose of laying the blame upon these negro soldiers, that thereby they might possibly induce the Government to send them elsewhere, though they had not even petitioned or asked the Government to remove them.

Mr. President, I think Senators will search in vain for an instance, either in Ohio or Texas or elsewhere, where white men have ever been known to kill each other to be relieved of the presence of objectionable negroes. The suggestion is so grotesquely absurd that it would seem to tax the credulity of the most partisan friend of the negro soldiers.

Finally, Mr. President, it must not be forgotten that we are not trying men for a felony, where a reasonable doubt would insure an acquittal; we are not trying men for murder a conviction would involve their incarceration or death; we are considering one question only, and that is, Is there sufficient evidence of the guilt of these men to make it unwise and improper to restore them to the ranks of the army? Mr. President, what character of men should constitute the American Army? Shall they be men who respect the law and afford protection to defenseless citizens? Shall they be men who come with clean hands? Or shall the army have in it men whose hands are stained with the blood of innocent citizens?

Mr. President, I desire now briefly to consider the bills introduced by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. Foraker] and the Senator from Missouri [Mr. Warner]. I am opposed to both bills. Not because the men proposed to be reenlisted are negroes, but because the testimony taken before the Military Committee, in my judgment, clearly shows that at least a part of these men are guilty of the grossest crimes, which totally unfits them for service in the army, and because it is utterly impossible to ascertain which ones are guilty and which ones are innocent of those crimes.

The bill introduced by the Senator from Ohio, to all intents and purposes, reviews, annuls, and sets aside the order of the President discharging the soldiers of the Twenty-fifth Infantry and provides that any one or all of them may again enlist upon swearing that they were innocent of participation in, or had any guilty knowledge of, the affray at Brownsville. It further restores to them all rights and privileges which they enjoyed before discharge and gives them full pay for the time since their discharge.

Mr. President, I shall not stop to discuss the legal question as to the power of Congress to restore these men to the army. I believe Congress has that power. Congress has power under the Constitution to provide rules and regulations for the government of the army, and I believe it can provide the qualifications for reenlistment and can say in its sovereign capacity as the legislative body what and who shall constitute the army of the United States. But, as I said, I am not going to discuss that question now.

Mr. President, if any of those soldiers were guilty of the crimes committed at Brownsville or, though not actually guilty of participation, were aiders and abettors before or after the fact, this bill provides an easy, certain, and expeditious mode for the restoration to the army of the guilty and innocent alike. If this bill becomes a law, not only will Congress thus set aside and annul the action of the President, who issued the order of dismissal, but every discharged soldier who desires it, however stained his hands may be with the blood of innocent people, will again be enrolled in the army of the country. And the President, should he approve it, will repudiate his own act and confess himself a blunderer and a wrongdoer. Were the soldiers legally discharged? Did the President have the power to discharge those men?

Mr. President, the resolution of the Senate under which this investigation was made, impliedly recognizes, because it does not question, the legality and justice of the President's act in the summary discharge of the men of that battalion. That resolution says:

Resolved, That without questioning the legality or justice of any act of the President in relation thereto, the Committee on Military Affairs is hereby authorized and directed, by subcommittee or otherwise, to take and have printed testimony for the purpose of ascertaining all the facts with reference to or connected with the affray at Brownsville, Tex., on the night of August 13–14, 1906. Said committee is authorized to send for persons and papers, to administer oaths, to sit during sessions or recess of the Senate and, if deemed advisable, at Brownsville or elsewhere; the expense of the investigation to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate.

Leaving out of consideration the question of the power of the President, as Commander in Chief of the army, to discharge an enlisted soldier before the expiration of his term of enlistment, about which there may be a difference of opinion, it is in my opinion clear that such discretion is vested in him by the Articles of War, which have the force of statutes. Article 4 says:

No enlisted man, duly sworn, shall be discharged from the service without a discharge in writing, signed by a field officer of the regiment to which he belongs, or by the commanding officer when no field officer is present; and no discharge shall be given to any enlisted man before his term of service has expired except by order of the President, the Secretary of War, the commanding officer of a department, or by sentence of a general court-martial.

That article has been often construed and held to authorize dismissals, such as those contemplated in Special Order No. 266, issued by the President. In fact, it has been almost daily invoked for the past fifty years, and under it hundreds of enlisted men have been yearly discharged from the army without anybody questioning the authority under which they were discharged.

Prior to the act of 1866, the President not only had and exercised the power to dismiss, at his discretion, enlisted men of the army, but commissioned officers also. By the act of July 17, 1866, Congress provided:

That no officer in the military or naval service of the United States shall, in time of peace, be dismissed from the service except upon and in pursuance of the sentence of a court-martial to that effect, or in commutation thereof.

It will be observed that as to the enlisted men the law was left as it was before the passage of that act; that is, they can be dismissed in either of four ways provided by the fourth article of war—either by the President, the Secretary of War, the commander of a department, or a court-martial. Clearly, if Congress had contemplated or intended to take away from the Congress had contemplated or intended to take away from the President—if it had the power to do so—the authority to dismiss an enlisted man, it would not have confined its inhibition to "no officer in the military or naval service of the United States." It would undoubtedly have included enlisted men. And the fact that it did not include enlisted men clearly demonstrates that Congress intended to leave the law as to them as it was, as set out and recognized in article 4 of the Articles of War.

In construing the act of 1866 the Supreme Court of the United States, in Blake v. United States (103 U.S.) held that, notwithstanding that act, the President had the power to dismiss or supersede an officer of the army, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, by the appointment of some one in his place.

And in Crenshaw v. United States (134 U.S.) that court held that a midshipman in the navy could be thus dismissed or dropped from the rolls of the navy. In that case the court used the following significant language:

An officer in the army or navy of the United States does not hold his office by contract, but at the will of the sovereign power.

If an officer appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate holds his office "at the will of the sovereign power, surely an enlisted man does not hold his place by any higher right. How can it be insisted, Mr. President, when even in spite of a statute prohibiting the President from dismissing an officer of the army he can still do so by appointing his successor, that he can not discharge an enlisted soldier, where the Articles of War, which have all the force and validity of statutes, authorize him to do so?

But, Mr. President, we have the benefit of an actual adjudication in this case by the courts of the United States. In Oscar W. Reid v. The United States, in the district court of New York, this very question of the power of the President to discharge the enlisted men in this case was considered, and that court held that they could be thus discharged. I ask that a portion of that opinion, which I have marked, be inserted in my remarks without reading.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered. The matter referred to is as follows:

Hough, D. J.
Several matters discussed at bar must be laid aside as immaterial to the disposition of this cause.
Whether Reid or his comrades, or any of them, were guilty of the riotous disturbance in question; or whether Reid personally committed any infraction of good order or military discipline; or whether he is in fact a desirable soldier, or knew or withheld anything tending toward the discovery of the perpetrators of the Brownsville riot; or whether, so far as Reid or others are concerned, the President's action was unnecessarily severe, cruel, or unjust, are questions beyond this judicial investigation.

so far as Reld or others are concerned, the President's action was unnecessarily severe, cruel, or unjust, are questions beyond this judicial investigation.

The material inquiries seem to me very few. The nature of a soldier's contract of enlistment has been sufficiently treated In re Grimley (137 U. S., 147). By his contract Reld assumed the burden of military service, not for a definite time, but for three years, "unless sooner discharged by proper authority."

Nothing is expressed in the enlistment papers as to what reasons shall be sufficient for early discharge. And if the engagement be treated merely as a civil contract of hire, the Government would be entitled to dispense with Reld's services under it at any time, provided the authority—i. e., the officer directing discharge or dismissal—be "proper."

In other words, if enlistment be no more than a hiring by civil contract, under this particular contract the corporate master may discharge the servant whenever he pleases and for or without cause, provided only the officer directing discharge be "proper authority."

I do not give assent to the assertion that a soldier's engagement is or bears much resemblance to a civil contract of hire; but on the assumption (most favorable to petitioner) that it is such a contract, it is on the part of the Government a general contract, terminable at will, if that will be expressed through a proper officer. (Martin v. New York Life Ins. Co., 148 N. Y., 118.)

This petitioner was, so far as formalities attending his severance from the service are concerned, properly discharged; that is, his discharge paper was correct in form and signature, and so much is not denied. But the "authority" causing and directing his discharge was the President of the United States, who personally gave the order therefor; so that the final question upon assumptions very favorable to petitioner is whether the President, as Commander in Chief of the army, is "proper authority" to terminate in invitum a soldier's enlistment.

Ilstment. This question must be answered affirmatively if either (1) there be inherent constitutional authority in the President, as Commander in Chief, so to do, or (2) there be such authority in the absence of congressional statutory action limiting, defining, or regulating the Commander's powers, or if (3) in this case the President acted in accordance with the various acts of Congress regulating the army and discharges therefrom.

As to the first and second of these last queries, no opinion is expressed, because the last question must, in my judgment, be answered unfavorably to the petitioner.

The Articles of War constitute the only statutory declaration concerning discharges from the military service. (U. S. Rev. Stat., sec. 1342.)

Intraversibly to the petitioner.

The Articles of War constitute the only statutory declaration concerning discharges from the military service. (U. S. Rev. Stat., sec. 1342.)

Article 4 provides:

"* * no discharge shall be given to any enlisted man before his term of service has expired, except by order of the President, the Secretary of War, the commanding officer of a department, or by sentence of a general court-martial;"
and this language has remained unchanged in the statutes since 1806.

I am quite unable to perceive how the President's right to terminate a soldier's engagement could be more explicitly recognized, and indeed conferred, if recognition seems to imply some antecedent right.

This fourth article of war clearly assumes that discharges must be granted before expiration of service; the power to grant them implies the power to impose them, unless a soldier have some rights inherent in his contract or inferable from the nature of his occupation.

This petitioner's contract is civilly but a hiring at the will of the employer, while the nature of his occupation, so far from varying that status, has been frequently so judicially defined as to leave no doubt of congressional intent.

The recruit is bound to serve during the full term of his enlistment, but a single ag, but may dismiss him at the very first moment or at any subsequent but may dismiss him at the very first moment or at any subsequent subsequent with the contract of the parties, but "the military compact many be dissolved at any moment by the supreme authority of the Government." (U. S. Blakeney, 3 Grat (Va.) at 391; cited Re Morrissey, 137 U. S., at 159.) And this historical view of the soldier's relation to the Government or the Crown antedates the founding of this Nation and is the accepted doctrine of the British military establishment, upon which ours was modeled. (Re Tuffnell L. R., 3 Ch. Div., 173.)

Even if, therefore, there be no inherent power of control over the military forces of the Nation vested in its constitutional Comm

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, that the men of the Twentyfifth Infantry were legally discharged from the service, it seems to me, is hardly a debatable question. Then, if they were legally discharged, what reason is there to restore these soldiers to the army which at least a part of them have so sig-nally disgraced? Wherein, Mr. President, does the Government owe any obligation, legal or moral, to any one of these dis-charged soldiers to reenlist him in its service? Each enlisted under a contract of service which he knew contemplated that he might be discharged any day or hour the Government might conclude the public welfare required it. They were paid for the service rendered. Can it be said that because the Govern-ment enlists a body of men, and they have served a number of years, it is bound either in law or morals to keep them in its service, or when legally discharged to reinstate them, when there is about them even a suspicion of crime which would or might even affect injuriously the public service?

Many of us who have investigated this case, or have read the proof, I have no doubt, believe that perhaps 10 per cent of the battalion discharged are actual murderers, or aiders and abettors of murder. Certainly every tribunal which has investigated it has so found. The most searching investigation has failed to point out which were the guilty and which were the inno-cent. Then, shall the Government take the chance of placing in its ranks murderers, rather than leave out of its ranks some men who may not be criminals, but upon whom certainly rests the suspicion of crime? There are enough American citizens, Mr. President, ready and willing to fill the ranks of our army, who are not only honest and law-abiding men, but who are free from the suspicion of crime. Do we owe nothing to the honor and good name of the army itself, or to the peace and security of the people among whom these men if reenlisted must be quartered? Are all our sympathies to be expended on a body of men a part of whom are, in my opinion, proven to be midnight assassins, and none upon the innocent and helpless people of Brownsville, who were shot and murdered?

It is said that this Government ought not to send these soldiers out into the world branded with a discharge "without honor." I reply that this Government dare not, in justice to its defenseless citizens, again clothe in its uniform and arm with its guns a body of men among whom there are those who have disgraced the one and turned the other upon helpless women and children. The Senator from Ohio pleads for justice for the American soldier. I plead for justice for the American citizen. The American soldier should be the protector and defender, not the assassin of American citizens.

Mr. President, the only prerequisite required by the proposed bill for the reenlistment of these soldiers is that they shall take a prescribed oath. Every member of the First Battalion, Twenty-fifth Infantry, discharged by the President has already taken a similar oath. Notwithstanding such oath, a majority of the committee has found, and so report, that the crimes of August 13-14, 1906, at Brownsville, were committed by members of that battalion. The effect of such finding and report necessarily is that at least a portion of such discharged soldiers have sworn falsely. If the facts sustain that report, and I have endeavored to show that they do, then the logical meaning of the proposed bill is to provide that, upon the guilty soldiers committing perjury the second time, they shall be eligible for reenlistment, and shall be again enrolled in the Army of the United States.

It has been suggested that the guilty would likely not reenlist, because they would not want to bring themselves under the surveillance of their officers. In my judgment, exactly the reverse would follow. The guilty would be deterred by no scruples of conscience from again swearing falsely, and they would regard their reenlistment as strengthening the presumption of their innocence and removing still further the probability of their punishment. They would feel that if Congress interfered once, and by its action shielded them against at least one consequence of their crime, it would do so again if they were en-rolled among its soldiery. They would feel licensed to repeat their deadly assaults upon some other sleeping and defenseless

Besides, Mr. President, this bill offers a premium on perjury. It provides that if the oath is taken and reenlistment perfected, the soldiers thus reenlisted shall draw pay for the entire time since the date of their discharge. Under this provision each soldier who reenlists, if this bill becomes a law, will draw pay for more than two years, during which time no services what-ever were rendered the Government. If these soldiers were legally discharged, and therefore properly out of the army, by what course of reasoning can we justify ourselves in taking from the Treasury money placed there by taxation upon the people and voting it as a pure gift to these men for the period when they were not in the employ of and not rendering any services to the Government? We would be equally justified in voting a bonus to any other of the hundreds of enlisted men who are annually discharged for the good of the service, or even to civilian employees who were legally discharged for the good of the service.

Mr. President, can we afford to pass any measure which provides for or opens the way for the reentry into the army of a body of men from 5 to 15 per cent of whom are shown by the evidence to be guilty of murder and many more of whom were undoubtedly aiders and abettors of such murder, before or after While it may be true that there are among the men discharged some who are innocent both of active participation in the crime and of guilty knowledge of it, still, so long as the guilty are mingled with the innocent and it is impossible to identify and separate them, the whole body is poisoned and contaminated, and the character and honor and proper discipline of the army and the peace and safety of the people impera-tively demand that all shall be excluded from the service. The inconvenience and loss, if there be such, of the individual, even though guiltless of crime, must be made subservient to the public welfare.

Mr. President, the army is supported and maintained by taxation upon the people as an instrument for the preservation of law and order within our own borders, no less than as an instrument of defense against the aggressions of a foreign foe. It must be maintained and disciplined so as to be a protection and not a source of danger to the peaceful citizen and to every community in which it may be quartered. Unless the personnel of its officers and enlisted men and its discipline are such as to furnish indisputable guaranty of such safety and protection to the people, and especially to helpless women and children, the army degenerates into a mob and becomes a standing menace to the peace and order of the country.

In the administration of the military arm of the service the preservation of proper discipline is of supreme and paramount importance. Therefore, to readmit to its rolls a body of men the conduct of a portion of whom has inflicted upon the army "the blackest stain recorded in its entire history," under circumstances which make it hopelessly impossible to separate the guilty from the innocent, would irreparably weaken, if it did not permanently impair, the morale of the army.

It would be a gross injustice to the army itself to admit into its ranks men among whom there are murderers. It would be a still more grievous wrong to the people to again clothe the guilty among them with power and arm them with the weapons with which they may again wreak their vengeance upon a sleeping and unoffending people, encouraged and emboldened by the hope that by a general and concerted silence their identity would be concealed, and by congressional inter-ference they would be retained in or restored to the army if dismissed.

Mr. President, in the conclusions which I have reached in this matter and in the views I have expressed upon it I have been influenced by no prejudice against the negro. no grudge. I entertain for him no unkindly feeling. never favored any policy with reference to the negro that did not recognize his rights as a man and did not assure him equal and exact justice before the law.

I have never failed to condemn every act of lawlessness inflicted upon the negro, and have always demanded for him a fair and impartial trial, when he has been charged with violation of law, it mattered not how atrocious his crime. Mr. President, I know the negro, his faults and his virtues-and he has many virtues. My knowledge and observation of the negro race cover almost the span of my life, for they nursed me in my infancy, played with me in my boyhood, and I have known and them in mature manhood. I have prosecuted and defended them as a lawyer; I have tried and passed sentence upon them as a judge; I have exerted the power of the State to shield and protect them against lawlessness sought to be inflicted upon them for grave crimes when I was governor of my State, and many times in pity have I reached out to them the hand of executive clemency, because of their weakness. I recall with gratitude, and I pray God I may never forget, their loyalty and fidelity to those whom they served and loved during the turmoil and strife and bitterness of the civil war. I remember when bloody, devastating war, with all its appalling horrors, raged about my own home, and no white man was there to guard and protect it, with what confidence and security mother and children lay down to sleep at night, because outside of our door slept a black sentinel in whose fidelity we trusted with implicit faith.

If I may be pardoned, Mr. President, for such a reference in this presence, one of the sweetest memories of my childhood is of the old black mammy who nursed me. I remember how, as the shadows of evening would gather, and the soft southern winds would sigh gently through the leaves of the great spreading oaks that shaded my old country home, she would take me in her arms and rock me to and fro and sing me to sleep to the music of those sweet southern melodies that I loved so well.

No, Mr. President, I would do the negro no wrong. I would help him if I could. I would strengthen him where he is weak. I would teach him by practical and industrial education to be a better and more useful man. I would shield him from his own weaknesses and excesses. I would steady his stumbling feet, as he treads the stony way that leads up to his moral and material betterment. And above all, Mr. President, I would have him learn that if he would rise, he must cease to shield and protect the criminals of his race, and must purge it by aiding in their detection and just punishment.

Mr. President, there has been injected into the consideration of this unfortunate affair, largely outside of this Chamber, I am glad to say, a race question, which has no proper place in it. Perhaps it was inevitable. This has been done largely by the negroes themselves and by those to whom they look as their teachers and their guides.

A greater wrong was never inflicted upon the great body of respectable and law-abiding negroes of this country than to place them in the attitude of upholding crime and shielding criminals because they are of their race. That the race question was involved in the causes which led to the commission of these crimes I have no doubt. That it was involved in the treatment of the negro soldiers after the commission of the crimes I do not believe. Mr. President, to those of us who live in the South, where the negroes dwell in great numbers, there is a real race problem, upon which the most thoughtful of our people feel deeply. The exigencies of civil war freed the slave, but the black man remained, and with him a problem unparalleled in its difficulties. Mark those difficulties: nearly equal in numbers, but utterly and wholly dissimilar. The one educated, proud, and aggressive; the other ignorant, idle, and superstitious. The one with a thousand years of civilization stretching out behind it; the other but a few centuries removed from barbarism. The one but a generation ago in bondage to the other, yet each made, by law, equal in civil and political rights. Thus situated, they are asked to dwell together, on the same soil and under the same skies, in peace and harmony, without the one race dominating the other.

Mr. President, the people whom I have the honor in part to represent here have dealt fairly, kindly, even generously, by the negro. In education and charity they have paid 95 per cent of the taxes and given him his pro rata share of the bene-Before the law they have protected him in his equal ts. They have opened to him the avenues of industry and bade him enter, and by honest toll build for himself a home and a competency. But, Mr. President, I would not be entirely frank if I did not say that upon certain phases of the race question they, in common with the rest of the South, have stood, and I believe will ever stand, firm and unalterable. First, never again will the negro race be allowed to politically dominate and control a sovereign State of this Union. To do so would be to enthrone ignorance and give it dominion over intelligence, and to bring back the rapine and utter and reck-less debauchery of the reconstruction era. Second, the social barrier which separates the races will never be allowed to be lowered. To do so would destroy the purity and integrity of the white race and shock the sensibilities and outrage the moral sense of the Caucasian race the world over.

Mr. President, for forty years and more, in patience and kindness, the people of the South have wrestled with this problem, which is racial, not political. It is still unsolved. What the end will be only God, in His infinite wisdom, can see. Shall it be that the black race will be deported? If feasible, it would remove the last remaining barrier to the complete unity of the American people. Shall it be a race war—bloody, fierce, exterminating—a war for the survival of the fittest? God forbid. Shall it be amalgamation and the unspeakable horror of a corrupted and inferior race? To allow it would be to destroy that civilization which is at once our strength and our pride. Shall it be that the two races will dwell together, and yet apart, in peace and harmony? To do so without the one race dominating and ruling the other would be to belie the universal verdict of racial history. I do not know. But one thing I do know, Mr. President, that the solution of this problem rests primarily in the hands of the southern white man and the southern black man and calls for the wisest counsel and broadest conservatism of both. I know that it can never be solved by men far removed from its fatal touch and whose minds are not filled with an appalling sense of the deep racial difficulties with which it is hedged about. It can only be solved by those upon whose hearts and consciences it rests as a perpetual burden and who are in honor pledged to its ultimate solution.

Mr. President, we know not what the future holds in store for us as a nation and a people. We can only go forward with hope, trusting that in the providence of God all things may be settled aright and in consonance with the peace and unity of our people and the perpetuity of the Republic. And, as I grow older, Mr. President, and get a broader and, I trust, a clearer view; as I see the men of every section of this Union knit together, closer and closer, by ties of blood and kinship and interest, I am coming more and more to feel that whatever befalls, we of the South who are striving for the right solution of this problem, as God has given us to see it, will have the encouragement and sympathy of the best of those of the North and East and West, who are blood of our blood and bone of our bone; whose hopes are our hopes and whose common destiny is wrapped up in this Republic, founded by our Caucasian fathers for the happiness of their children. [Manifestations of applause in the galleries.]

During the delivery of Mr. Frazier's speech,

Mr. CARTER. I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Montana asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside. Without objection, it is so ordered, and the Senator from Tennessee will proceed.

At the conclusion of Mr. Frazier's speech, Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, while this subject is before the Senate, I desire to ascertain whether we can not agree upon a time for taking a vote upon Senate bill 5729 and the amendments which may be offered thereto.

Mr. WARREN. I am sorry to say that I am unable to agree this morning for the committee, because we have had but one speech upon the subject from the other side of the Chamber and there are two or three who have matters in preparation. I am inclined to think we shall reach the time soon, but I could not to-day agree upon a date to bring the matter up for final disposition.

Mr. FORAKER. May I ask the Senator how many there are who want to speak, and when he thinks they will be ready to speak?

Mr. WARREN. I am unable to say that.
Mr. FORAKER. Unless we can get something definite, the Senator understands that it will be necessary for me to move to proceed to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. WARREN. I understand that perfectly, and I would not deny the Senator that privilege if I could. I shall take no offense if the Senator shall at any time move to take up the bill. I think, however, that there might be a better way; but nevertheless it is the Senator's right to move to take up the bill without any agreement regarding it.
Mr. FORAKER. The Senator will se

The Senator will see the necessity I am under of trying to get some definite information.

I will give notice that next Monday, if I can not at that time or before then get a time agreed upon for taking the vote, I shall move to proceed to the consideration of the bill. I hope Senators will take notice of that. I do not want to cut anybody off from speaking. I want to give everybody a full opportunity; but the session is fast coming to a close, and if there is to be a vote on the bill in the Senate at all it ought to be taken soon. All Senators appreciate that, I am sure.

On next Monday, then, unless prior to or at that time I can get an agreement to vote, I shall move to proceed to the consideration of the bill.

I have an amendment to offer to Senate bill 5729, which I wish to have printed and lie on the table. I introduced and had printed an amendment heretofore, and this is intended as a substitute for it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be printed and lie on the table.

THIRTEENTH AND SUBSEQUENT DECENNIAL CENSUSES.

Mr. LONG submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 16954) to provide for the Thirteenth and subsequent decennial censuses, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 4, 21. That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 3, 5, 6, 8, 9, 10, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 22, 23, 25; and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 7, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows:

"Strike out the proposed amendment and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"And for the enumeration of institutions, shall include paupers, prisoners, juvenile delinquents, insane, feeble-minded, blind, deaf and dumb, and inmates of benevolent institutions."

And the Senate agree to the same. That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 11, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 7, lines 11 and 12 of the bill, strike out the words "and had a product valued at five hundred dollars or more;" and in the Senate amendment strike out the words "one thousand;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 20, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: After the word "feeble-minded," in the proposed amendment, insert the following: ", blind, deaf and dumb;" and the Senate agree to the same.

On amendments numbered 24, 26, and 27, the committee of conference have been unable to agree.

CHESTER I. LONG, EUGENE HALE, S. D. MCENERY, Managers on the part of the Senate. EDGAR D. CRUMPACKER, EDWIN C. BURLEIGH, JAMES HAY,

Managers on the part of the House of Representatives. The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the report of the committee of conference.

Mr. BURKETT. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator in charge of the conference report a question with reference to amendment No. 7. As I caught the reading of the report, amendment No. 7 was agreed to with such an amendment—if I caught the wording aright—that the provision for the enumeration of the ruptured, crippled, and deformed children under 18 years of age is not included in the bill. That is as I understand the conference report.

No provision is made for the taking of the Mr. LONG. enumeration of this class by the enumerators, but those in institutions are to be enumerated.

Mr. BURKETT. Mr. President, I want to call the attention of the Senator to the point that that action practically nullifies any good intended to be derived from the proposed amendment. The object of the amendment was to have an enumeration of these crippled and deformed persons taken for the purpose of directing the attention of state legislatures to the need of building hospitals for them and also of private philanthropists to the need of the building of such hospitals. There are, as a matter of fact, practically none of these hospitals—comparatively speaking, I mean, of course—for deformed and crippled children. Perhaps three or four States have such hospitals. People who have been interested in them have found that the trouble in getting them established is that they could not make the legislatures understand that there were a good many of this class in the State, or, at least, enough to be worth while to build such an institution, for they have never been able to present the matter in proper form to philanthropists who devote money to hospitals of various kinds. Therefore they have urged that this amendment should provide for enumerating, not the number of this unfortunate class in the hospitals, but that the enumerators should make this report so that it might be used with private philanthropists as well as with state leg-

I think the Senator will see, from that statement, that simply enumerating those who are in hospitals does not reach the good that would be attained by the enumeration as contemplated by those who are advocating the amendment. Therefore I should like to hear from the Senator as to whether or not this matter was taken into consideration in the conference committee with the object I have stated in view.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, in answer to the inquiry of the Senator from Nebraska, I will state that the amendment re-ceived very careful consideration by the conference committee, and while the committee sympathized with the purpose of the proposed amendment, yet the difficulty came in its practical operation, if it were incorporated in the bill.

An inquiry similar to this was included in the census of 1890, and the results in securing the information were so unsatisfactory that the committee of conference did not deem it wise to include it in this census. The Director of the Census, in a statement before the Senate Committee on the Census when it was considering this bill, had this to say in regard to this amendment:

Mr. North. Of course I have very deep sympathy with the purpose for which it is proposed. At the same time I am obliged to say that I think it would be much to be regretted if it were put into the law. The schedules for the census of 1890 contained three questions of this character—

Quoting-

Whether suffering from acute or chronic disease, the name of the disease, and length of time afflicted; whether defective in mind, sight, hearing, or speech, or whether crippled, maimed, or deformed—

This part of the inquiry is similar to the Senator's amend-the name of the defective, whether a prisoner, convict, homeless child, ir pauper.

Every enumerator was required to ask those three questions in every family that he visited, and there was a terrible uproar about it. .

The difficulties encountered by the enumerators were so serious that practically the questions were withdrawn before the census was completed. The unfortunate experience made it seem desirable to those concerned with the Twelfth Census to omit questions of this character from the schedule.

The Twelfth Census included inquiries in regard to the blind and the deaf and dumb. The results of the effort to take the census of the blind and deaf and dumb were so unsatisfactory that this bill as it passed the House and Senate contained no provision for the enumeration of the blind and deaf and dumb. It was shown that in the last census, while the enumerators found that there were 240,000 blind and deaf and dumb in the country, that after a careful subsequent examination, made after the reports of the enumerators were returned, that the number was reduced to 151,000. Over 80,000 mistakes were made. Over one-third of those returned by the enumerators as blind or deaf and dumb were found on subsequent inquiry to be not of those classes. So this bill, as it passed the House and the Senate, was confined to as few schedules as possible. In the cities there will be but one schedule, that of population, for the enumerators, and in the country there will be two, population and agriculture. The inquiries in relation to manufactures, mines, and quarries will be made by special agents. So, believing that this amendment, if incorporated in the bill, would not obtain accurate information, the conferees on the part of the House objected very strongly to the incorporation of this amendment in the bill, and the Senate conferees yielded. We do, however, include the enumeration of the defective classes when they are in institutions.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The report was agreed to. Mr. LONG. I move that the Senate further insist on its amendments disagreed to by the House of Representatives, ask for a further conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, and that the conferees on the part of the Senate be appointed by the Vice-President.

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice-President appointed as the conferees on the part of the Senate Mr. Long, Mr. Hale, and Mr. McENERY.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I desire to have printed in the Record two letters from the Director of the Census, one bearing upon this question and the other upon another subject included in amendment No. 7.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, permission is Mx Dear Sin: Your letter of January 11 is at hand. I regret that your attention and that of others interested was not earlier called to the fact that the Thirteenth Census bill does not provide for the special classes is limited to those in institutions only. The omission of a provision calling for the enumeration of the blind and deaf, and that the enumeration of certain of the special classes is limited to those in institutions only. The omission of a provision calling for the enumeration of the blind and other defective classes as found among the general population was not done without careful consideration, and it was done most regret-Taily, for I and all my assistants have the fullest sympathy with the sinformation in connection with that work. There were three or four considerations which determined our judgment, and you are entitled to a full statement of them.

I. The difficulties and complications attending the decennial enumeration of the population of the United States are increasing so rapidly that it has become imperative to simplify and reduce the range of the inquiries. We have now to deal with a population of whom 15 per cent are foreign born, speaking some twenty or more distinct languages or dialects. It is impossible to secure 65,000 enumerators who within the time limit allowed, with the necessary control of the secure of the inquiries. We have now to deal with a population of whom 15 per cent are foreign born, speaking some twenty or more distinct languages or dialects. It is impossible to secure 65,000 enumerators who within the time limit allowed, with the necessary required to handle, in addition, six or eight special schedules.

With respect to the work; much less if they are required to handle, in addition, six or eight special schedules.

With respect to the enumeration of this character through the ordinary census enumerators; and the futility of such effort was again very forcibly demonstrated of one of these classes must include all classes. No one of these unfortunates is entitled to any more consideration from the Federal Government than any other class. To include them all means the loading up to every enumerator with at least five special schedules of a technical nature and can only result in greatly retarding the progress of his regular work, as was the case in 1890, when a complete census of the special classes was undertaken. The information desired can not be accurately obtained by this means, and much of it, judging from past experience, would have to be thrown away. I do not believe that the half million dollars additional expenditure involved would be, on the whole, money well invested.

experience, would have to be thrown away. I do not believe that the half million dollars additional expenditure involved would be, on the whole, money well invested.

III. The Thirteenth Census bill has passed both Houses of Congress and is now in conference, and any change in its provisions in this regard is beyond the parliamentary power of the conference committee. It can only be reached by means of a supplemental act; this, of course, is difficult, but not impossible. It appears, however, from your letter, and from many others I have received, that these special enumerations are desired for the purpose of facilitating the work of various state and local organizations established to aid the afflicted classes. The purpose is above criticism, but the object is state or local, and the question arises, Why should the state and local authorities demand that the Federal Government shall collect data for the state and local authorities, who alone can make any practical use of it?

To me it seems clear that the States themselves, by means of an intermediate census, should collect the information which is desired by their own institutions and organizations along the lines under discussion. This is now done by several of the States—New York, Massachusetts, and Pennsylvania, for instance—and I am hopeful, if the federal census fails to obtain the data desired, that it will result in stimulating a number of States to provide for a state census in 1905, which they ought to take and upon which they ought to rely for this information.

Dear Senator Long: The amendment to section 8 of "An act to provide for the Thirteenth and subsequent decennial censuses," which relates to the internarriage of white and negro persons, is open to serious objection, and, if retained in its present form, will not only have a tendency to delay the work, but will also lead to situations in which it will operate to prevent the orderly conduct of the enumeration. This amendment, which refers to an inquiry to be made on the schedues routing to population, is inserted on page 6, at line 8, after the conduction of either whole or partial negro between a white person and a person of either whole or partial negro blood, specifying whether the husband or the wife in such marriage between a white person and sperson of either whole or partial negro blood, specifying whether the husband or the wife in such marriage is of negro blood.

Obviously, the intention of this amendment is to provide the means for securing through the medium of the census enumerators definite information concerning the extent to which these interracial marriages have taken place, and also in what proportion each party to such marriages is of negro blood, but, as a matter of fact, information of this character is already contained on the population schedules of the Twelfth and preceding censuses, and needs only to be fully developed through a special tabulation of the data already in the possession of the Census Office.

The schedules relating to population at each census since and including 1880 have contained inquiries as to the color, sex, relationship to head of family, and conjugal condition of each person enumerated, and it is obvious that a detailed examination of the returns with respect to the considerations named would reveal for each of these censuses, with substantial completeness and accuracy, the facts as to internarriage between whi tion of the character mentioned that is possible under any circumstances.

The results to be attained in the direction contemplated by said amendment would be confined, moreover, to a comparatively restricted area, as interracial marriages of this character are prohibited by law in all the territory—except the District of Columbia—comprising the South Atlantic and South Central divisions; in Indiana, Missouri, and Nebraska, of the North Central division; and in Arizona, California, Colorado, Idaho, Nevada, Oregon, and Utah, of the Western division. At the census of 1900 there were 8,833,994 persons of negro descent, and of this number 7,836,267, or very nearly nine-tenths (88.7 per cent), were found in the Southern States; and if the Northern and Western States just mentioned are also included, the number is increased to 8,084,942, or 91.5 per cent. The remainder of the country contained, therefore, only 749,052 persons of negro descent, or less than 10 per cent of the entire number in continental United States in 1990, and it is largely among this small proportion of the negro population that the terms of the amendment would be operative, if at all. White and negro persons legally married in other States are permitted to live in some of the Northern and Western States mentioned, it is true, but allowing for these cases the amendment would be applicable in limited areas only, and would not be productive of nearly as good results, in all probability, as have been and can again be obtained through the ordinary processes of census enumeration, as already illustrated.

An inquiry of considerable significance, however, can be added to the population schedule at the Thirteenth Census, without Interfering in any way with the work of the census enumerators, and, if it could be substituted for the amendment which now appears in section 8, it would undoubtedly bring results, even though not altogether satisfactory, of sufficient value to afford the means of determining, periodically, the probable extent to which there has been an intermixture of white and negro blood and also whether the tendency is, on the whole, an increasing or a decreasing one. Such an amendment, if it should be proposed, would read somewhat as follows:

"Strike out in section 8, page 6, line 8, after the word 'Navy,' the words 'also each case of intermarriage between a white person and a person of either whole or partial negro blood, specifying whether the husband or the wife in such marriage is of negro blood, whether black or mulatto."

An inquiry of this character was first made in 1850 and was continued at each census thereafter until 1900, when it was temporarily abandoned. The omission at the latter census was due to the fact that at the preceding census, that of 1890, the law contained a specific requirement for the enumeration on the population schedule of the number of negroes, mulattoes, quadroons, and octoroons, but the attempt to secure information of this character in the detail required was not sare of little was indicated the same indication of the extent to which the races have mingled, the same indication of the extent to which the races have mingled, the same indication of the extent to which the races have mingled, the same indication of the extent to which the races may be made at the Twelfith Census to distinguish buse reason not attempt was made at the Twelfith Census to distinguish buse reason at the Negro Bulletin (p. 15), that "while no competent author

OMNIBUS CLAIMS BILL.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. President, I understand the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. Warren], in charge of the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, desires to take up that bill. Am I correct?

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I think I ought to say that I have a conference report here, which I hope will take no time except to read it. Then, agreeably to the notice I gave yesterday, I desire to take up the appropriation bill and proceed with the few amendments remaining, excepting those increasing the salaries of judges. We are awaiting information from the Treasury Department which may not come until to-morrow morning, and we may be compelled to let the bill go over until to-morrow for the consideration of those items. I say that for the information of the Senator and of the Senate.

Mr. FULTON. Then, I will ask that the omnibus claims bill may be temporarily laid aside. I will call it up later.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

COMMISSIONS OF RETIRED OFFICERS.

Mr. WARREN submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 653) to authorize commissions to issue in the cases of officers of the army retired with increased rank, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate to the amendments of the House, and agree to the same.

> F. E. WARREN, N. B. SCOTT, J. P. TALIAFERRO. Managers on the part of the Senate. J. A. T. HULL, JAMES HAY Managers on the part of the House.

The report was agreed to.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WARREN. I now ask the Senate to resume the consideration of the legislative, and so forth, appropriation bill.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 23464) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1910, and for other purposes.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment which I offer on behalf of the committee. It covers the matter which was overlooked in the original consideration of

The VICE-PRESIDENT. There is a pending amendment. Does the Senator desire that that shall be passed over?

Mr. WARREN. I desire that that shall be passed over for the present, as we are awaiting some information, and I note the absence for the moment of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON], who called for it and who will again be in his seat in a few moments

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The pending amendment will be passed over.

Mr. CLAY. While we are on that proposition, will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wyoming yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. WARREN. I do.

Mr. CLAY. We passed a law within two or three years, probably last year, providing that federal circuit judges in traveling over their districts should be paid, my recollection is, not exceeding $10 a day for their expenses. not apply to the district judges, who, when they hold court at different places in their districts, have to pay out of their own salaries their railroad fares, hotel bills, and other expenses. ask the Senator is that true?

Mr. WARREN. If I may have the attention of the Senate for a moment, I will give the history of that matter, as I understand it. The law which provided for the circuit courts of appeal was enacted in 1891. When enacted it named the cities in which court should be held, and confined it to one city in each circuit. It also provided for the traveling expenses of the judges of the circuit courts of appeal and for such district judges as might be called upon to sit, and while sitting, with the circuit courts of appeal judges at not exceeding $10 a That went along until by various acts we have amplified the law by providing for the holding of court in different cities within the circuits, which naturally makes the expense much larger than when the law was first enacted.

After the impeachment trial of Judge Swayne before this body, we provided in an appropriation bill that the circuit judges of the circuit courts of appeal should have not to exceed $10 a day, and that it should be for their actually incurred expenses, to be duly and explicitly certified. Last year, if I mistake not, the Senate provided in the sundry civil bill that the district judges should have a per diem of, I believe, $6 a day for such travel as was necessary within their districts when holding court away from home; but, unfortunately, that amendment of the Senate was lost in the conference, so that at the present time district judges receive no allowance for traveling expenses within their districts, but do receive their expenses, not exceeding $10 a day, when going outside their districts on special business.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wyoming yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. WARREN. I do.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. They receive this allowance in going into the circuits of which their districts are a part or any ther circuit in which they may be called.

Mr. WARREN. That is, they receive so much for each day.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Not to exceed $10. Mr. WARREN. So much as they may expend, not exceeding $10.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. And the expenses must be itemized and certified to.

Mr. WARREN. Yes. I now ask that the amendment offered by me may be stated.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Wyoming will be stated.

The Secretary. On page 6, line 18, after the word "each," it is proposed to insert the following:

Assistant clerk to Committee on Fisheries, $1,440.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment

Mr. CULBERSON. Is that amendment recommended by the committee as necessary?

Mr. WARREN. It is.

Mr. CULBERSON. How many clerks have they?

Mr. WARREN. They have one clerk and one messenger. Mr. CULBERSON. It seems to me, Mr. President, that we are increasing the officers of the Government very fast.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I think this is the only increase of the kind in the bill, and the representation of the business in that committee by the chairman of the committee appears to justify the amendment. I think the chairman is now employing two men besides the present authorized force, and paying them from his own pocket, and it was thought best to give him this additional clerk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WARREN. In consequence of the amendment just adopted the total should be changed from $42,920 to $44,360.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The Secretary. On page 6, line 19, in the amendment hereto-fore agreed to, it is proposed to strike out "forty-two thousand nine hundred and twenty" and insert "forty-four thousand three hundred and sixty

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WARREN. Now, if the Secretary will turn to page 38, there is an amendment in lines 16 and 17 in regard to which the Senator from Idaho [Mr. Heyeurn] wishes to address the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated. • The Secretary. On page 38, line 16, after the word "dollars," the Committee on Appropriations reported an amendment, to insert "1 assistant, $1,800," so as to read:

Indexes, digests, and compilations of law: To continue the preparation of the new index to the Statutes at Large, in accordance with the plan approved by the Judiciary Committees of both Houses of Congress, and to prepare such other law indexes, digests, and compilations of law as may be required by Congress for official use, namely: For 1 chief assistant, $3,000; 1 assistant, $2,400; 1 assistant, $1,800.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, there is a provision in this bill, on page 38, which reads as follows:

Indexes, digests, and compilations of law: To continue the preparation of the new index to the Statutes at Large, in accordance with the plan approved by the Judiclary Committees of both Houses of Congress, and to prepare such other law indexes, digests, and compilations of law as may be required by Congress for official use, namely: For 1 chief assistant, $3,000; 1 assistant, $2,400; 1 assistant, $1,800; 1 assistant, $1,200; 1 assistant, $1,200; 1 assistant, $2,000; 1 assistant, $2,000;

The history of this piece of legislation will be interesting to the Senate. In 1906, in the sundry civil appropriation act, this item first appeared. On page 753 of the thirty-fourth volume of the Statutes at Large we find this item, which was the beginning of this legislation. I read it:

To systematize the preparation of law indexes, etc., and to provide trained law clerks therefor: To enable the Librarian of Congress to direct the law librarian to prepare a new index to the Statutes at Large—

I direct particular attention to thatin accordance with a plan previously

Mr. WARREN. From what is the Senator reading?

Mr. HEYBURN. I am reading from the thirty-fourth volume of the Statutes at Large, the item in the sundry civil act of 1906.

To resume reading:

In accordance with a plan previously approved by the Judiciary Committees of both Houses of Congress, and to prepare such other indexes, digests, and compilations of law as may be required for Congress and other official use, $5,840 to pay for five additional assistants in the other official

That is the item of appropriation. It did not pass without receiving the attention of the Senate at that time. The object of the item was to provide for indexing the Revised Statutes from the beginning of the Government up to that time or up to the codification or revision of the laws in 1873. That was the purpose as appears from the consideration of the question at that time. The purpose was meritorious. It was a proper thing to do. We had no index of the Revised Statutes between the first session and that of 1873. After 1873 the statutes were completely indexed in the revision which bears date of 1878 and in the Supplements to the Revised Statutes. They were completely indexed, and there was no occasion for any additional index to them.

Mr. WARREN. May I ask the Senator whether his contention is that the law which he has read provides for the indexing prior to 1873?

Mr. HEYBURN. Undoubtedly.
Mr. WARREN. But not since?
Mr. HEYBURN. Whether it provided for the indexing since 1873 or not is not material to the point I submit for considera-

It appears from an investigation of the record affecting this question that those who have been engaged upon this work have done almost everything except the work that Congress appointed them to do. We have appropriated for this work as follows: In 1906, $5,840; in 1907 we appropriated $5,840 for this work; in 1908 we appropriated $5,840; and we are now asked in this bill to appropriate $10,700 for the continuation of this work.

Mr. WARREN. I suppose the Senator has noted the section in the appropriation act of 1907 which provides for indexing the statutes since 1873?

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes; I am now directing my attention to the original enactment and to the manner in which it has been performed.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Utah?
Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. There is so much confusion in the Chamber that I am not quite certain I heard the Senator aright. Do I understand the Senator to complain that the work of indexing has been carried on with reference to the laws passed since 1873?

Mr. HEYBURN. Entirely. Not at all as to those prior to that time.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. My recollection is that in one of the appropriations for this purpose it was specifically provided that the work should be first entered upon with reference to the statutes enacted since 1873.

Mr. HEYBURN. My attention is not called to that, but it is called to a communication addressed by the Judiciary Committee of this body to those having in charge the work.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. If the Senator will permit me further

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly.

Mr SUTHERLAND. If the Senator will look at 34 Statutes at Large, page 1399, he will find this language:

To expedite the preparation of that part of the new index to the Statutes at Large, which is an index to the statutes enacted since the year 1873.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator from Utah is correct about that. I have it here, and the Senator from Idaho will soon find it.

Mr. HEYBURN. I have it here. It reads:

To expedite the preparation of that part of the new index to the Statutes at Large, which is an index to the statutes enacted since the year 1873, and to provide for the additional service in the law library necessary to the printing of the said index, namely, for type-writing a printer's copy of the card index and for proof reading, $5,000.

I am not referring to that item. I think the Senator from Utah will see in a moment that that is an additional piece of legislation which is not involved in the question I am raising.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I called the Senator's attention to it for the purpose of asking whether he did not think that by that language Congress was indicating a desire that that work should be first entered upon?

Mr. HEYBURN. I think not. That was in 1907.

I desire, first, to make some remarks in regard to the period between 1906, when this item first appeared in the appropriation bill, and that date, as well as since that date.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. One further inquiry. My understanding is that the index of the statutes since 1873 has already been My understanding is that the index of the statutes since 1843 has already been completed, so that no part of the appropriation now proposed can be used for that purpose. Am I correct about that?

Mr. HEYBURN. To this extent, Mr. President: I have in my hand a volume which states upon the back to be "Scott and Beaman—Index. Analysis of the Federal Statutes. Volume I. General and Permanent Law, 1873–1907."

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Now, if I am correct about that, in suggesting that the work of indexing since 1873 has been completed, then no part of the present appropriation can be used for that purpose. Necessarily it will all be used for the purpose of indexing the statutes prior to 1873.

Mr. HEYBURN. I was under such an impression until I received this communication, under date of January 15, which states as follows:

Relative to the status of the indexing of the laws of the United States, at the present time the laws of a general nature, from 1873 up till last year, have been indexed and printed in one volume. This took one and one-half years.

The men are now working on the local laws passed during that period.

That is, from 1873 up to the present date.

These include the laws relating to the District of Columbia, Alaska, Porto Rico, the Philippines, etc. This will likely be printed in two

After that has been done it is the intention to index all laws from the beginning of the Government down to 1873.

The best estimate that can be made is that with the present force it will take five years yet to complete the work.

If allowed the two additional assistants included in the bill, it will probably take three years yet in which to complete the work.

There is a very concise statement of the present status of this These persons propose not to index the Revised Statutes from the beginning, as was contemplated when this appropria-tion was first made, but they propose to consume two or three years in the preliminary work of indexing the special laws that have been enacted since 1873.

Now, nothing is more needed or was more needed at the time the first provision was made for this work than an index for the Statutes at Large of the United States in order that they may be readily referred to. There is no index in existence that covers them all, each volume containing its own index; and recognizing the importance of that work, Congress made this appropriation, with the view of having the Statutes at Large indexed, commencing at the beginning. That was the purpose. indexed, commencing at the beginning. That was the purpose. An examination of the discussion in this Chamber upon that question leaves no doubt as to that conclusion.

But we are met with the proposition that this system has been approved by the Judiciary Committee of both Houses of Congress. That statement is not borne out by the record. year after this work was commenced the chairman of the Judiciary Committee is shown to have sent the following communication to the persons engaged upon this work:

COMMITTEE OF THE JUDICIARY, UNITED STATES SENATE, Washington, D. C., March 1, 1907.

Hon. Herbert Putnam, Librarian of Congress, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I have to advise you that at a meeting of the Judiciary Committee of the Senate, held this day, the following resolution was agreed to:

"Whereas the Librarian of Congress has, under the provisions of an act of June 30, 1906, submitted to the Judiciary Committee of the Senate for its approval the plan of an index to the Statutes at Large;

Senate for its approval that and
"Whereas this committee has had such plan examined by some of its members, who find it to be satisfactory and suitable for the objects intended: Therefore be it "Ordered, That the plan be, and the same is hereby, approved, and that a notice of this approval shall be sent this day to the Librarian of Congress by the chairman of this committee."

Yours, truly,

C. D. CLARK, Chairman.

Mr. President, I have secured at the room of the Committee on the Judiciary the volume I have before me, which, upon its back says:

Library of Congress, law library. Headings and subheadings for the index of the federal statutes. Prepared by the law library. Draft of a classification prepared for the approval of the Judiciary Committee of Congress, under act of Congress approved June 30, 1906, and submitted for the criticism of all who have occasion to use the indexes to the federal statutes.

That is in blank as to volume, page, or reference to the law. It contains merely a system upon which this work was to be based or that was to be used in doing this work. But it has no reference to the fact that they were proposing to commence in 1873, because this system is applicable to the Statutes at Large of the United States, commencing from the beginning. That volume I obtained at the committee room.

Now, here is an extract from the minutes of the Judiciary Committee of the Senate regarding a proposed index to the statutes, and it is dated March 1, 1907:

Whereas the Librarian of Congress has, under the provisions of an ct of June 30, 1906, submitted to the Judiciary Committee of the enate for its approval the plan of an index to the Statutes at Large;

That is, this volume-

Whereas this committee has had such plan examined by some of its members, who find it to be satisfactory and suitable for the objects intended: Therefore be it

Ordered, That the plan be, and the same is hereby, approved and that a notice of this approval shall be sent this day to the Librarian of Congress by the chairman of this committee.

Mr. President, all of that referred to the work provided to be done by the act of 1906-the item in the sundry civil act. When this question was up for consideration, this is what occurred. I read from the Congressional Record, volume 40, part 9, page 8846, June 21 of that year. The question being on agreeing to this amendment in the sundry civil bill, Mr. Spooner said:

this amendment in the sundry civil bill, Mr. Spooner said:

I hope the Senate will not agree to the amendment of the committee. The preparation of the indexes which are provided for by that clause of the bill involves a very small expenditure of money. I have looked into the matter with a good deal of care, and I think it very important that the work should be done, and done under the auspices under which I am sure it will be done if the provision is left in the bill; that is, under the auspices of men in the Library who are lawyers and well educated. It is a matter which will make it of very great value. It is not a code. As I understand, it is proposed to have it in the Library, so that if a Senator wants to know the statute law upon a particular subject he can obtain the information, and obtain it accurately, in a very few moments. There is nothing of a job in it. The Senator will understand that the well-educated lawyer is a man admirably adapted for that sort of work, and that work ought not to be done by laymen. There are different methods of indexing statutes.

Mr. Halle. If the Senator will allow me, I will say that the committee had very little information in regard to the matter, and struck it out on the sugestion that the House itself had not completed its consideration. I am not sure but what the House has since then, under a suspension of the rules, voted for a proposition that covers the matter. The main object of the Senate amendment was that information might be gotten in conference or by action on the part of the House. That is why the committee struck out the provision.

Mr. Spooner. The matter was very carefully examined by Mr. Littlefield, who went into it, I am informed, very thoroughly. I myself have felt very greatly, and I suppose other Senators have also, the need of an accurate and thoroughly well-prepared index of the statutes. The amendment involves a small sum. There is no committed by Congress to any publication of it hereafter. It will be made in the Library; it will be kept there

That is the end of that discussion so far as it is pertinent. Now, those are the circumstances under which this legislation first came before Congress. I think it is stated in one of these reports approximately what the expense would be. The matter came up for consideration again in the sundry civil bill on January 14, 1907, the succeeding session of Congress. Mr. Spooner said on that occasion:

Mr. President, I sincerely hope that the conference committee will not omit an adequate provision, narrowing it so as to eliminate the objection which I myself take to it, for I think they would thereby be doing the public service, and especially the congressional work, an injury. The statutes of the United States have not been well digested. Congress did provide for a digest of existing statutes, I think at the price of $10,000, was it not? The price was not fixed, I am informed, but that was the sum asked. The work was done and submitted to the Judiciary Committee, I believe, and was examined, probably, by one or two members of the committee. It is in four volumes, as I recollect. I have had occasion to examine that index, and it is worth the money, and it ought to be paid.

Upon that basis these men have gone forward and made an index of what was already indexed. The Revised Statutes are thoroughly indexed; the Supplements to the Revised Statutes have been thoroughly indexed; and there was no necessity for the reindexing of the laws after 1873. It was not claimed that there was any necessity for doing such work at the time the appropriation was made. It was claimed, and very properly, that an appropriation should be made for the indexing of the statutes prior to the revision, and it was for that purpose that the money was appropriated. No member of this body then or now supposed for a moment that it was the intention of Congress to make an appropriation that has now involved the Treasury in an expenditure approximating $50,000 for doing that which had already been done. The appropriations for the clerical help alone up to this time amount to $17,520.

There has not been a start made to do the work for which the appropriation was made. But, on the contrary, these folks engaged in this work say it will take five years to complete the engaged in this work say it will take live years to complete the work, and if we are to indulge them they will add $50,000 to the cost of this work. For the money expended we have received nothing of value. No part of the intention of Congress has been realized so far. So I have raised objection to the continuance in the appropriation bill of this item, unless it shall require in terms which can not be mistaken or avoided that the original intention of Congress shall be carried into effect; that is, the indexing of the Statutes at Large, commencing at the beginning.

They have, according to their theory of the intention of Congress, commenced at the top and have spent four years nearly, three, in reindexing according to their own plans the Revised Statutes and the Supplements to the Revised Statutes. I know that every member of this body appreciates the necessity of indexing the statutes.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly.

Mr. CARTER. Does not the index being prepared refer to the pages of the Statutes at Large instead of referring to the Revised Statutes or the Supplements?

Mr. HEYBURN. I will say to the Senator from Montana that this illustrates the entire system. I will take—Securing of contracts; corporations or firms, persons interested in, not to act for Government; penalty; Revised Statutes, 1873.

That is the index to the Revised Statutes.

There is no attempt here to index anything prior to the Revised Statutes, which while they bear date "1878," of course, as we all know, represent the work of the revision of 1873.

Mr. CARTER. Then I understand the Senator to say that the index being prepared refers to the section in the Revised Statutes or Supplement, and likewise to the page and book of the Statutes at Large?

Mr. HEYBURN. No.
Mr. CARTER. It does not?
Mr. HEYBURN. It refers only to the page and book of the Statutes at Large, when it passes the revision and enters upon the Supplements to the Revised Statutes.

Mr. CARTER. I fully agree with the Senator from Idaho in his conclusions that the preparation of the index, proceeding upon that line, is manifestly not responsive to the purpose of Congress, nor does it possess anything of any value.

Mr. HEYBURN. Not at all. I will cite another instance, if the Senator will permit me to interrupt him, to emphasize that idea. I will read this item:

Necessary to making of contracts; exception; Revised Statutes 3679, 3732, 5503.

There is no other reference. There is no reference that will enable one to turn to the Statutes at Large upon which that statute was based.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly.
Mr. SUTHERLAND. Does not the volume to which the Senator from Idaho is referring purport to be an index of the statutes since 1873?

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes; it purports to be.
Mr. SUTHERLAND. Then, necessarily it must begin with the Revised Statutes. It does not reach back of the Revised Statutes, and therefore there is no necessity of putting into that volume any reference to the Statutes at Large preceding the adoption of the Revised Statutes.

Mr. HEYBURN. I thoroughly realize that.
Mr. SUTHERLAND. I understand that that would be included in a separate volume.

Now, let me ask the Senator from Idaho another question in this connection. I understand him to say that this is an index merely of the Revised Statutes and the Supplements since the Revised Statutes were adopted.

Mr. HEYBURN. That is correct.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Is not the Senator mistaken about Is it not an index of the general law included in the Revised Statutes, in the Supplements to the Revised Statutes, and in the Statutes at Large adopted since 1873?

Mr. HEYBURN. I have so stated; but that was not what the appropriation was made for.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Doubtless the Senator desires to be fair. I called his attention a moment ago to the provision contained in volume 34, Statutes at Large, page 1399, which reads as follows:

To expedite the preparation of that part of the new index to the Statutes at Large, which is an index to the statutes enacted since the year 1873, and to provide for the additional service in the law library necessary to the printing of the said index, namely, for typewriting a printers' copy of the card index and for proof reading, $5,000, the same to be available until the close of the fiscal year 1908.

I submit to the Senator from Idaho whether that is not a clear indication that Congress desired that first of all in the preparation of this work an index should be prepared of the statutes passed since 1873, regarding that as of paramount importance?

Mr. HEYBURN. That is an entirely different and separate item. Congress may have intended to provide for a great many things in connection with the indexing of the statutes, but that is not the provision to which I am directing my remarks.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I understand that, but the language of the statute making the appropriation isto expedite the preparation of that part of the index which is an index to the statutes passed since 1873.

Whether it was for another purpose, or for the purpose to which the Senator from Idaho is now addressing himself, I submit to the Senator whether it did not indicate a desire on the part of Congress to regard that work as of paramount importance?

Mr. HEYBURN. Possibly so.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. And would not the officials to whom the work was intrusted be justified in concluding from that that it was the desire of Congress that they should first enter upon that work?

Mr. HEYBURN. I think there is no foundation for such a conclusion. Congress doubtless, when it made the appropriation, which is of an entirely different sum and an entirely different language, may have thought that it would like to have those laws indexed. If it did, I think it gave but very meager consideration to the question. But the item to which I am directing my attention in the bill now under consideration is not that work. This item, on page 38 of the bill, refers to the other It refers to the work provided for in 1906. The item that is under consideration does not refer, in my judgment, to the class of work to which the Senator from Utah has called my attention.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly.

Mr. CARTER. Do I correctly understand the Senator in his conclusion, to wit, that the indexing for the period covered by the Revised Statutes and the Supplements practically constitutes merely a copy of the indexes of those books?

Mr. HEYBURN. Merely a transcript.

Mr. CARTER. Paraphrased somewhat, but essentially copies of the indexes already existing?

Mr. HEYBURN. And paid for at large expense.

Mr. CARTER. Most assuredly. And that that copy has cost $17,000?

Mr. HEYBURN. Seventeen thousand five hundred dollars was carried in the appropriation acts for 1906, 1907, and 1908, and this bill provides for $10,700.

Mr. CARTER. If the Senator is not mistaken, there is surely serious need for the consideration of this kind of an expenditure. I venture to say that the indexes to the Revised Statutes and the Supplements could be copied at a cost not exceeding $1,000.

Mr. HEYBURN. Or the half of it.
Mr. CARTER. Or the half of it, as the Senator states, If, as a matter of fact, the work thus far executed only comprehends really a copy of those indexes, at a cost of $17,000, some very serious mistake must have been made somewhere.

I have not investigated the question, and therefore make my statement upon the view expressed by the Senator from Idaho. I wish to impress the Senate with my understanding, based upon the information he gives, that in three separate items Congress appropriated $17,500 for the performance of a work which merely consists of copying the indexes to the Revised Statutes and the Supplements, with light paraphrasing and change.

Mr. NELSON. The Statutes at Large? Mr. CARTER. Not the Statutes at Large, but the Revised Statutes of the United States, now possessing good indexes, as a rule. I can scarcely credit the statement that this can be possible.

Mr. WARREN rose.

Mr. CARTER. Does the Senator in charge of the bill have any information on the subject?

Mr. WARREN. With the consent of the Senator from Idaho, I will say that this matter of indexes has been shifted around from one place to another and from one committee to another for several years, and I have wished, during the time, to keep out of it as much as possible and let the lawyers of the Senate settle it among themselves. But I am bound to say that the expense of this work did not originate or commence in the Library. We had various bills and there were various appropriations before that, and the Librarian did not ask for this work. In fact, the Librarian not only did not ask for it, but did not want it. However, it was finally decided by the Committee on Appropriations and by the Senate and House that, in order to get out of the difficulty and to secure perfect and expert work, it should be carried over to the Library. It is over there under a special act and is no part of the Library proper. The volumes are not printed and controlled by the Library.

In fact, they have to pay for the copies they wish for their own use. Here is the first volume [exhibiting]. I presume the Senator from Idaho has seen it.

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes; I have it here.

Mr. WARREN. It is the first volume of what was expected to be a full and, you might say, an expert index of all the statutes of the United States.

Mr. CARTER. The Senator from Idaho makes the statement that the work as executed up-to-date commenced with the Revised Statutes and copied the index, only elaborating, of course, as the book indicates.

Mr. WARREN. I bardly think the Senator from Idaho said that, or could mean it. The work already done does not show

Mr. CARTER. The book held by the Senator from Wyoming is as large or nearly as large as a volume of the Revised Stat-The index must be as large as the text.

Mr. WARREN. This is merely the first volume.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Utah? Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I think the Senator from Idaho surely does not mean to say that the index to which he is referring is a mere copy of the index of the Revised Statutes so far as it refers to the Revised Statutes. I have had occasion to examine it, though not very thoroughly, but I have examined it suffi-ciently to satisfy me that it is not a copy of the index of the Revised Statutes. I understand from some of the people who are engaged in the work that the index was made by a page-topage reading of the original laws, and that it is essentially a new index. The volume of it would indicate that.

Mr. HEYBURN. There is nothing upon the face of it to indicate that they investigated the original enactments. Of course many of the items in the Revised Statutes are based upon laws enacted half a century or more ago. No reference to that fact is made in this index. They refer only to the sections of the Revised Statutes.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President-

Mr. HEYBURN. Just a moment. I want to be perfectly fair and candid in this matter.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. If the Senator will permit me, in this connection I submit to him that it would not be proper in that index, which is an index of the laws passed since 1873, to refer to the former statutes. That reference would be made in the indexes which were subsequently made.

Mr. HEYBURN. If I may be permitted, that there may be no misapprehension, I will state that the index of the Revised Statutes refers to the page in the Revised Statutes and not to the law that was carried into the Revised Statutes showing its origin. This is the language of the item in the appropriation bill upon which this is based and which shows what they were to do.

To enable the Librarian of Congress to direct the law librarian to prepare a new index of the Statutes at Large.

That is what the index was to be. It was not to be an index of the Revised Statutes or the Supplements, but of the Statutes at Large.

Mr. WARREN. Will the Senator read the few words which follow there?

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes; I have already read it all, but I will read any part of it:

In accordance with the plan previously approved by the Judiciary Committees of both Houses.

I have the plan. Senators can only understand the plan which was submitted by seeing it, and I will ask Senators to notice what the plan consisted of. I see the chairman of the Judiciary Committee present. I think he will bear me out in saying that that is the plan which was approved, and that it consisted merely of the plan as to the form and not the substance.

Mr. WARREN. I have a little brief here of the authority by which the work went to the Library. Would the Senator object to having it read?

Mr. HEYBURN. Not at all. Mr. WARREN. Then I ask that this brief may be read for information.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

INDEX TO THE STATUTES AT LARGE. [Bill, p. 38, lines 9-20.]

What volumes were to be indexed?

The original appropriation did not limit to any particular volumes of the Statutes at Large the ground to be covered by the index. It reads as follows:

"To enable the Librarian of Congress to direct the law librarian to prepare a new index to the Statutes at Large, in accordance with a plan previously approved by the Judiciary Committees of both Houses of Congress." (34 Stat. L., 753.)

Owing to the fact that the approval of the Senate Judiciary Committee was not obtained until March 1, 1907, no indexing was done until that date, but on March 4, 1907, Congress clearly expressed its intention as to which portion of the index should be first prepared by putting in the general deficiency act an appropriation:

"To expedite the preparation of that part of the new index to the Statutes at Large which is an index to the statutes enacted since the year 1873." (34 Stat. L., 1399.)

An examination of the debates in Congress when the index appropriation was under discussion will show that those responsible for the legislation had in mind an index to all the Statutes at Large.

June 15, 1906, Mr. Littlefield, offering the item for the first time as an amendment to the sundry civil bill, said: "This amendment, or this provision, will provide for scientific indexing of legislation up to date. * * * We have to-day 33 volumes of the Statutes at Large. There is no scientific index of them."

On the same day Mr. Littlefield read on the floor of the House what he called the "general scope of the proposition." One item of this "proposition" was as follows: "Index anew the 33 volumes (35,390 pages) of the Statutes at Large."

When the bill came up in the Senate on June 21, 1906, Senator Spooner said: "It [the index] will cover all phases of every class of subjects dealt with by our statutes."

On December 10, 1906, while the legislative, executive, and judicial bill carrying the index appropriation was under discussion in the House, the only objection made was that the item as drafted permitted the law library to prepare indexes and digests for others than Congress.

When the bill reached the Senate, this item was discussed on January 14, 1907. The same objection was made as in the House, and it was further suggested that the necessary approval of the Senate Judiciary Committee hefore any further work could be d

NEED OF FIRST INDEXING LAWS SINCE 1873.

NEED OF FIRST INDEXING LAWS SINCE 1873.

The indexes to the Revised Statutes and supplements are contained in three separate volumes. There has been no supplement since 1901. Hence the necessity for preparing Volume I of the index, which has already been published, and which is the result of a careful search of the Statutes at Large since 1873, for all general and permanent legislation. It should be of great assistance to all persons seeking to find the law on any particular subject and especially to the Joint Committee on Revision of the Laws and to individual Members of Congress interested in bills reported from that committee.

There is a large mass of important legislation not contained in the supplements because not general and permanent in character. This is scattered through the separate volumes of the Statutes at Large, and at present is entirely inaccessible. The second part of the index will be a guide to all this legislation. The third part will index all legislation of Congress prior to 1873.

The new revision will not make useless the index to the Statutes at Large.

There will always be need for getting at the material in the Statutes at Large. As pointed out by Judge Smith of Iowa, in the House on June 15, 1906, and by Attorney-General Moody on June 12, 1906, in a letter to Representative Kennedy, cases will often arise where it will be necessary to know what was the law before the revision was charted.

enacted.

The revision will include only general and permanent legislation. The new index will bring to light all legislation, including such important subjects as the District of Columbia, Indian Territory, Alaska, and other Territories, and the thousands of items of appropriation acts and temporary provisions, useful as precedents.

INDEX NOT A DUPLICATION OF WORK AT STATE DEPARTMENT.

The index will not duplicate the work now done at the State Department, which indexes only the acts of each Congress as they appear. The new index will make permanently and conveniently accessible all the legislation of all the sessions of Congress from 1789 down to the present date.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President— Mr. HEYBURN. That includes the work to be done in the index for five years, and my object in raising this question is to see that the work we directed to be done shall be done now.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly. Mr. NELSON. I have looked through the index that has been prepared, and I think the Senator unintentionally fails to state the full effect and purport of the index. In examining it, I find it not only is an index of the Revised Statutes, but of the volumes of the Statutes at Large since that date. You can turn to almost any item there in the book and you will find the Revised Statutes first referred to and then afterwards the Statutes at Large by the number. So I think this may be fairly called an "Index of the Revised Statutes and of the Statutes at Large passed since 1873."

Mr. HEYBURN. I think I so stated.

Mr. NELSON. I will state what is the defect in the revision, to my mind-but whether the revisers are to be blamed for it or not, I am not prepared to say. There are many portions of the Revised Statutes that are based upon older statutes. In the Revised Statutes they are generally referred to in the margin. I think this index ought, in every instance, to refer to the original statute that is found in the Revised Statutes. In that respect it seems incomplete; but whether in omitting that they did violence to their duty, I am not prepared to say

Mr. CARTER. I call the attention of the Senator from Minnesota, for instance, to page 784 of the book, to which he refers for the purpose of answering a proposition he made. Where the index refers to the Statutes at Large, it does not at the same time make reference to the portion of the Revised Statutes in which the law is found; and where it refers to the section of the Revised Statutes it does not refer to the page in the Statutes at Large where the law can be found. Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I was pro-Mr. President, I was proceeding to give one item that would be applicable to all where they have indexed other than the Revised Statutes as to the manner in which they do it. Under the head of "Appropriations," on page 934, for instance, they say:

Contracts in excess of-

That refers to appropriations-not to be made; penalty

First, it gives the Revised Statutes, 3079, 3732, and 5503. Then it gives the subsequent legislation since the Revised Statutes, and refers not to the Supplements, but to the Statutes at Large since that time, and in no instance does it carry its reference back to the statutes from which the Revised Statutes were taken. I will give an instance. We will take section 3709 of the Revised Statutes. In the Revised Statutes there is marginal reference made as follows:

ADVERTISEMENTS FOR PROPOSALS.

2 March, 1861, c. 84, s. 10, v. 12, p. 220. 22 June, 1874, c. 389, v. 18, p. 177.

All of that valuable information is omitted from this system of indexing. It is not as complete an index as that contained in the Revised Statutes, for in every case in the Revised Statutes, by marginal reference or index, you may turn to the law in the Statutes at Large upon which the provision in the Revised Statute rests. That should certainly have been carried into this system of indexing, because no lawyer or no legislator will fail to realize the importance often and often again of going back to the statute itself for the purpose of knowing what was in the minds of the revisers. All who refer to laws know the necessity for recurring back to the language of the statute, that you may know the history of a law, the purpose of its enactment, and its application.

I did not intend, when I addressed myself to this subject, to criticise the work of these men as to its accuracy, because it was my intention to take such steps as would lead to the performance of the work that was designated for them.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I understood the Senator to criticise this work because in a reference to the Revised Statutes reference is not also made to the Statutes at Large upon which the section of the Revised Statutes is based. The index to the Revised Statutes itself makes no such reference. The index to the Revised Statutes is simply an index of the Revised Statutes. and in order to find out the origin of a law you are obliged to turn to the Revised Statutes themselves and there you will find the marginal notes. This index will not in the future prevent that course from being pursued.

Mr. CARTER. It seems to be the contention of the Senator from Idaho that it is merely a copy of a part, at least, of the index.

Mr. HEYBURN. Well, it is a meager copy. been investigating the corresponding references in the index of the Statutes at Large and this index, and I find that the references in the index of the Revised Statutes are much more comprehensive and, I think, better expressed than the references in this new index.

As I said, I did not rise to criticise the details of this work, but I rise to criticise the doing of this work in preference to that which we delegated to these parties to be done. That was the purpose of my objection to this appropriation. As to this volume, there is nothing upon it to indicate that it is the property of the United States or that it is an official publication. I again call attention to the fact that it is designated as Scott and Beaman's Index Analysis of the Federal Statutes, Volume 1, General and Permanent Law from 1873 to 1907.

Mr. NELSON. Does the Senator know whether they intend to have it copyrighted in their own name?

Mr. HEYBURN. I do not. There are some things in connection with this work that I would not undertake to prophesy in regard to, but I do know that work that is authorized to be done by Congress and paid for out of the Public Treasury should not bear the names of private individuals and be placed upon the market under their names.

We have provided by appropriate legislation that this book shall be distributed as the Revised Statutes of the United States are distributed.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly.

Mr. NELSON. I desire to ask one more question. Does the Senator know whether the gentlemen who have carried on this revision are selling the books of indexes to outside parties?

Mr. HEYBURN. I would not suppose that they were at all. I am not here to attack these men as individuals; I am here to do what I can to rectify the misdirection or mistaken application of the instructions of Congress. I contend that when we instruct any body of men to do one thing, it is not competent for them to do something else in lieu of the thing we instructed them to do; that is all. One of these objects was meritorious and commendable, and the other was useless and a waste of money. But I simply want to call the attention of the Senate to this fact in order that, in passing upon the provision of the appropriation bill on page 38, they may at least know what they are doing and decide whether they want to perpetuate the misdoing of this work.
Mr. BURKETT. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly. Mr. BURKETT. Let me ask the Senator a question, so that we may know where we are going. I have had occasion, I will say, to use this index somewhat, and it seems to me that the observations the Senator makes as to omissions, perhaps, raise a question as to how large we want this index to be. If we are to undertake all that the Senator has suggested, we would have to call it an encyclopedia instead of an index. It would be an encyclopedia of law. But as the Senator has passed that matter over, is he raising the question of making this appropriation at this time?

Mr. HEYBURN.

Then, let me ask the Senator a question. Mr. BURKETT. As I understood from the statement made here by the Senator in charge of the bill, this part of the work has been done first, and the other part of it is now in early contemplation. If we really want what the Senate intended to have in the first place, we must make this appropriation, it seems to me.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Nebraska could not have been present during the entire consideration of this question.

Mr. BURKETT. Mr. President, I was.

Mr. HEYBURN. I read a communication which clearly set forth the order in which this committee, if we may call it such, intends to proceed, and I intend, if I can-to use a homely phrase-to head off and turn them in the right direction. They say, in response to an inquiry, that they propose now, instead of proceeding to the indexing of the Statutes at Large, to do something else. What is it? To index private statutes and something else. What is it? To index private stationaries special laws. Those can wait until we have what Congress special laws. Those can wait until appropriation. I am in favor wanted when it made the original appropriation. I am in favor of an appropriation to do that work, but I want this bill to be so amended that under this appropriation they can not do something else. I want this amendment so worded that the will of Congress will be carried out, and I want it so plainly expressed that there will be no question as to the will of Congress in this matter. It was for that purpose that I brought it up. I did not bring up the subject for the purpose of attacking the men who are doing the work, for they are, doubtless, men entitled to the respect of their fellow-men; but we must correct these errors when they arise, whether it be from our own inadvertence, our own insufficient expression, or whether it be from the misinterpretation placed upon our direction by some one else than those who are to serve us.

The work they have done in indexing the Revised Statutes and the Supplements up to date is complete. We do not need to make any appropriation for that work, as that work is complete and paid for. I want the amendment to confine the work hereafter to indexing the Revised Statutes, commencing with volume 1 and bringing them up to 1873. For that reason I have called the attention of the Senate to this provision, and I propose to offer an amendment to strike out, on page 38, from line 19 down to and including line 20.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Idaho proposes an amendment, which will be stated by the Secretary.

The Secretary. On page 30, after line 8, it is proposed to strike out all down to and including line 20.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. ELKINS. Mr. President, the point which the Senator from Idaho [Mr. HEYBURN] has just raised is a very important one, and if his objection is not explained or answered it seems to me his amendment should prevail, as I now understand it:

but I take the floor more particularly to speak on the question of the increased salaries provided in this appropriation bill for the circuit court judges, the district judges, the judges of the supreme court of the District of Columbia, the district court of appeals, and the judges of the Court of Claims, but more particularly as to the discrimination made against the judges of the Court of Claims in favor of other judges. I believe the Court of Claims to be a very important court, by whom very intricate and complicated questions have to be determined, where large sums are involved, as well as the interpretation of the laws, the Constitution, and so forth. I can not see why the compensation of the judges of that court should not be equal to that of the judges of the circuit and district courts.

This question has been before Congress, and before the Senate particularly, at various times. I want to read from some remarks made by Senator Bayard when he offered an amendment to increase the salaries of the judges of the Court of Claims, so as to make them next in amount to the salaries of the judges of the Supreme Court of the United States.

Bayard said in the Senate:

Mr. President, I can not imagine how it has been that, in providing an advance of the salaries of the judges of the Supreme Court "an equally meritorious class of men," those whose line of duty is upon quite as high a grade, whose responsibilities are just as great, requiring almost, if not quite, as high a degree of professional skill, as much labor, and certainly as high qualifications, the judges of the Court of Claims should have been wholly omitted. They are entitled, in my opinion, to almost, if not quite, as high a salary as the judges of the Supreme Court. As I said before, the grade of the questions with which they are occupied for a large portion of the year is quite as high as that of any of our judges.

That is strong language, coming from a former very distinguished Democratic Senator.

At that time the subject was widely discussed in the public press, and I should like to read from comments made on it by two or three of the leading newspapers of the United States.

I now read from the New York Times:

This court is only second in importance to the Supreme Court of the United States, with which its jurisdiction is coextensive.

Then the New York Tribune said:

Nowhere is there greater need of ability and integrity than in this court, which must decide every year between the United States and individuals upon claims involving millions of dollars.

The New York Evening Post said:

It must be conceded that its importance equals that of any other court under the Government, with the single exception of the Supreme Court; and while, by dignity and power and historic repute, the Supreme Court of course outranks all others, the amounts of money and the legal questions involved in most of the cases coming before it are not greater or more difficult than the amounts and questions in cases before the Court of Claims.

The Judiciary Committee of the Senate, through its then chairman, Senator Hoar, on the 19th of March, 1896, thus characterized the jurisdiction of the Court of Claims:

To the general jurisdiction of the court Congress has, from time to time, added a great number of subjects of special jurisdiction which, in the magnitude of the amounts involved and the novel and varied character of the cases tried, probably exceeds that of any other court of original jurisdiction in the world.

And after thus setting forth in detail the jurisdiction of the court, the committee thus concluded its report to the Senate:

It may therefore be reiterated that while the compensation of the judges of the Court of Claims has been singularly overlooked, no judges in the United States have been so weighted with personal responsibility, and no court has had such vast and varied and difficult subjects of jurisdiction committed to it or has received more repeated manifestations of trust and confidence from the legislative power.

At a later date, having reference to the same subject, Attorney-General Griggs thus addressed the Senate committee:

I also think that the proposed increase of salary is just, and ought to be granted. There are no judges in any of the inferior courts of the United States who perform more responsible or difficult work than the judges of the Court of Claims. The proposed increase puts them on a par with judges of the circuit courts of the United States, with whom they are at least equal in dignity and importance. I have the honor to give my very cordial approval of the proposed amendment.

Mr. President, in the bill reported from the Committee on Appropriations the recommendation of the former Attorney-General and the words that I have quoted from Senator Bayard and Judge Hoar do not seem to have prevailed. The committee has made a distinction and given the judges of the circuit and district courts of the United States more than is re-ceived by the judges of the Court of Claims. The importance of the Court of Claims was duly considered at the time of its establishment and the salary of its judges was then fixed at $4,000, while that of the judges of the Supreme Court of the United States was only $6,000 and that of the judges of the supreme court of the District of Columbia only $1,600. The judges of the Court of Claims, when the act was passed creating their offices, were allowed salaries next to those of the judges of the Supreme Court of the United States; but of late there has been a disposition to pay them less than is received by the judges of the circuit courts and the judges of the district courts.

It seems to me that this is a kind of discrimination that tends to lessen the dignity of the Court of Claims. I will not say it degrades it, but certainly it is putting it in a false light.

I think the judges of that court are entitled to just as much compensation as the judges of the circuit courts and district courts and the judges of the supreme court of the District of Columbia and the court of appeals of the District of Columbia.

Now, I should like to read an extract from a letter of the late Senator Allison bearing on this subject. He surely was as careful as any man who has ever led the Appropriations Committee of the Senate when a question of this kind was being considered. He said:

There is pending a bill for the increase of the salaries of the judges of the Supreme Court, circuit courts, and district courts; and should this be done, I will do what I can to place the judges of the Court of Claims upon an equality certainly with the district judges.

I desire also to read an extract from the report of Assistant Attorney-General Thompson for 1908. Mr. Thompson was a judge of the Court of Claims, I think, and was subsequently appointed Assistant Attorney-General. He says in his report:

appointed Assistant Attorney-General. He says in his report:

In the foregoing report I have referred specially to but few of the many very important cases and briefly to the nature of the litigation pending in the Court of Claims. The great responsibility resting upon the court is apparent, and I can not refer thereto in more fitting terms than in the language of my predecessor, Assistant Attorney-General Van Orsdel, now justice of the court of appeals:

"There is probably no trial court in the country upon which there is imposed business of equal magnitude. Its jurisdiction is so comprehensive, the importance of the questions passed upon so great, and the number of cases annually disposed of so numerous that the work of this court becomes one of first importance."

Leite these reports and statements of these distinguished men

I cite these reports and statements of these distinguished men in support of my contention that whatever else is done in respect to these salaries, the judges of the Court of Claims should have as much as the judges of the circuit courts of the United States, certainly as much as the judges of the districts courts and the judges of the court of appeals and the supreme court of the District of Columbia. I hope that this view will be acquiesced in by the committee and that at the proper time the Senate will agree to it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. HEYBURN].

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I merely want to say that the amendment as offered by the Senator from Idaho cuts out the entire paragraph of the text of the bill as it came from The House text was changed by the Senate committee only in two items, one by adding an assistant, and the other in the total appropriation. Of course we shall have to meet the matter in conference, but under this motion it would naturally follow that the work would stop and the men would be discharged after the end of the present fiscal year.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, at that point, if the Senator will permit an interruption, I will say that I have prepared an amendment which obviates that objection. I have prepared an amendment to be offered if the Senate strikes out the present language. The proposed amendment reads as follows:

To index the Statutes at Large of the United States from volume 1 to and including the current volume of such statutes: For one chief assistant, $3,000—

I will just say that the proposed amendment enumerates the same force and the same salaries, but it confines them to the

Mr. CULBERSON. Simply as a matter of convenience, I suggest to the Senator would it not be better for him to move what he has just read as a substitute for the language of the House bill-

Mr. HEYBURN. That would answer the same purpose.

Mr. CULBERSON. Rather than take two motions?
Mr. HEYBURN. Very well. Then, with the permission of the Senate, I will withdraw the amendment I have offered, and in lieu thereof move to strike out the present text and substitute for it the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The Secretary. On page 38, after line 8, it is proposed to strike out all down to and including line 20, and in lieu thereof to insert:

To index the Statutes at Large of the United States, from volume 1 to and including the current volume of such statutes: For 1 chief assistant, $3,000; 1 assistant, $2,400; 1 assistant, $1,800; 1 assistant, $1,200; 1 assistant, $00; 2 assistants, at $720 each; in all, $10,740, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to complete said work, said work to be submitted to the Judiciary Committees of the two Houses of Congress for inspection and approval.

Mr. HEYBURN. I will say that the amendment provides for the same salaries in the same form as the provision at present in the bill. I have confined it, however, to the work of indexing the Revised Statutes.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, continuing what I was about to say, this matter of indexing the laws of the United States has been a wearisome subject for the Committee on Appropriations for many a long year. In fact, I know of no subject that we approach with more dread than we do this, because it appears to the committee that there are constantly changing ideas on the part of those to whom we apply for information regard-

This work is being proceeded with under orders that were made complete by the chairmen of the Committees on the Judiciary of the House and the Senate, and by the action of the Senate and House. Under all these circumstances I suppose that the complaint now must be (for it can be no other) not that we started wrong, not that the orders were incorrectly made, or that the work was placed in the wrong hands, but that it is not being done as it was expected to be done by those who submitted it to the Library. Am I correct about that?

Mr. HEYBURN. Or as the Judiciary Committee thought it was to be done and instructed it to be done.

Mr. WARREN. Very well. Mr. President, as I said before, if we strike out the text of this paragraph of the House bill and substitute other language in its place, we must meet this matter in conference, and I want to express a desire if the amendment shall be adopted-and, of course, I hope it may not pass, and I shall vote against it—that we may have full and complete information from the standpoint of those who object to the language as it is in the bill as it came from the House.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, the language of the original enactment providing for this index system was clear, specific, and unmistakable. It required that the Statutes at Large of the United States, and not a part or portion of the statutes, should be indexed. Through some means Congress was later persuaded to begin at the last of the work instead of beginning at the first of the task, so that the work, so far as it has progressed, represented in these volumes presents the same identical case that would be presented if we were to undertake "a" in one volume, a quarter way through in another volume, and the remainder of the distance until we exhaust the letter "a" in a third volume. The inconvenience of subdividing into separate volumes the letters of the alphabet anyone can perceive. When you take up a dictionary and look for the letter "a," or the definition of a word under that letter, you naturally expect every word in the language beginning with the letter "a to be found in one place and not scattered through a series of volumes.

This work, so far as it has been completed, is utterly valueless, except in so far as it may be used as copy in the completion of the work which Congress by the original enactment intended to have executed.

I am not quite certain that the amendment of the Senator from Idaho [Mr. HEYBURN] is sufficiently specific or provides proper control. I do not think that the public money should be expended in the preparation of this work, to be submitted later to the Judiciary Committee of each House, for what will approval or disapproval amount to after the work has been completed and paid for?

Mr. HEYBURN. A mere form——
Mr. CARTER. I think the amendment should provide that this work should be executed under the direction and control of the Judiciary Committees of the respective Houses, so that we shall not hereafter be confronted with this shifting and changing which, whatever the motive may have been, will result inevitably in extending this work through a series of years and involving a very large, indeed an abnormally large, appropria-tion of money for its final completion, and when completed in this line of sections or segments it will be in no sense responsive to the demand of Congress,

It was intended, for instance, whenever the words "War Department" appeared for the first time in a Statute at Large of the United States, they should be indexed and the words "War Department" traced down to the last enactment in the last Statute at Large issued. Such can not be the case beginning at volume 20 of the statutes and indexing thence to the end, then going back to the beginning, or No. 1, and doubling over the ground a second time.

I submit to the Senator from Idaho that, instead of submitting this work for the approval of the committees after its completion, it should be executed under the direction and control of the respective committees.

There is now, Mr. President, an index on the files of the Senate somewhere-copies of that index are in the Judiciary Committee, I am informed-covering this identical ground. That index was prepared many years ago at the suggestion of the lamented Senator Hoar of Massachusetts. It was paid for by Congress, or, at least, a proposition to pay for it was made.

Mr. BACON. I will say to the Senator that he is correct in his statement that the work was done and the volumes actually printed—that is, a certain number of them—and compensation for it was recommended by the Judiciary Committee of the Senate; but the Senate did not see fit to appropriate the money, and I think the work has never been paid for.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I beg the Senator's pardon. Congress did appropriate a sum; not the sum recommended by the Judiciary Committee, but a sum accepted finally by the party who did the work.

Mr. BACON. That must have been at a subsequent session, then. I know, if I am not mistaken in my recollection, that when the Judiciary Committee first recommended it, it was disapproved of by Congress.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. My recollection is that Congress appropriated $5,000 for the work.

Mr. BACON. The Judiciary Committee recommended $10,000, but I was not aware of the fact that a lesser amount was sub-sequently appropriated. I know that at first it was refused.

Mr. CARTER. My recollection is that $5,000 was appropriated for that work.

Mr. President, the 34 volumes of the Statutes at Large should be indexed in good form and regular order, excluding, of course, the cost of printing, which is not contemplated by this item, for the sum of $10,000.

In view of the fact that a partial preparation of an index from 1873 down to the present date has already absorbed over $17,000, it is manifest, to my mind, that some kind of supervision is necessary in order to secure the execution of this work within a reasonable time and at reasonable cost. Therefore I hope the Senator from Idaho will accept an amendment to his amendment, striking out "subject to the approval of" and inserting "subject to the direction and control of the committees."

Mr. HEYBURN. I cheerfully accept the amendment, and will ask that it be incorporated in the amendment which I have offered.

I neglected to say, as I intended, that a joint committee of the two Houses of Congress is now, and has been for two years or more, engaged in revising the laws of the United States. That work has progressed to the point where this body—the Senate—has passed upon its work on the criminal code, and it is now pending in the other body and nearly completed, so far as its consideration is concerned. More than half the laws of the United States have been prepared by the joint committee, of which I have the honor to be chairman; more than half the work is done and ready for the consideration of Congress whenever Congress is ready to consider it; and the entire work of revising or preparing it for the consideration of Congress has not cost anything like the sum which has been expended for this imperfect indexing.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Can the Senator from Idaho state to the Senate how much the preliminary work performed by the commission appointed by Congress, preceding the appointment of the committee, cost?

Mr. HEYBURN. It is with a feeling of humiliation that I state approximately the cost of the work of the commission. I have not the exact figures, but I am informed that it is more than $200,000, and I am not proud of it. I will undertake to say that the committee of which the Senator from Utah is a member could have done the work in a quarter of the time for one-tenth of the expense.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I agree with the Senator.

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes. I do not care to drag into this discussion the cost of that lay commission which undertook to codify and revise the laws of the United States and protracted and prolonged its work until we were compelled to fix a day when it should cease and when its report should be made. I will not enter upon a criticism of that injudicious expenditure, because it is not necessary.

But I say that the work of your joint committee in revising these laws will include, of necessity, a reindexing; will include a repetition of this same work that it may conform to the new print of the Revised Statutes; and whenever the Senate or Congress is ready to receive the work of that committee, it is ready for its consideration, and there will be no delay about it. It has involved a vast amount of work. It has not been a question of copying indexes. It has been a question of tracing every law back to its foundation and comparing it and checking it with every other law, in order that the law as it is to-day may appear in that revision.

Mr. WARREN. Will the Senator from Idaho yield for a question?

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly. Mr. WARREN. I desire to ask the Senator at this point whether or not he has made any use of the index, the first volume of which is under his hand, and whether in proceeding with his work it has been of use to him?

Mr. HEYBURN. We have never seen it. I never saw a copy of it until within the last two or three days, and we have never found ourselves in the necessity of inquiring as to its existence, because everything in it is done as well or better in the Revised Statutes and the supplements to them.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President, I understood the Senator from Idaho to accept the suggestion of the Senator from Montana. A word as to what it is proposed in the amendment the Judiciary Committee shall do. As one member of the committee, I am unwilling to assume the responsibility carried by the amendment. For a committee of this body—the Judiciary Committee or otherwise—to take charge of a division or a bureau that is in constant operation, it seems to me, is asking more than ought to be asked.

I make the suggestion to the Senator from Idaho that in place of the Judiciary Committees of the two bodies he substitute the joint committee of the two Houses that now have the subject of our laws under their consideration and who will not complete their work, as I understand, for some time yet. frankly say to the Senator and to the Senate that the Judiciary Committee will have absolutely no time to devote to this work, and the Senate could not expect good service in that particular under the conditions and circumstances,

Mr. HEYBURN. The Joint Committee on Revision of the Laws is doing this same work under the direction of Congress, and to give it the responsibility for inspecting the work of this lay committee would be simply requiring it to compare their work with its own. Their work is not even commenced yet. Our work will be finished, I sincerely hope, before they ever report their work.

Mr. President-Mr. BORAH.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to his colleague?

Mr. HEYBURN. With pleasure. Mr. BORAH. I want to ask the Senator from Idaho why, if this work is being performed by the committee of which he is chairman, this item should be left in the pending bill at all.

Mr. HEYBURN. If I were to go back to the original consideration of the wisdom of doing this work I would say it could and should be done best by the committee that is engaged in revising the laws, because all references to pages and titles would have to be changed to conform to the revision upon which we are now engaged. I did not want to go so far as to utterly condemn a piece of work that has been passed upon three times by Congress. I will leave it to some other Senator to do that if he sees fit.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. I should like to have the amendment reported. We did not hear it over here.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will again state the amendment, at the request of the Senator from Idaho.

The Secretary. On page 38, strike out lines 9, 10, 11, and 12, down to and including line 20, and insert:

To index the Statutes at Large of the United States from volume 1 to and including the current volume of such statutes: For 1 chief assistant, $3,000; 1 assistant, $2,400; 1 assistant, $1,800; 1 assistant, $1,200; 1 assistant, $0,00; 2 assistants, at $720 each; in all, $10,740, or so much thereof as may be necessary to complete said work, the said work to be executed under the direction and control of the Judiciary Committees of the two Houses of Congress.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. HEYBURN]. The amendment was agreed to.

I believe that completes the consideration Mr. WARREN. of the bill, except the salaries of certain judges; and as we are yet awaiting the information called for this morning from the Treasury Department, I will ask that the bill be laid aside now. I give notice that I will ask the Senate to take it up in the morning immediately after the routine morning business,

OMNIBUS CLAIMS BILL.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. President, I had hoped that we would be permitted to proceed a while this evening with the consideration of the omnibus claims bill, but it is so late that it is probably hardly worth while to commence it now, in view of the fact that the Senator from Illinois [Mr. Cullom] desires an executive session.

But I think I should say that immediately after the consideration of the appropriation bill in the morning shall have been concluded, I will call up this bill and urge its continuous consideration; and if it shall not be disposed of within the next few days, I am going to ask the Senate to hold an evening session, which we may devote entirely to its consideration. we do not adopt some such plan, the bill will fail, because it must get to the other House very shortly, or it can not become a law at this session.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. CULLOM. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After twenty minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 4 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, January 21, 1909, at 12 o'clock meridian.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

GEORGE L. LILLEY.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on the Judiciary, I desire to call up a privileged resolution (H. Res. 500) and to make a report from that committee (Report 1882) on House resolution 488.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin, by direction of the Committe on the Judiciary, calls up the following privileged resolution.

Mr. JENKINS. I ask that the Clerk read the report.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the resolution and the report.

The Clerk read as follows:

On the 16th day of January the Committee on the Judiciary received from the House of Representatives the following resolution:

"Whereas George L. Lilley, a citizen of the State of Connecticut, was duly elected and qualified a Member of the House of Representatives, Sixtieth Congress, from said State; and

"Whereas the said George L. Lilley was thereafter, in November, 1908, elected, and on January 6, 1909, duly qualified and entered upon his duties as governor of the said State: Therefore be it "Resolved, That his name be stricken from the roll and his seat in this House be, and is hereby, declared vacant."

By the direction of the House the resolution was referred to the committee for report within ten days.

Immediately upon the adoption of the resolution by the House the sommittee communicated with George L. Lilley, inclosing to him a copy of the resolution and informing him that he might communicate that the committee in writing or appear in person or by attorney.

In reply thereto the following letter from George L. Lilley, inclosing a copy of a letter of Governor Woodruff, was received January 19, 1909.

STATE OF CONNECTICUT, EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT,

Hartferd, January 18, 1999.

My Dear Sir: I have the honor to acknowledge receipt of your favor of January 15, with inclosed copy of resolution introduced by John W. Gaines.

GAINES.

Replying to your letter, I beg to say that on December 11, 1908, I tendered my resignation as Congressman to Gov. Rollin S. Woodruff. The matter was referred by Governor Woodruff to the attorney-general, whose opinion it was that the statute was mandatory, and that if the resignation was accepted a special election to fill the vacancy must be held. It seemed to the governor and to the attorney-general that the large expense entailed was a conclusive reason why my resignation should not be accepted. The governor, therefore, declined to accept my resignation.

should not be accepted. The governor, the description my resignation.

I felt that the precedent laid down by my predecessor was obligatory upon me as governor, particularly in view of the fact that after deducting the time necessary for a special election there would be but about one month for a new Member to serve. I inclose a copy of Governor Woodruff's letter. My belief is that the people of Connecticut uphold Governor Woodruff's decision.

With sincere regards, I am, very truly, yours,

GEO. L. LILLEY.

Hon. John J. Jenkins, House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DECEMBER 21

My Dear Congressman: I am in receipt of your letter of December 11, tendering your resignation as Representative at large from the State of Connecticut in the Sixtleth Congress, to take effect January 11, tendering your resignation as Representative at large from the State of Connecticut in the Sixtieth Congress, to take effect January 5, 1909.

Since receiving your resignation I have given the matter much consideration. The day after I received it I asked Attorney-General Holcomb if there is any precedent in this State for such act as I then believed would be, and still believe is, proper for the governor to take in a situation such as this. My idea was then, and still is, that I ought not, in full justice to the State, to accept your resignation. If I do not accept it, there is no vacancy in the office of Representative at large, and it is not necessary to hold a special election. If I should accept the resignation, it would be necessary under the terms of the act to hold a special election that would require an expenditure of a number of thousands of dollars for a term only sixty days in length, and I do not think that any citizen of the State who has its best interests at heart would consider such an expenditure of money to fill an office for that length of time justifiable.

During the interval between receipt of your letter and this writing I have discussed this matter with several of the State's leading men, and in the main they take the same view that I do, viz, that it is inexpedient to accept the resignation, thereby creating a vacancy and the imperative necessity of holding a special election at large expense to the State and for a very short term of office.

I therefore find it necessary to decline to accept your resignation.

Very truly, yours,

ROLLIN S. WOODBUFF.

ROLLIN S. WOODRUFF.

Hon. George L. Lilley, Congressman at Large, Hartford, Conn.

The following letters were received from officers of the House in answer to request from the committee for information:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

CLERK'S OFFICE,

Washington, D. C., January 16, 1969.

My Dear Sir: In reply to your favor of January 16, inquiring as to when the Hon. George L. Lilley, Member of Congress from Connecticut, drew anything from my department, would say that on December 22, 1908, he drew check for his stationery in full; and on the 1st day of January, 1909, he drew his clerk-hire check in full for the month of December. December. Very truly, yours,

A. McDowell, Clerk House of Representatives,

Hon. John J. Jenkins,
Chairman of Committee on Judiciary,
House of Representatives.

House of Representatives, Office Sergeant-at-Arms, Washington, D. C., January 16, 1909.

Mashington, D. C., January 16, 1909.

My Dear Sir: I am in receipt of your communication of January 16, making inquiry as to the payment of salary to Representative George L. Lilley, of the State of Connecticut, and also as to whether he has drawn his mileage for the second session of the Sixtieth Congress.

In reply I beg to advise you that Representative Lilley has drawn his salary as a Member of the House of Representatives up to and including the 4th day of December, 1908, and that on the 4th day of January, 1909, one month's salary was credited up to him, which has not been drawn.

On the 22d day of December, 1908, My Lyryer male convention.

not been drawn.

On the 22d day of December, 1908, Mr. LILLEY made application, by letter, for a remittance of the mileage due him for the second session of the Sixtieth Congress. In answer to this communication he was advised by this office that mileage was payable only when the Member had attended a session of the House, conforming to the law which provides that this mileage shall be paid for attendance upon each session of Congress. There is therefore at this time to Mr. LILLEY'S credit his mileage and accrued salary from the 4th day of December, 1908.

Very respectfully,

HENRY CASSON, Sergeant-at-Arms, House of Representatives.

Hon. John J. Jenkins,

Chairman Committee on the Judiciary,

House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

The committee find as facts that GEORGE L. LILLEY was elected a Member of this House from the State of Connecticut to the Sixtieth Member of this House from the State of Connecticut to the Sixtleth Congress.

That the name of George L. Lilley was placed on the roll of Members-elect of the Sixtleth Congress.

That George L. Lilley performed more or less duties as a Member of this House during the first session of the Sixtleth Congress.

That George L. Lilley has not been in attendance at any time during the second session of the Sixtleth Congress.

That on the 11th day of December, 1908, George L. Lilley tendered his resignation as Member of this House to Rollin S. Woodruff, governor of the State of Connecticut, to take effect January 5, 1909, and that Governor Woodruff declined to accept the resignation as a Member of this House.

That George L. Lilley was elected governor of the State of Connecticut and took the oath of office as governor of that State on January 6, 1909, and that ever since he took the oath of office he has been performing the duties of the office of governor of the State of Connecticut and has remained at the executive office at Hartford, Conn.

That on December 22, 1908, he drew his check for his stationery in full.

That on the 1st day of January, 1909, he drew his clerk hire in full for the month of December.

That George L. Lilley drew his salary as a Member of the House of Representatives up to and including the 4th day of December, 1908. That on the 22d day of December, 1908, George L. Lilley made application by letter for a remittance of the mileage for the second session of the Sixtleth Congress.

What effect did the tendering by Groupe L. Lilley of his resignation.

of the Sixtieth Congress.

What effect did the tendering by George L. Lilley of his resignation as Member of this House to the governor of the State of Connecticut have upon the membership of George L. Lilley in the Sixtieth Congress; and if his membership did not cease on the 5th day of January, 1909, what effect did the qualification of George L. Lilley as governor of the State of Connecticut have upon the membership of George L. Lilley in the Sixtieth Congress?

The Constitution is silent as to how a Member can dissever his membership. The Constitution anticipates that a vacancy may occur:

"When vacancies happen in the representation from any State, the executive authority thereof shall issue writs of election to fill such vacancies. (Clause 4, sec. 2, art. 1.)"

The Constitution does not prohibit a Member from holding any state office.

The Constitution does not prohibit a Member from holding any state office.

The Constitution does provide—

"That no person holding any office under the United States shall be a Member of either House during his continuance in office. (Part of clause 2, sec. 6, art. 1.)

"Each House shall be the judge of the elections, returns, and qualifications of its own Members. (Part of sec. 5, art. 1.)

"Each House may * * punish its Members for disorderly behavior, and with the concurrence of two-thirds expel a Member. (Subdivision 2, sec. 5, art. 1.)"

In voluntary withdrawals from membership in the House of Representatives, the practice has not been uniform. The retiring Member has resigned on the floor of the House. The retiring Member has notified the Speaker in writing and in turn the Speaker of the House has notified the governor of the State. Then again the retiring Member has resigned to his governor and the governor in turn has notified the Speaker, and then again the House was not informed of the vacancy until the new Member appeared with his credentials, but in all cases the act of the retiring Member has been positive to the extent of showing that he had ceased to be a Member of the House of Representatives as far as he was concerned.

By the statute of the State of Connecticut the governor may accept the resignation of any officer whose successor, in case of a vacancy in office, he has power to nominate or appoint; but there is no statute in the State of Connecticut authorizing the governor of that State to accept the resignation of a Member of Congress.

There is no question but what if a Member of the House of Representatives tenders his resignation, no matter whether it be to the governor of the State or to the Speaker of the House, he becomes ipso facto no longer a Member, and therefore it is impossible for a Member having tendered his resignation to withdraw same.

Unless the House of Representatives exercises its power and expels a Member, it rests entirely with the Member as to whether or not he having tendered his resignation to withdraw same.

Unless the House of Representatives exercises its power and expels a Member, it rests entirely with the Member as to whether or not he continues his membership. After he has declared in no uncertain terms to the governor of his State or to the Speaker of the House that he has resigned, there is nothing that can be done by the Member or by the officer to whom the resignation was tendered that will tend to continue the membership. The presentation of the resignation is all sufficient. It is self-acting. No formal acceptance is necessary to make it effective. The refusal of a governor to accept a resignation of a Member of Congress can not possibly continue the membership, and certainly it is within the power of the House to declare what effect the presentation of the resignation had upon the membership.

It is extremely important in a case like this for the House of Representatives to know the status of its Members, the duties and power of the House. The person elected owes it to the people in general, and his constituents in particular, to be in his seat discharging his public duties.

duties.

The House has a right to know whether the name on the roll is that a Member, as bearing upon the question of a quorum. The State as a right of representation, denied by nonaction of the House. It the highest duty of the House to settle the status in a case of this kind.

What question of law does the conceded facts present? It is a universally recognized principle of the common law that the same person should not undertake to perform inconsistent and incompatible duties, and that when a person while occupying one position accepts another incompatible with the first, ipso facto, absolutely vacates the first office and his title thereto is terminated without any further act or proceeding. This incompatibility operating to vacate the first office exists where the nature and duties of the second office are such as to render it improper, from considerations of public policy, for one person to retain both. There is an absolute inconsistency in the functions of the two offices, Member of Congress and governor of the State of Connecticut. necticut.

While what is here stated is a common-law doctrine, and it is also recognized that there can be no common law except by legislative adoption, yet it is a principle of law, and the House of Representatives can not well refuse to recognize and adopt it.

As said by the Supreme Court of the United States in Bucher v. Cheshire Railroad Company (125 U. S., 555, p. 583):

"There is no common law of the United States, and yet the main body of the rights of the people of this country rest upon and are governed by principles derived from the common law of England and established as the laws of the different States."

Assuming that the courts of the United States can not punish for a common-law crime or enforce a common-law right, yet there is nothing to prevent this House from being governed by a common-law doctrine. This feature of the case is very important, because it presents this important question:

This feature of the case is very important, because it presents this important question:

Is George L. Lilley a Member of this House? If he is a Member of this House, the power of the House to deal with him is absolutely anlimited; if he is not a Member of this House, then the House has nothing whatever to do with him.

If George L. Lilley is a Member of the House, the House has the ionstitutional right to compel his attendance in such manner and ander such penalties as the House may provide. (Sec. 5, art. 1.)

The House ought not to be placed in an uncertain condition, leaving it to the person to say whether or not, according to his interests, he shall play fast or loose. If the House needs his presence to help make a quorum and he does not want to attend, he can plead that he is not a Member. If he wants anything as a Member, he can insist that he is not out of Congress, but that he is a Member.

If he is not a Member by reason of resignation or accepting an office that is incompatible, it is not within the power of the Chair to recognize him.

There can be but little question but what George L. Lilley resigned office that is incompatible, it is not within the power of the Chair to recognize him.

There can be but little question but what George L. Lilley resigned his membership in this House and that it became effective on the 5th day of January, 1909, and that being true, it logically follows that be cased to be a Member at that time; but inasmuch as it seems so clear that George L. Lilley ceased to be a Member of the House of Representatives upon his acceptance of the office of governor of the State of Connecticut, and the question of time is so very brief, that it may be well to hold that his seat was vacant January 6, 1909.

As there is an entire absence of precedents.

The committee finds that James S. Robinson, a Representative in the Forty-eighth Congress from the State of Ohio, was elected to the office of secretary of state of the State of Ohio; that Mr. Robinson did tender his resignation as a Member of Congress to the governor of Ohio, and his resignation was placed on file, and thereafter on the same day he was sworn in and duly qualified as secretary of state, and from that time on he did not assume to be a Member of Congress nor attempt to exercise any of the rights or privileges belonging to a Member of this body, but on the contrary resided at the seat of government in the State of Ohio, in the performance of his duties as secretary of state.

The committee simply recommended that the Clerk of the House be instructed to omit his name from the roll of Members, because they found that he did not chaim to be a Member of Congress. (House of Representatives, 48th Cong., 2d sess., Rept. No. 2679.)

In 9 South Carolina Reports, 156, appears the case of the State of South Carolina, and after being commissioned as solicitor he qualified on the 23d of January, 1877, as Representative in Congress from the State of South Carolina, and after being commissioned solicitor he qualified on the 23d of January, 1877, as Representative in Congress from the State of South Carolina.

The Supreme Court held that the offices

SEPARATE VIEWS OF RICHARD WAYNE PARKER.

I agree to the resolution. I think the House has the right to determine whether the resignation should take effect, and that the House should determine that it did take effect. It is unnecessary, therefore, to determine whether the office of governor is incompatible with that of Representative, and I reserve any conclusion on that suggestion.

RICHARD WAYNE PARKER.

JOHN A. STERLING.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, as every gentleman on the floor has a copy of this report, and I trust has carefully considered it, if there is no one who desires to ask any question, I will ask for a vote on the substitute.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I have had no time to read the report, and want to ask, Is the effect of this resolution to declare the seat vacant?

Mr. JENKINS. Yes.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Well, that is all right.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. HIGGINS. May I submit a request for unanimous consent that I may insert in the RECORD the letter which I hold in my hand relative to this matter?

Mr. HENRY of Texas. We should like to hear the letter read.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Let us know what it is.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. Hig-GINS] asks unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD the letter which he holds in his hand.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I object, in the absence of further infor-

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman desire the letter read?

Mr. HIGGINS. I ask unanimous consent to be allowed to have this letter read from the Clerk's desk.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I shall object.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. After it is read we can not object to it, can we?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I understand that the gentleman from Connecticut asks unanimous consent to have it read.

If it requires unanimous consent, I object.

The SPEAKER. In reply to the question of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Livingston], it is for the House to say whether it shall be printed in the Record or not. But objection is made by the gentleman from Mississippi to the reading of the letter.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If the gentleman will indicate the character of the communication, I may not object. What is it about? Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. HIGGINS. I will say, Mr. Speaker, that this is a letter in response to a telegram which I sent to Mr. LILLEY. The gentleman will remember that I made some statements concerning whether or not Mr. Lilley had resigned. I gave my own personal opinion about it from having read certain newspaper items. This letter does not differ materially from the letter which Mr. Liller wrote to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Jenkins] in response to a copy of the resolution which was sent him, and simply bears out as a fact, it seems to me, what I stated to the House as my opinion.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, understanding that the letter merely explains the position that was taken by the gentleman from Connecticut the other day, I shall withdraw the objection.

Mr. MACON. I renew the objection.

Mr. CLAYTON. With the permission of the House, I would like to ask the gentleman from Connecticut a question. The gentleman is a member of the Committee on the Judiciary, having charge of this resolution. That is the fact, is it not?

Mr. HIGGINS. Oh, yes. Mr. CLAYTON. And the gentleman was at the session of that committee this morning, was he not?

Mr. HIGGINS, Yes.
Mr. CLAYTON. Did the gentleman inform any member of the committee of this letter; did he disclose it?

Mr. HIGGINS. No; and I will tell you why, if you will give me an opportunity.

Mr. CLAYTON. Does the gentleman think that is a fair way to treat the committee? Mr. BENNET of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Connecticut may proceed for five minutes

Mr. MACON. I object.

ASSISTANT CLERK TO COMMITTEE ON ENROLLED BILLS.

Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following report from the Committee on Accounts.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 448.

Resolved. That the chairman of the Committee on Enrolled Bills be, and he is hereby, authorized to appoint an assistant clerk to said committee, who shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House at the rate of $6 per day during the present Congress.

The following amendment, recommended by the committee, was read :

In line 5, strike out the words "during the present Congress" and insert "from and including January 4, 1909, and during the remainder of the present session."

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

RICHARD H. MESHAW AND OTHERS.

Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I also present the following report from the Committee on Accounts.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 501.

House resolution 501.

Resolved, That there shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House to Richard H. Meshaw and John W. Meshaw, heirs of John Meshaw, deceased, late janitor of the Committee on Pensions, a sum equal to six months of his salary as such employee, and an additional amount not exceeding $250 for payment of the funeral expenses of the said John Meshaw; to Clarence M. Hooker, Lena Hooker Daily, Della Hooker Johnson, Albert G. Hooker, and Hull M. Hooker, heirs of Leroy J. Hooker, deceased, late a messenger on the soldiers' roll of the House of Representatives, an amount equal to six months of his salary as such employee, to be divided equally among said heirs, and an additional amount not exceeding $250 for the payment of the funeral expenses of said Leroy J. Hooker; and to Selina Field, widow of Norton J. Field, the sum of $75.83, being the amount of salary due said Field as a private on the Capitol police force from September 1 to September 26, 1908, inclusive, the same to be in full payment of all claims of the estate of said Norton J. Field, and to be receipted for as such.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gen-

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman from West Virginia what this resolution is,

Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia. This is simply a resolution in the case of the death of an employee of the House of Representatives. In this case it was the janitor of the Committee on Pensions, and also a resolution for a deceased messenger on the old soldiers' roll. This is to pay the widow, and the last resolution is to pay Norton J. Field's widow the balance of the salary due him for services rendered up to the time of his death. He was on the Capitol police force.

Mr. GARRETT. Is there anything new in this resolution?

Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia. Nothing whatever.

Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia. Yes.

Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia. Yes. Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I want to say to the gentleman from Tennessee and to the Members on this side of the House that these resolutions came from the Committee on Accounts and have been very carefully scanned by the minority Members, and that whatever may be said about the propriety of these resolutions, it has been for years and years the custom of these resolutions, it has been for years and years the custom of the House to pay this money when an employee dies. The other resolution has reference to the payment of salary to a member of the Capitol police force due him at the time of his death which had not been paid. There is nothing new in it. The last resolution is eminently just and proper.

Mr. GARRETT. Does the gentleman think the first ones eminently just and proper?

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. It has been the uniform rule and custom of the House for many years past. Whether as an orig-custom of the House for many years past. Whether as an original proposition I would vote for such resolutions is not now to be decided. Ever since I have been a Member of the House, and long before I came to my legal majority, it was the custom of the House of Representatives.

Mr. GARRETT. The word of the gentleman from Georgia, particularly when reinforced by the word of the gentleman from West Virginia, is entirely satisfactory to me.

The resolution was agreed to.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the naval appropriation bill.

SPECIAL AGENTS, ETC., DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE.

The SPEAKER. Pending that motion, the Chair will recognize temporarily the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up a privileged report from the Committee on the Judiciary, House resolution 476, and make a brief statement. A resolution was adopted calling upon the Attorney-General for certain information, and calling upon the Attorney-General for certain information, and after it was reported by the committee the Attorney-General sent up a full statement, which has been submitted to Mr. Clark of Florida, who introduced it. He says that it is perfectly satisfactory to him, and I ask unanimous consent to print the communication of the Attorney-General in the Record and that House resolution 476 do lie on the table.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 476.

House resolution 476.

Resolved, That the Attorney-General of the United States be, and he is hereby, requested to furnish the House of Representatives, at as early a day as may be convenient, with the following information, namely: First. The number of "special agents" in the employ of the Department of Justice.

Second. The duties of such "special agents."

Third. The salaries paid such "special agents," and from what fund such salaries are paid.

Fourth The law under and by virtue of which the Department of Justice has organized a "force of special agents."

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, repeating what I said a moment ago, the Committee on the Judiciary reported this resolution to the House, and the Attorney-General, anticipating the matter, sent up a very full and complete report, which has been submitted to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. CLARK], who introduced the resolution. He says the answer of the Attorney-General is satisfactory, and I ask unanimous consent that the communication of the Attorney-General be printed in the RECORD and the resolution do lie on the table.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks that the communication of the Attorney-General be printed in the RECORD and the resolution lie on the table. Is there objection?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Speaker—
Mr. JENKINS. I will yield to the gentleman from Florida.
Mr. CLARK of Florida. I simply want to say that the gentleman from Wisconsin has stated all the facts, as I understand them fully, and that the procedure is entirely agreeable to me.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

OFFICE OF THE ATTORNEY-GENERAL, Washington, D. C., January 8, 1909.

Hon. John J. Jenkins, M. C., Chairman Committee on the Judiciary, House of Representatives.

Chairman Committee on the Judiciary,

House of Representatives.

My Dear Sir: I am duly in receipt of your letter of this date, inclosing a copy of resolution No. 476 of the House of Representatives, referred to your committee. I have the honor to inclose you herewith a memorandum prepared by the chief examiner of this department, to accompany my letter to the President of December 31, 1908, transmitting certain data mentioned in Senate resolution No. 233 of the present session. An examination of this memorandum will show that it contains all the information requested in resolution No. 476 of the House of Representatives first above mentioned. In view of the statement contained therein as to the comparative cost of the special-agent service of this department in 1907 and 1908, and to avoid any misleading inference which might be drawn from the facts therein stated, I call your attention to the following extract from my letter to the President of December 31, 1908, above mentioned:

"In connection with the question of cost, I call your attention to the fact that, according to the estimates of the chief examiner, the cost of our newly organized force of special agents under his charge has been appreciably less during the last six months of the calendar year 1908 than the amount paid out for similar services during the corresponding period of the calendar year 1907. It is, however, proper to note in this connection that in 1907 a considerable number of secret-service officers and other special employees were engaged in the investigation and prosecution of certain classes of land-fraud cases, with whose services it was found practicable to dispense early in the year 1908, so that the comparison may not be a strictly fair one with regard to normal periods."

Inasmuch as the memorandum inclosed, supplemented by the first mentioned extract, gives all the information requested by the first mentioned extract, gives all the information requested by the first mentioned extract, gives all the information requested by the f periods."

Inasmuch as the memorandum inclosed, supplemented by the lastmentioned extract, gives all the information requested by the first-mentioned resolution, or possessed by this department with respect to its subject-matter, I trust it will serve all the purposes of your committee in the premises.

I remain, my dear sir,
Yours, very respectfully and truly,
CHARLES J. BONAPARTE,
Attorney-General.

MEMORANDUM REGARDING THE SPECIAL AGENTS OF THE DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE EMPLOYED IN COLLECTING EVIDENCE IN UNITED STATES CASES IN FEDERAL COURTS DURING THE PERIOD SINCE JULY 1, 1908.

JUSTICE EMPLOYED IN COLLECTING EVIDENCE IN UNITED STATES CASES IN FEDERAL COURTS DURING THE PERIOD SINCE JULY 1, 1908.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
December 31, 1908.

In connection with the attached tabulated list of special attorneys, special agents, etc., who were employed by this department during the fiscal year 1908, the following statements are respectively submitted:
From the above-mentioned lists it will be seen that during the last fiscal year a number of special agents and other persons acting in similar capacities were employed by this department for the purpose of collecting evidence and making investigations and examinations necessarily incident to the business of the federal courts. There were also employed from time to time during the said period and for similar purposes a considerable number of persons whose names were submitted by request to this department by the Chief of the Secret Service Division of the Treasury Department. The employment during the fiscal year 1909 by this department of persons so designated was prohibited by the following clause of the sundry civil appropriation act of May 27, 1908:

"No part of any money appropriated by this act shall be used in payment of compensation or expenses of any person detailed or transferred from the Secret Service Division of the Treasury Department or who may at any time during the fiscal year 1909 have been employed by or under said Secret Service Division."

At the close of business on June 30, 1908, there were in the employ of this department seven special agents engaged in collecting evidence regarding violations of the timber laws, the compensations allowed the said agents being from $3 to $5 per day and actual traveling expenses, together from $1 to $3 per day allowance in lieu of subsistence, the said compensations being paid from the appropriation "Miscellaneous expenses, United States courts," which reads as follows:

"For payment of such miscellaneous expenses as may be authorized lieu of subsistence, the said compensations being paid from the appropriation "Miscellaneous expenses, United States courts," which reads as follows:

"For payment of such miscellaneous expenses as may be authorized by the Attorney-General, for the United States courts and their officers, including the furnishing and collecting of evidence where the United States is or may be a party in interest, and moving of records."

It being apparent, at the close of the fiscal year 1908, that additional special agents would be needed for the purpose of collecting evidence for use in United States cases pending and about to be instituted in the federal courts, 10 additional agents were appointed under the provisions of the appropriation mentioned, with compensation as follows:

"One at $2,000 per annum and actual expenses.

"One at $5 per day, actual traveling expenses, and $4 per day in lieu of subsistence."

Subsequently there was added to this force an additional special agent at $5 per day, actual traveling expenses, and $4 per day in lieu of subsistence.

On October 1, 1908, it being considered advisable that the allowance in lieu of subsistence be made uniform throughout the special agents force, the amount of such compensation was reduced to $3 per day, and since that date none of the special agents employed under the appropriation "Miscellaneous expenses, United States courts," has been allowed more than that amount.

On December 14, 1908, one additional special agent was employed under this appropriation at $5 per day, actual travelling expenses, and an allowance of $3 per day in lieu of subsistence.

There have also been employed since July 1, 1908, as necessity required, in addition to the agents above mentioned, a number of temporary special agents, the period of employment in each of said cases being limited to thirty days, and the compensation in such cases being at the rate of $3 per day, actual traveling expenses, and an allowance of $3 per day in lieu of subsistence, there being 9 temporary special agents tioned, including those in the employ of the department at the beginning of the present fiscal year, 34, as follows:

"One at $2,000 per annum and actual expenses.
"Six at $5 per day, actual traveling expenses, and an allowance of $3 per day in lieu of subsistence.
"Fourteen at $4 per day, actual traveling expenses, and $3 per day in lieu of subsistence.
"Ten at $3 per day, actual traveling expenses, and $3 per day in lieu of subsistence.
"Two at $3 per day, actual traveling expenses, and $1 per day in lieu of subsistence.
"Two at $3 per day, actual traveling expenses, and $1 per day in lieu of subsistence.
"One at $3 per day."

The new force of special agents was placed in charge of the chief examiner, who has general supervision of their work, and receives from them dally reports setting forth the nature and extent of the duties performed by them, the expenses incurred by them, etc. The reports received at the Department each day are summarized by the chief examiner and submitted to the Attorney-General, who, by this means, is kept fully informed, at all times, both as to the operations of the special agents, and also as to the daily cost of the service, the aggregate cost of similar investigations during the same period of the fiscal year, 1907.

From a recent report of the chief examiner it appears that the

From a recent report of the chief examiner it appears that the amount paid to special agents and other similar employees (including those employed under designation from the Chief of the Secret Service Division of the Treasury Department) from the appropriation "Miscellaneous expenses, United States courts, 1908," during the period from July 1 to December 26, 1907, was approximately $53,743.25; whereas the total compensation and expenses of the special agents performing similar services during the period from July 1 to December 26, 1908, was $40,149.98; a difference of $13,593.27.

Respectfully submitted.

S. W. FINCH, Chief Examiner.

S. W. FINCH, Chief Examiner.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I wish to make a request for unanimous consent. Pending the motion of the gentleman from Illinois, I ask uannimous consent that the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. Higgins] may be given five minutes to make a statement.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Connecticut may be given five minutes to make a statement.

Mr. MACON. I do not know, Mr. Speaker, that there is any reason why the gentleman from Connecticut should make a statement at this time. He is not charged with anything; his skirts do not need to be cleared, and I object.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, pending the motion of the gentleman from Illinois, I ask unanimous consent to make a statement on the Lilley matter.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Illinois withhold his motion?

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Speaker, I demanded the regular order. Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Well, the gentleman is doing an injustice to a Member of this House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman demands the regular order. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois, that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the naval appropriation bill.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to. Accordingly, the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 26394, the naval appropriation bill, with Mr. MANN in the chair. The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. Sterling having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 16954) to provide for Thirteenth and subsequent decennial censuses,

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 653) to authorize commissions to issue in the case of officers of the army retired with increased rank.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session. The Clerk read as follows:

PAY OF THE NAVY.

Pay and allowances prescribed by law of officers on sea duty and other duty; officers on waiting orders; officers on the retired list; clerks to paymasters at yards and stations, general storekeepers and receiving ships, and other vessels; 2 clerks to general inspectors of Pay Corps; 1 clerk to pay officer in charge of deserters' rolls; commutation of quarters for officers on shore not occupying public quarters, including boatswains, gunners, carpenters, sailmakers, warrant machinists, pharmacists, and mates, and also naval constructors and assistant naval constructors; for hire of quarters for officers serving with troops where there are no public quarters belonging to the Government, and where there are not sufficient quarters possessed by the United States to accommodate them, or commutation of quarters not to exceed the amount which an officer would receive were he not serving with troops; pay of enlisted men on the retired list; extra pay to men reenlisting under honorable discharge; interest on deposits by men; pay of petty officers, seamen, landsmen, and apprentice seamen, including men in the engineers' force, and men detailed for duty with Naval Militia, and for the Fish Commission, 42,000 men; and the number of enlisted men shall be exclusive of those undergoing imprisonment with sentence of dishonorable discharge from the service at expiration of such confinement; and as many warrant machinists as the President may from time to time deem necessary to appoint, not to exceed 20 in any one year; and 2,500 apprentice seamen under training at training stations and on board training ships, at the pay prescribed by law; pay of the Nurse Corps; rent of quarters for members of the Nurse Corps; prizes to be awarded to the engineer divisions of the ships in commission for general efficiency and for economy in coal consumption under such rules as the Secretary of the Navy may formulate, $32,803,486.72.

Mr. STAFEORD. Mr. Chairman, L. wigh the receive a point.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I wish to reserve a point of order on that part of the paragraph beginning with the word "prizes," in line 25, on page 2, and ending with the word "formulate," on page 3. It provides for prizes to be awarded to the engineer divisions of the ships in commission. I reserve the point of order to ascertain whether this is a new project that is about to be launched in this branch of the naval service, by awarding prizes for efficiency and economy in case of coal consumption, and what was the justification for the committee inserting it in the bill?

Mr. FOSS. It is not a new project, Mr. Chairman. It was done last year, and authorization was given by the law of last

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman does not mean to say that this special language was carried in last year's appropriation bill?

Mr. FOSS. No; I am mistaken; it was not carried in last year's appropriation bill. In any event, I will say that Admiral Evans, who was in command of the Atlantic Fleet, established a system of competition on the part of the coal passers, and the result of it was that he saved 1,500 tons of coal in the cruise of the fleet from Hampton Roads to Magdalena Bay, and this competition is now already in operation in the navy. Admiral Sperry, who is in command of the Atlantic Fleet, cabled from Australia the other day that it had been so successful that he would need 8,000 tons of coal less delivered at Manila Bay in order to complete his cruise around the world.

Mr. STAFFORD. What is the character of the prizes awarded to the firemen?

Mr. FOSS. They are small money prizes. It will be a great saving to the navy.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, the explanation of the gentleman from Illinois is satisfactory, and I withdraw the point of order. I move now to strike out the last word for the purpose of making further inquiry as to the reasons for the increase of $2,000,000 in the appropriation in this item over that of last year. That seems to be an inordinate increase, and in view of the fact that the chairman of the committee or no member of the committee explained these items yesterday, but decided to have them explained as they were reached in the bill, I wish the gentleman would accommodate the committee with an explanation.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman I would state that this has been carefully figured out, and I will place in my statement here the estimates showing just how it is figured out by the Navy Department. The pay of 3,250 officers on the active list now allowed by law amounts to $9,222,443, and then the pay and allowances of the 42,000 petty officers and seamen amounts to nearly $18,000,000. There is an increase over that of last year due to the increased number of officers and also due to the increase in longevity pay, and the gentleman will recall, also, that we increased the pay of officers last year and also the pay of the men.

Mr. STAFFORD. I recall there was a general increase in the pay of the personnel of the navy, and I would like to ask how much, if the gentleman can state, is ascribable to the promotions and salary increases provided by the act of last year, and how much is due to the increase of the service.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, if I may interrupt, if the gentleman will turn to page 7 of the hearings he will get it.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, on page 7 of the hearings is set out the difference between all being now paid, the difference being $2,657,587.

Mr. STAFFORD. Can the gentleman give an estimate as to the proportion of this amount of increase that is due to the increased salaries which were paid pursuant to the bill passed last year?

Mr. FOSS. No; we have not got that. Mr. TAWNEY. I desire to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. FOSS. Certainly.

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the appropriation for pay of the navy for the current gear be sufficient to meet the requirements of existing law?

Mr. FOSS. Yes.

Mr. TAWNEY. There will be no deficiency in that?

Mr. FOSS. No deficiency on this appropriation.

Mr. TAWNEY. Then why is this appropriation $2,000,000 more than the current appropriation?

Mr. FOSS. That is due to the increase in the number of offi-

That increases the amount $1,057,810.

Mr. TAWNEY. Is it an increase in the number of officers or increase in the pay of officers?

Mr. FOSS. Increase in the pay of new officers. turning them out from the Naval Academy every year-a large number-and also increase due to the commutation of quarters for officers. Then there is an increase of officers on the retired list which makes quite a large increase. Then there is the pay of 42,000 men and enlisted men on the retired list. These are all set out in this table, which I will insert in the RECORD.

Mr. TAWNEY. To maintain the navy in its present status, taking in new officers every year, will that necessitate a corresponding increase of about $2,000,000 every year to meet these

Mr. FOSS. There will be an increase, but I hardly think it will be as much as that,

Mr. STAFFORD. Can the gentleman inform the committee whether the present personnel of the navy meets all the demands required in the organization of the navy?

Mr. FOSS. We do not ask for any new men this year; we have 42,000.

Mr. STAFFORD. My question is whether the force as now organized would be sufficient in case of hostilities with another nation, or whether additional men would be required to constitute the fighting force?

Mr. FOSS. I have no doubt but what a large number of additional men would be required.

Mr. TAWNEY. Are they authorized?

Mr. FOSS. They are not authorized, but we would call upon the reserve of the country in case of a war.

Mr. TAWNEY. Is the personnel at the present up to the maximum authorized by law?

Mr. FOSS. It is up to the maximum authorized by law, 42,000 men.

Mr. PADGETT. Lacking about 2,500 of the authorized enlistment.

Mr. FOSS. It is practically up to it.

Mr. TAWNEY. So that there will be a corresponding increase under existing law every year in consequence of increasing retirements and new officers coming into the service, commutation of quarters, and so forth.

Mr. FOSS. Yes; there will be an increase every year.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. But, I would like to say, that will be lessened by the number of deaths which occur every year.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will there be any increase by reason of enlarging the number of battle ships, colliers, and other adjuncts of the navy?

Mr. FOSS. If we have more colliers, they will be increased. We have authorized great battle ships now, and there will be an increase in the number of men to man those ships.

Mr. STAFFORD. What is the average pay roll of the personnel of one of our large battle ships?

Mr. FOSS. Well, I should say the cost of maintenance for one of our large ships may be a million dollars a year in round

The Clerk read as follows:

PAY, MISCELLANEOUS.

PAY, MISCELLANEOUS.

For commissions and interest; transportation of funds; exchange; mlleage to officers while traveling under orders in the United States, and for actual personal expenses of officers while traveling abroad under orders, and for traveling expenses of civilian employees, and for actual and necessary traveling expenses of midshipmen while proceeding from their homes to the Naval Academy for examination and appointment as midshipmen; for actual traveling expenses of female nurses; for rent of buildings and offices not in navy-yards; expenses of courts-martial, prisoners and prisons, and courts of inquiry, boards of inspection, examining boards, with clerks' and witnesses' fees, and traveling expenses and costs; stationery and recording; expenses of purchasing paymasters' offices of the various cities, including clerks, furniture, fuel, stationery, and incidental expenses; newspapers; all advertising for the Navy Department and its bureaus (except advertising for recruits for the Bureau of Navigation); copying; care of library, including the purchase of books, photographs, prints, manuscripts, and periodicals; ferriage; tolls; costs of suits, commissions, warrants, diplomas, and discharges; relief of vessels in distress; recovery of valuables from shipwrecks; quarantine expenses; reports; professional investigation; cost of special instruction at home and abroad, in maintenance of students and attachés; information from abroad, and the collection and classification thereof; all charges pertaining to the Navy Department and its bureaus for ice for the cooling of drinking water on shore (except at naval hospitals), telephone rentals and tolls, telegrams, cablegrams, and postage, foreign and domestic, and post-office box rentals; and other necessary and incidental expenses: Provided, That the sum to be paid out of this appropriation, under the direction of the Secretary of the Navy, for clerical, inspection, and messenger service in navy-yards, naval stations, and purchasing pay offices for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1910, shall not exceed $249,054.25: Provided further, That hereafter the rates of pay of the clerical, drafting, inspection, and messenger force at navy-yards and naval stations and other stations and offices under the Navy Department shall be paid from lump appropriations and shall be fixed by the Secretary of the Navy on a per annum or per diem basis, as he may elect; that the number may be increased or decreased at his option and shall be distributed at the various navy-yards and naval stations by the Secretary of the Navy to meet the needs of the naval service, and that such per diem employees may hereafter, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Navy, be granted leave of absence not to exceed fifteen days in any one year, which leave may, in exceptional and meritorious cases, where such an employee is ill, be extended, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Navy, not to exceed fifteen days additional in any one year; that the total amount expended annually for pay for such clerical, drafting, inspection, and messenger force shall not exceed the amounts specifically allowed by Congress under the several lump appropriations, and that the Secretary of the Navy shall each year, in the annual estimates, report to Congress the number of persons so employed, their duties, and the amount paid to each; that section 1545, Revised Statutes, is hereby repealed; in all, $868,550.

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman—

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman— Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman— The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. Macon] is recognized.

Mr. MACON. I reserve a point of order against the new matter contained in the paragraph just read.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I wish to offer, for the information of the committee, an amendment to the proviso beginning on page 4 and ending on page 5.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read it for information

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided further, That it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Navy to submit to Congress at its next session and for its consideration a schedule of rates of compensation, annual or per diem, that should in his judgment be permanently fixed by law for clerical, inspection, and messenger service in navy-yards, naval stations, and purchasing pay offices, and in fixing such rates of compensation he shall have due regard for the rates usually paid for like services, in the inspection localities, by employers other than the United States, and he shall not recommend any rate exceeding that being paid by the United States at any such yards, stations, or offices prior to January 1, 1909.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I understand that is simply read for information?

Mr. TAWNEY. For information only. Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order if the chairman of the committee desires to be heard.

I shall be glad to answer any question.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair was going to ask the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. Macon] to point out the items to which he made the point of order.

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, I reserved it upon the paragraph so far as that is concerned. It contains new matter all through.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands.

Mr. MACON. I notice here a new provision on page 3, line 14: For actual traveling expenses of female nurses

Mr. FOSS. What is the question? I did not hear, Mr. MACON. It says:

For actual traveling expenses of female nurses.

That is a new provision that was not carried in the last bill. Mr. FOSS. We established under separate law a corps of female nurses last year, and that was put on the appropriation bill by the Senate. It was a Senate amendment, which passed the last House and became a law. This simply provides for the actual traveling expenses of that corps. It is already law.

Mr. MACON. But this is not law.

Mr. FOSS. Yes; it is law. That was provided for in a separate amendment.

Mr. MACON. It was not carried in the last bill, however?

Mr. FOSS. No. Mr. MACON. Now, another item. On page 4, beginning on line 12, there is a proviso:

That the sum to be paid out of this appropriation, under the direction of the Secretary of the Navy, for clerical, inspection, and messenger service in navy-yards, etc., for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1910, shall not exceed $249,054.25.

Mr. FOSS. That part of the new language is simply a limitation on that appropriation. Heretofore the Secretary of the Navy could pay out that whole sum, if he wanted to, for clerical-inspection service, but in a spirit of reform and economy we are requiring now limitations as to all these lump appropriations, or working appropriations, of the different bureaus; and in connection with this bureau, the Bureau of Navigation, we recommend that there be a limitation upon the amount expended

Mr. MACON. We will pass, then, to the next proviso, which reads as follows:

Provided further, That hereafter the rates of pay of the clerical, drafting, inspection, and messenger force at navy-yards and naval stations and other stations and offices under the Navy Department shall be paid from lump appropriations and shall be fixed by the Secretary of the Navy on a per annum or a per diem basis as he may elect.

Mr. FOSS. Yes. Under our present system they heretofore provided for a civil establishment in the law. That is, all those clerks that are on a per annum basis were provided for specifically here in our bill, but by this provision we wipe that out, because we believe it will mean greater economy to leave it in the discretion of the Secretary of the Navy, so that he can not exceed that amount provided for under each appropriation, and at the same time he can appoint clerks on a per annum basis or on a per diem basis as he may see fit.

Mr. MACON. Right there I notice "that the number may be increased or decreased at his option, and shall be distributed to the various yards and naval stations by the Secretary of the Navy to meet the needs of the naval service." Now, in connection with that-

Mr. FOSS. But that is a limitation on the amount, and the limitation placed upon that which we are now appropriating.

Mr. MACON. But, if the practice of making appropriations is to continue along the same lines that they have heretofore been made, I will insist that in my judgment if the Secretary of the Navy were to see fit to increase this force on the roll by 500 additional men, that when it came to the appropriations next time or in the urgent deficiency bill, he would make a recommendation therefor, and the appropriation would be made to pay all of the additional employees placed upon the roll.

Mr. FOSS. Let me say to my friend that that is what he can not do. In the first place, he has got to make a report to Congress every year of the number of men who are in the clerical and inspection services. That report comes before our committee; and we put a limitation upon this lump appropriation so that he can not expend this money, which he could hereto-fore do, by putting into the service a whole lot of clerks and inspectors, as he might see fit. We have it now absolutely under our control by this provision; far better than we had before.

Mr. MACON. I remember a few years ago Congress passed a law specifically declaring that the heads of departments should not exceed the appropriations made for the maintenance of a particular bureau or department; and yet we know that they have continued to exceed the appropriations and entail indebtedness upon this Government, that has been met regularly by the next appropriation bill providing for the conduct of the affairs of the department or bureau, right in the teeth of the law. In my judgment, if we give the Secretary of the Navy the right to name and pay all the officers or employees that he sees fit to appoint and place upon the pay roll, it will be establishing a pretty loose precedent that may prove an evil instead of a

Mr. FOSS. But we go on and provide:

That the Secretary of the Navy shall each year, in the annual estimates, report to Congress the number of persons so employed, their duties, and the amount paid to each.

Mr. MACON. I understand.

Mr. FOSS. So that we have control over these funds.

Mr. MACON. I suggested a while ago-

Mr. FOSS. And you will find the limitation upon this fund every year in our bill.

Mr. MACON. But when these 500 employees have been put on the roll, no matter whether the appropriation was sufficient to pay them or not, the Secretary will suggest to Congress that these parties performed valuable service and were entitled to their pay; and I apprehend that the appropriation will be made to pay them, no matter how far the Secretary of the Navy may have abused the privilege placed in his hands.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman from Arkansas is through, I would like to address myself to him upon this proposition.

Mr. MACON. I will be glad to hear the gentleman.

Mr. TAWNEY. I trust the gentleman from Arkansas will not make the point of order against this provision. The matter of the employment and compensation of clerks, inspectors, and draftsmen in the classified service employed in the various navy-yards has been a subject that has been considered carefully, and has troubled Congress more or less for a number of years. So far as I am concerned, I am satisfied that it is wholly impracticable for Congress to provide specifically for the compensation of each of these classified employees in the various navy-yards and other outside places. That was what we thought could be done when we commenced the consideration of this question several years ago. It was the aim, if possible, to bring the classified employees in the navy-yards and naval stations under the same rule in respect to appropriations for their compensation that governed the subject of compensation of clerks in the departments; namely, to have them classified and then appropriate for so many in each class. a careful investigation of all the facts surrounding this service, it is to my mind wholly impracticable to accomplish that. Now, that being so, there is only one of two other ways we can do, and that is to appropriate, as we have done heretofore, generally for the pay of these people to be paid out of a lump-sum appropriation. To-day they are being paid out of 27 specific lumpsum appropriations, and may be paid out of over 50 lump-sum appropriations, for all appropriations made for public works of the navy are available also for the payment of clerical services. There is absolutely no limitation on any one of the 27 appropriations from which they are now paid as to the amount the Secretary can pay for clerical services in the classified service. There is no limitation upon the appropriation for public works that may be used for this purpose. This provision limits the payment for clerical service in the navy-yards. This gives a lump-sum appropriation, and places the limit on the amount the Secretary of the Navy may spend for that service.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. And prohibits any other expenditure for that purpose.

Mr. TAWNEY. It also prohibits the expenditure of any part of the appropriation for clerical services, except the amount specifically named for that purpose.

This matter has been gone over very carefully by Admiral Rogers, the Paymaster of the Navy, at the suggestion of the Committee on Naval Affairs and at the suggestion of the Committee on Appropriations, with a view of working out some practical plan whereby there may be a limitation placed upon the use of lump-sum appropriations; or, in the first place, whereby the number of appropriations from which clerical services can be paid would be reduced, and a limitation placed on the amount to be expended out of any lump-sum appropriation for clerical services, so that the amount can not be exceeded.

What is the practical legislative difficulty Mr. STAFFORD. in the way of following the same course as is pursued elsewhere, and limiting the appropriations from which these messengers and other men employed by the navy-yards are paid? In the bill of last year there were four or five pages given over to the designation of this character of employment, with stated salaries.

Now, as I understand the gentleman, there has been an abuse by the department availing themselves of the lump-sum appropriations in some 50 different items. From a practical legislative standpoint, which is objectionable from designating the salaries of these men and the maximum salaries to be paid to individual employees and forbidding their payment from lumpsum appropriations?

Mr. TAWNEY. One practical difficulty that is found by the Navy Department grows out of the character of the service to be performed. Another practical difficulty is the fact that the people in the classified service who are paid from lump sums and whose salaries are not specifically appropriated for are dovetailed in with those who are specifically appropriated for. Now, it is the judgment of the Paymaster-General of the Navy, who I believe is one of the most competent and one of the most conscientious officers that has ever filled that position, that this provision will effect a very material economy in the cost of the classified service in the navy-yards.

One of the principal advantages of this provision grows out of the fact that if we appropriate specifically for certain clerks for a designated navy-yard, it is impossible for the Navy Department to use those people in another navy-yard if the work becomes congested in one yard and there is not sufficient work to occupy all the people employed in another yard. This provision will enable the Secretary of the Navy to adjust his force in the different navy-yards at all times, so as to meet the congested condition in one yard and the lack of work in other yards. Therein the provision will undoubtedly work economy in the administration of the service in the various navy-yards.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. TAWNEY. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. I recognize the difficulty for the department to forecast in advance the number of clerks who will be needed in each respective yard; but what is the practical diffi-culty in providing for all of these clerks in one item, and designating the number that may be available for the service in the fiscal year?

Mr. TAWNEY. If that was attempted, we would have to continue the practice that has heretofore obtained of specifically appropriating for so many clerks. If we pursued the policy in respect to all of the clerks, draftsmen, messengers, and inspectors employed in the navy-yards that we have heretofore pursued in respect to some of the clerks, we would then have to specifically appropriate for so many clerks at this navy-yard, so many clerks at that navy-yard, and it would be absolutely inflexible; the Secretary of the Navy would have no discretion whatever in transferring these men from one yard to another. There would be a specific appropriation for services in that particular navy-yard.

[The time of Mr. Tawney having expired, by unanimous consent, at the request of Mr. STAFFORD, it was extended five minutes.]

Mr. MACON. I want to ask the gentleman a question at this point.

Mr. TAWNEY. Go ahead.

Mr. MACON. Why could not the head of a bureau be required in advance to estimate as to how many employees it might be necessary to have in connection with any particular bureau? Then we could appropriate for them just as we appropriate for so many clerks in the different branches of the Post-Office Department, in the Treasury Department, and in the other departments of the Government.

Mr. TAWNEY. I am very glad that the gentleman has asked me that question. The reason that it can not be done grows out of the difference in the character of the service. not estimate accurately at the beginning of this fiscal year, or six months before the beginning of the fiscal year for which they ask for appropriations, how many vessels will be sent to the Brooklyn Navy-Yard, for example, during that fiscal year for repair, or how many vessels will be sent to the Norfolk Navy-Yard, or the Mare Island Navy-Yard. The character of the work is such that it is impossible for the department to estimate accurately, and for that reason, Congress recognizing that fact, has never required it to be done, but has given the Secretary authority to employ such clerical services as are necessary, to be paid out of the general lump-sum appropriation.

And it was in that practice that abuses grew up in the administration and expenditures of these appropriations.

Now, it is for the purpose of minimizing as far as possible abuses of that character in the future that the number of appropriations from which these clerical services can be paid hereafter is limited and reduced from 50 to 10, and the amount available for that service in each of the 10 classes by law can not be exceeded.

I think the provision might have gone a little further. I think there ought to be some qualification as to compensation, just the same as there is in the army, and for that reason I have

Just the same as there is in the army, and for that reason I have offered this amendment as a paragraph:

Provided further, That it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Navy to submit to Congress at its next session and for its consideration a schedule of rates of compensation, annual or per diem, that should, in his judgment, be permanently fixed by law for clerical, inspection, and messenger service in navy-yards, naval stations, and purchasing pay offices, and in fixing such rates of compensation he shall have due regard for the rates usually paid for like services, in the respective localities, by employers other than the United States, and he shall not recommend any rate exceeding that being paid by the United States at any such yards, stations, or offices prior to January 1, 1909.

Now, when we get that information, at the next session of Congress, or when we receive the report from the Secretary of the Navy classifying the compensation to be paid to the various employees, we can then fix by law the rate of compensation and also the amount that can be expended from the 10 lumpsum appropriations for the services of these classified employees. When we do this, I think we will have gone as far as it is possible to go by way of practical legislation to prevent the abuses for the payment of the classified service in the navy from the lump-sum appropriations, and I trust that the gentle-man from Arkansas will not make the point of order, for I regard this as very important. I have reason to know that the Paymaster-General, who has devoted a great deal of time to the study of this matter, has come to the conclusion that this is a practical and economical way of dealing with this question, and the report accompanying this shows conclusively that the sum to be spent for clerical service for the next fiscal year will be considerably less than the amount spent this year. it does not work out practically and satisfactorily, then we will adopt some other plan. I hope the gentleman from Arkansas will not make the point of order.

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, I notice that this bill changes the policy of the Government heretofore prevailing in the matter of making appropriations for employees all through it. In the last appropriation bill for the support of the navy I find, under the head of "Bureau of Yards and Docks," several estimates—navy-yard at Portsmouth, N. H., clerk, at $1,400; 1 mail messenger, $2 per diem, including Sundays; 1 messenger, at $600, and so forth. In this bill it is sought to strike out these various provisions and allow the Secretary of the Navy these various provisions and any the second respectively. The control of this particular navy-yard as he sees fit.

Mr. TAWNEY. No; if the gentleman will permit me, he is in error. He is limited by the amount which is segregated from the lump-sum appropriation and made available for clerical service. The amount is fixed on the basis of the number of service. clerks in the service and compensation paid at the present time. which are reported each year, and he has no power; he can not exceed the amount segregated from the lump-sum appropriation and devote it to the compensation of these clerks. He can not exceed that. So his power to employ clerical service is limited to the amount of money that is given him.

Why would it not be safer for us to say that Mr. MACON. he shall have a clerk at the Portsmouth Navy-Yard at a certain fixed rate of pay, a messenger at a certain pay, and other officers there of a certain kind and a certain pay, as the necessities may require, and then appropriate a total amount and require the Secretary of the Navy to stay within that sum? Would not that be safer than to say that the sum shall be a certain amount, and then allow him to name all the officers he pleases, and then come in later with a deficiency for the payment of employees named by him who have performed services and have the House make the appropriation for that deficiency?

Mr. TAWNEY. If the gentleman will permit me, I will answer his question. The reason is very manifest. There is no one who can tell accurately how many clerks or how many messengers or how many draftsmen will be required in the next fiscal year.

Mr. MACON. Then, how can you appropriate a lump sum and say that he can not go beyond that and know that a sufficient number of employees have been provided for?

Mr. TAWNEY. If the gentleman will permit me, I will explain. If he has not the money to expend for any more clerks than he is employing in the Brooklyn Navy-Yard and needs more clerks, then under this provision he can transfer clerks from other navy-yards to the Brooklyn Navy-Yard.

Mr. MACON. I do not object to the transfer feature of the provision.

Mr. TAWNEY. During that congested period.

Mr. MACON. I do not object to the transfer feature of this at all, and if the gentleman will frame his amendment so as to only provide for the transfer so he can use them at the Portsmouth or any other navy-yard, or at any other point he sees fit, whenever their services are required there, I would not raise a point of order against that kind of a proposition, I do not care how new the legislation might be.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. Mr. Chairman, I think perhaps I can make it somewhat clear to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. Macon]. The amount here of the limit of the different appropriations under the different bureaus is the amount expended last year, which is as near the economic point of expenditure as was possible for the committee to arrive at; but under the law as it is now the Secretary of the Navy could have expended $7,000,000 or $8,000,000 more for these clerks and inspection hire, and pay it out from the lump sums for ordnance and armor and for construction and repair. The committee, now taking as the basis of what they believe is an economic administration of the employment of clerks, draftsmen, and inspectors, have taken some of the last year's expenditures and put them under the different bureaus, and also put a proviso under those general appropriations that not one dollar shall be expended by the Secretary of the Navy from those appropriations for clerk hire, inspection, draftsmen, and where heretofore he had the right-an unlimited rightwithout any statement as to the amount, to do this, we believe now we have come to a more economic position regarding the matter.

Mr. MACON. In reply to what the gentleman has said about the appropriations being as near the amount that was carried in the bill of twelve months ago as it is possible to get them, or words to that effect, I will say that I notice that the increase on this very paragraph is $145,550.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. I can reply to that, because that $145,000 was taken out of the appropriation of what we call "O and O," ordnance, and out of the appropriation for construction and repair. We took that from them and say they can not spend any more money out of this appropriation and put it in here.

Mr. MACON. If you can so particularize as to the service that will be necessary to be performed at these different navyyards or places, whatever they may be, as to be able to name a lump sum of money to pay therefor, then why, in the name of reason, common sense, and every other good thing, could not the committee come to some idea as to how many employees would be needed, how much money it would take to pay them?

Mr. OLCOTT. We know how many men, but we do not know at which yard they are to be employed.

Mr. MACON. I do not object to the transfer feature, but I do think Congress should say how many clerks we are going to have and what their salaries shall be and not let the head of some bureau say it.

Mr. ROBERTS. Will the gentleman yield to me for a mo-

Mr. MACON. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. ROBERTS. I think I can give the gentleman from Arkansas some information on the present practices which this legislation is seeking to do away with. The gentleman read a moment ago the provision for clerks in a certain bureau in the navy-yard at Portsmouth, N. H. Doubtless he thinks, as most any person would think from reading the appropriation bill of last year, that the particular clerks named there were the only ones employed in that bureau in that yard.

Mr. MACON. They ought to have been.

Mr. ROBERTS. We will not dispute on that point, but as a matter of fact the naval appropriation bills for years have carried for each bureau in each yard what is called the "civil establishment," specifying a few clerks, messengers, and others doing clerical service. They were on a per annum basis.

The number specified in the bill, however, was in no instance anywhere near the number of men employed in that bureau in the yard. These extra ones were called "special laborers," and were on a per diem basis, and their pay came out of the appropriations for armor and armament, ordnance and ordnance stores, and so forth. Congress had no way whatever of knowing how many men in the various bureaus of the navy-yards were doing clerical work, and they did not know where their pay was coming from. When we appropriated a given number of millions for armor and armament—for instance, for the armor and guns that went on the battle ships—we naturally thought every dollar of that went toward the purchase of armor and guns. But we found out after a while that considerable sums, running perhaps into hundreds of thousands of dollars, were being taken out of the appropriations to pay for purely clerical services in the various bureaus of ordnance and in various other departments of this Government in the yards and stations throughout the country.

Mr. MACON. Why does not the gentleman take some steps to prevent that very thing?

Mr. ROBERTS. One moment, if the gentleman will pardon me. I will come to that, and I think he will appreciate it. Every time, since I have been a Member in this House, when there has been a proposition on a naval bill to put in an additional clerk in any of those bureaus, some person has risen to a point of order that this is new legislation, and it is immediately stricken out.

Mr. MACON. Just there, Mr. Chairman, I would like to suggest to the gentleman from Massachusetts that he is in error. As I understand it, under existing law the Appropriations Committee has the right to appropriate for additional clerks in every branch of the departments—as many clerks as it thinks is needed in any branch of the various departments of the Government—and the point of order will not lie against it; it only lies against an increase of their salaries.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. ROBERTS. If the gentleman will pardon me, the Appropriations Committee can provide for clerks in Washington, but not for clerks in the arsenals, gun factories, naval stations, and similar places outside of Washington. Those positions are provided for in the appropriation bills of the Naval Committee or Military Committee or some other committee.

Mr. FITZGERALD. If the gentleman from Arkansas will yield and permit, I think I can state the case. The law specifically prohibits—if the gentleman from Arkansas will listen to this—I will state the law specifically prohibits the employment in navy-yards and naval stations of per annum clerks except those that are specifically estimated and appropriated for, and it compels the employment of other clerks on a per diem basis, and they have been employing this large number of clerks. I desire to say to the gentleman in connection with this matter, here is the situation in the Brooklyn Navy-Yard. They are starting to build a battle ship and there is a permanent force of clerks, for instance, in the Bureau of Construction and Repair. It is necessary, in connection with the work on the battle ship, to employ a large number of clerks, inspectors, draftsmen, and other employees. The department, under the authority it possesses, has been employing them out of the general appropriation for the construction of this ship upon a per diem

Now, the Secretary of the Navy says:

If you will give me a lump sum and permit me to organize this force, put those there either on a per diem or per annum basis, as may be best, if you will give me power to increase the force within a reasonable limit or to decrease it, I can conduct the force there the same as the head of any great commercial establishment would. When clerks are unnecessary, drop them; when additional clerks are necessary, take them on and at the same time do more efficient work at a less expenditure. them on penditure.

The Paymaster of the Navy called upon me, and I went over it very carefully with him and other people, and I became convinced that this practice, which is now in force in the War Department, would work out beneficially and would really result in economy. This thing happened. There are to-day in a number of these navy-yards clerks doing identical work side by side, one on a per annum and the other on a per diem basis. them receiving less privileges than the other creates discord and dissatisfaction, and these men are actually permanent employees, although on a per diem basis; and it would result in much more thorough work, in my judgment, if the department were given the authority, with the restrictions the committee has wisely put on it, to utilize a lump sum instead of an unlimited sum for the purposes specified.

Mr. ROBERTS. Mr. Chairman, let me say a word, in conclusion, to the gentleman from Arkansas. I have been particularly interested in this very subject for a number of years, seeking, to the best of my ability, to get a better control in the way of correction over the clerical expenditures of the Navy Department in the navy-yards and naval stations.

I became cognizant of the fact some time ago that no person outside of the Navy Department had the slightest idea how many people doing clerical work were really employed in all these navy-yards and stations, and upon investigation found that the number could be increased to the total amount of so great an appropriation as that for armor and armament, if necessary, without coming to Congress for any authorization. Now, the committee have been working on this question for several years and, in connection with the Paymaster-General of the Navy, have finally evolved this legislation as a practical solution of the question. The Secretary of the Navy can not employ in the department of steam engineering, for instance, in all the bureaus of steam engineering in all the yards and stations of the country, any more clerks, any more men doing clerical service, than the total amount of the limitation that we place on the appropriation for steam engineering.

Mr. MACON. I answered that inquiry a few moments ago, Mr. Chairman, by saying that the department has been exceeding appropriations that have been made for the maintenance or conduct of the affairs for the particular department.

Mr. ROBERTS. The gentleman can not put his finger on an appropriation for that purpose.

Mr. MACON. I will not say the navy particularly, but some of the departments have.

Mr. ROBERTS. The navy have exceeded the appropriation for clerical service, but they have helped it out by taking the money out of another appropriation. That has been the condition that we are seeking to do away with, so that we will know just where the money comes from for clerical service, and how much in their opinion is necessary.

Mr. MACON. If you would name the employees and say they should receive so much per annum or so much per day, then you could get at a proper amount to appropriate for their services.

Mr. ROBERTS. Let me say just a word further to the gentleman. No great, successful, private business undertakes for a moment to fix irrevocably the compensation their employees shall receive, whether they be clerks or whether they be workingmen, and these navy-yards should be great business enterprises and within a reasonable limit have the same elasticity as to the number of clerks and their compensation that you would find in any private undertaking, and this is what we have done in this And let me say just one word further. The amount named as the limitation on every one of these bureaus is the result of computation based on the number of men now actually employed plus the number they think they would require for another year.
Mr. FITZGERALD. And not only that-

Mr. ROBERTS. And there is the limitation. The Secretary can not exceed it in this year.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The department has submitted in a document to Congress a statement showing the clerks, and compensation per diem and per annum, employed at these various places and expecting to be employed, and it was upon this detailed information that the amounts here have been made. That detailed information is before Congress now. It House document 1224 of the second session of the Sixtieth Congress

Mr. MACON. I want to ask the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations if this is not a step in the direction of giving all of the departments of the United States the right to name the number of employees?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think not. It does not apply at all to the civil establishment in Washington.

Mr. MACON. But it does apply to civil establishments elsewhere. If we have it elsewhere, why not have it here in Washington? Mr. FITZGERALD. But the department has to-day the power to employ all the clerical, inspection, and drafting forces it needs in these various stations, out of lump appropriations, without any limitation except this one—that is, that the employees must be put upon a per diem instead of a per annum compensation. This provision will restrict to the amounts specified under the various heads the number that we can appro-

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, this is a big question, and I have not the time, or have not had, to go into it as this committee has done. The members of the committee, as well as the members of the Appropriation Committee, whose duty it is to guard the expenditures of this Government, assure me that this is not a precedent looking to the giving to the heads of the various departments of the United States the right to select as many clerks as they desire and pay them such salary as they see fit.

That being the case, I am not going to put my judgment against the combined judgment of the Committee on Appropriations and the Committee on Naval Affairs in this particular instance, and I will not insist upon the point of order.

Mr. TAWNEY. I want to say, Mr. Chairman, to the gentleman from Arkansas that there is no thought of using this as a precedent with respect to the classified service in the executive departments in the city of Washington. There is no thought of that kind whatever.

I now offer the amendment I sent to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as Ioliows:

After "each," line 15, page 5, insert:
"Provided further, That it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Navy to submit to Congress at its next session and for its consideration a schedule of rates of compensation, annual or per diem, that should, in his judgment, be permanently fixed by law for clerical, inspection, and messenger service in navy-yards, naval stations, and purchasing pay offices, and in fixing such rates of compensation he shall have due regard for the rates usually paid for like services in the respective localities by employers other than the United States, and he shall not recommend any rate exceeding that being paid by the United States at any such yards, stations, or offices prior to January 1, 1909."

Mr. FOSS. I have no objection to that amendment, only I think it ought to be amended in this particular: Insert after the word "offices" the words "superintending constructor's office and inspection of engineering material."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered to the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "offices" insert "superintending constructor's office and inspection of engineering material."

Mr. FOSS. Now I accept the amendment.

Mr. TAWNEY. I accept the amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment as amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

After "each," line 15, page 5, insert:

"Provided further, That it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Navy to submit to Congress at its session and for its consideration a schedule of rates of compensation, annual or per diem, that should in his judgment be permanently fixed by law for clerical, inspection, and messenger service in navy-yards, naval stations, and purchasing pay offices, superintending constructors' offices, and inspectors of engineering material; and in fixing such rates of compensation he shall have due regard for the rates usually paid for like services, in the respective localities, by employers other than the United States, and he shall not recommend any rate exceeding that being paid by the United States at any such yards, stations, or offices prior to January 1, 1909."

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment:

The Clerk read as follows:

After the amendment just adopted insert the following: "Provided further, That persons employed in the clerical, drafting, and inspection forces at navy-yards or stations discharged for lack of work or insufficiency of funds shall thereafter be preferred in employment in such navy-yards and stations in the clerical, drafting, and inspection and messenger forces."

Mr. FOSS. I reserve the point of order to hear from the gentleman.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Well, the amendment was offered to new matter in the bill which was subject to the point of order, and it is germane to the provision.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the amendment is not offered to new matter in the bill. An amendment was pending before the committee, and no suggestion was made of amendment; and that amendment has been disposed of.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It comes in this paragraph immediately after the new matter. But there may not be any difficulty about it, Mr. Chairman. Under the provisions in the bill, it will be possible for the Secretary of the Navy, at any time the needs of the service require, to dismiss men in the clerical, inspection, and messenger services. If these men be dismissed merely because of lack of work or insufficiency of funds, the effect of this amendment will be to give them preference in employment in the service. It does not cover the case where a man is dismissed for any cause except lack of funds or lack of work. It seems to me where a man has been employed as a clerk, or in the drafting service, and his work has been satisfactory, and he has been dismissed under this power simply because there is nothing for him to do, that he should be preferred when men are to be taken back in that particular service.

Mr. OLCOTT. Will the gentleman yield to me for a moment?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Certainly.

Mr. OLCOTT. I have no particular objection to the theory of the amendment, but I think there certainly should be some time limitation put upon it. You do not limit it as to time. There should be a limit of two years, or something of the kind.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think one year would do.

Mr. PADGETT. I would like to ask the gentleman this question: Suppose, during the interim between his dismissal and the time for further employment, the Government can employ one better qualified and more efficient; should the less efficient be given preference?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, if a man is discharged because of inefficiency that will settle it, and this will not apply: but just to show the effect of the suggestion of the gentleman, somebody will say he will not take back a man who was discharged simply because he had nothing to do, because somebody suggests that some one is a more efficient man. I wish to eliminate that question from consideration of the matter as far as I can.

Mr. BATES. Do you not think it limits the discretion now lodged in the Secretary?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I am not going to put myself in the position of saying that. All this does is that when a man is dropped from the clerical force because there is a lack of work or an insufficiency of funds he is to be given preference in employment. Why should not clerks who are dropped simply because there is no work for them and no funds to pay them be given preference to be taken back in the service when there is employment?

Mr. DAWSON. If the gentleman will permit me. As he is well aware, all of these clerks and clerical employees go into the service through the Civil Service Commission. They are all classified employees, and it seems to me that there is ample provision in the general law relating to the classified service, giving such preference as they are entitled to in connection with reemployment.

Mr. FITZGERALD. If a man be dropped from the service, as I recall the provisions of the civil-service act, he can be reinstated.

Mr. DAWSON. Within a year.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Within one year; and that, it seems to me, is a proper provision to insert here.

Mr. ROBERTS. He can be reinstated, but he does not have

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not wish to be put in the attitude of going to the department and asking favors. I think if a man's services have been such that he was an efficient and competent man, he ought to go back on his merits within the proper time.

Mr. DAWSON. Does the gentleman contemplate to make this continuous, or does he intend to limit this preference to one year?

Mr. FITZGERALD. In response to that suggestion I will say that I think a year would be a proper time. I do not say that it has occurred or that it will occur, but it might occur that there would be a reduction of force to-day, and next week the same number of men might be taken back, and a man who had been employed for years and was a competent man, because of the fact that he lacked certain backing would be unable to get back into the service. I think that is an injustice, I think a modification "within one year from the date of his separation from the service" would meet the objection.

Mr. OLCOTT. I move to amend the proposed amendment by inserting after the word "shall" the words "for one year," so that it will read, "shall for one year thereafter."

Mr. FITZGERALD. I am glad to modify the amendment in

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the amendment will be modified as suggested, and it will be reported by the Clerk as modified.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided further, That persons employed in the clerical, drafting, and inspection force at navy-yards or stations discharged for lack of work or insufficiency of funds shall for one year thereafter be preferred for employment in such navy-yards or stations in the clerical, drafting, inspection, and messenger forces.

The CHAIRMAN. Is the point of order withdrawn?

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I am rather opposed, as a general principle, to limiting the discretion of the Secretary of the Navy in a matter of this character, in the employment of men whom he shall take back after a number have been discharged; but in view of the amendment providing that it shall apply for one year, which, I understand, is practically the civil-service rule, I shall withdraw my point of order to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Contingent, navy: For all emergencies and extraordinary expenses, exclusive of personal services in the Navy Department, or any of its subordinate bureaus or offices at Washington, D. C., arising at home or abroad, but impossible to be anticipated or classified, to be expended on the approval and authority of the Secretary of the Navy, and for such purposes as he may deem proper, $46,086: Provided, That the accounting officers of the Treasury are hereby authorized and directed to allow, in the settlement of accounts of disbursing officers involved, payments made under the appropriation "Contingent, navy," to civilian employees appointed by the Navy Department for duty in and serving at naval stations maintained in the island possessions during the fiscal year 1910.

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, for the purpose of asking a question in regard to this appropriation. I notice in last year's bill the amount carried for this purpose was $65,000, and this year it is $46,086. Did the gentleman find that he had appropriated too much a year

Mr. FOSS. No; but in view of this provision which we have just passed, we have taken out the clerical service which was formerly paid for out of this appropriation, and reduced it by that amount.

Mr. ROBERTS. You will find in all these items a reduction where the clerical force came in under the old provision.

Mr. FOSS. It has been provided for in another way, and so has been taken out all along.

Mr. MACON. I withdraw the pro forma amendment. The Clerk read as follows:

BUREAU OF NAVIGATION.

Transportation: For travel allowance of enlisted men discharged on account of expiration of enlistment; transportation of enlisted men and apprentice seamen at home and abroad, with subsistence and transfers en route, or cash in lieu thereof; transportation to their homes, if residents of the United States, of enlisted men and apprentice seamen discharged on medical survey, with subsistence and transfers en route, or cash in lieu thereof, transportation of sick or insane enlisted men and apprentice seamen to hospitals, with subsistence and transfers en route, or cash in lieu thereof; apprehension and delivery of deserters and stragglers, and for railway guides and other expenses incident to transportation, $818,000.

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of getting some information from the chairman of the committee concerning this appropriation. The last naval appropriation bill carried $475,000 for this purpose. This one carries $818,000, an increase of $343,000. The chairman yesterday, in his remarks on the bill when he presented it to the House, stated that there had been no increase of men asked for this year. That being the case, I can hardly reconcile the increase of appropriation here unless he expects that there will be a great number of deserters and stragglers who will have to be apprehended and brought to account for their desertions and stragglings

Mr. FOSS. I want to say that there were two deficiencies under this appropriation, one of $110,000 and one of $135,000. Mr. MACON. Then they exceeded the appropriation of last

Mr. FOSS. Yes; the railroad rates are higher now, and the transportation of men since we passed the railroad rate law has cost more. The Government does not get as good rates as they did before that.

Mr. MACON. Does the gentleman feel certain that the appropriation which we will make this year will not be exceeded?

Mr. FOSS. Well, it is a very liberal appropriation, and I think it will not be exceeded.

Mr. MACON. I will withdraw the pro forma amendment, Mr. KELIHER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add provise, line 22, page 6:

"Provided, That the Secretary of the Navy is hereafter authorized to transport to their homes or places of enlistment, as he may designate, all discharged naval prisoners. The expense of such transportation shall be paid out of any money that may be to the credit of prisoners when discharged; where there is no such money, the expense shall be paid out of money received from fines and forfeitures imposed by naval courtsmartial."

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order to that amendment.

Mr. FOSS. I would like to ask the gentleman from Massachusetts if this is the same provision that he showed me some time ago, and which is recommended by the Navy Department?

Mr. KELIHER. I desire to state, in answer to the question of the chairman of the committee, that what this amendment will obviate has been sought for some time by the Secretary of the Navy and every official in the Navy Department who comes in contact with the handling of naval prisoners. We have about 1,200 naval prisoners, distributed at Boston, Portsmouth, Mare Island, and Puget Sound. We recruit the men from whom these prisoners come from all over the country. A man may be recruited in the city of Minneapolis, in the gentleman's [Mr. Stafford's] State of Minnesota, go into the navy, commit some breach of discipline, be court-martialed, and sentenced to the naval prison in Boston. When his sentence expires he is dis-charged upon the streets of Boston without one penny to his credit. The result has been, to an alarming extent, that the ranks of crime have been recruited from these unfortunates, that our state board of charity has had to send back innumerable men to all sections of the country, and it is a crying evil that should have been remedied long ago.

Now, if my amendment obtains, it will eliminate a disgraceful feature of naval conditions which exists to-day. It will insure a prisoner when discharged a railroad ticket to the place from whence he was recruited or enlisted or to his home, the discretion of the Secretary of the Navy to designate which.

Mr. Chairman, I have innumerable cases here to cite in proof that this is a crying evil. The authorities are troubled in Portsmouth, N. H., in Boston, at Puget Sound, and at Mare Island. We have had cases in great numbers in the city of Boston, where the charity bodies have had to provide for these poor devils who have been cast penniless from the naval prison without a penny in their pockets, and no way of obtaining the pressing necessities of life, not to speak of the means to reach home. When you stop to think that federal prisoners, when discharged from federal prisons where they were sent for committing offenses against federal laws, are provided transportation to the place of their conviction; that Congress annually appropriates money to send these men to their homes upon the completion of their sentences-men who have committed serious and often heinous crimes; that you appropriate money to meet them at the prison door to send them back home, it would seem that these poor devils of bluejackets should have at least equal treatment,

This matter has been thoroughly thrashed out at the department; it has been recommended by the Secretary of the Navy, and is in accord with the consensus of the best opinion of navy officials who have studied the method of the disposition of navy prisoners, who think that when this provision contained in my amendment is put into operation many of these incidents, so amendment is put into operation many of these incidents, so annoying to the communities in which naval prisons are located and this disgraceful phase of naval life, will be obviated. To show how Boston is called upon to care for men from all over the country who are discharged from the naval prison in that city, I submit the following list, showing names and home addresses of-

Born in Philadelphia; enlisted in New York; says he has no home.

Mr. TAWNEY. What is the practice as to the discharge of prisoners from military prisons in the army?

Mr. KELIHER, I understand that they are transported home, but I can not speak with authority.

Mr. FITZGERALD. They are transported to the place of enlistment, I think.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Wisconsin insist on his point of order?

Mr. STAFFORD. With the statement that this amendment has the approval of the Secretary of the Navy and the chairman of the Naval Committee, I will withdraw the point of order.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the chairman of the committee a question. What railroads out West at this time carry the federal soldiers and our ammunition and muniments of war either at a reduced rate or free? The gentleman will remember that in chartering several of these western railroads the charter provided they should charge the Government, I think, less than they charge the public at large. What is the law now on that subject, or is there a law?

Mr. FOSS. I will state that this particular appropriation has necessarily been increased in view of the fact that in July of the present year the Central Pacific and the Western Pacific railroad companies completed the payment of their bonded indebtedness to the Government, and no further deduction was made from bills of those companies.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. The gentleman will remember that the charters were granted with some such provision as that, that the Secretary of War should fix the rate at which they should carry the government supplies and the army and the members of the navy.

Mr. FOSS. Yes. Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. They should make certain con-cessions to the Government, because the Government had given them these rights of way. The gentleman does not know whether that has been abandoned or abrogated?

Mr. FOSS. I think it is still in force.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking a question. I understood the chairman of the committee to state that rates had been advanced to the committee to state that rates had been advanced to the committee to state that the committee the committee that the committee the committee that the committee the committee that the commit since the rate-bill legislation had been passed. Am I correct about that?

Mr. FOSS. I understand that the military traffic is the same as that of the civilian.

Mr. SIMS. The gentleman said it had been increased after the passage of that legislation.

Mr. FOSS. Yes; I think it has been.

Mr. SIMS. Since the rate legislation?

Mr. PADGETT. They were given special rates before.

Mr. FOSS. Before the railroad-rate legislation the Government obtained special rates.

Mr. SIMS. And now they do not? Mr. FOSS. Now, they do not.

Mr. SIMS. Does the gentleman understand that this increase in rate is retaliatory?

Mr. FOSS. I do not know that I consider it so. Mr. SIMS. Then it is a mere coincidence of the passing of the railroad-rate legislation that the railroads have put up rates on the Government,

Mr. FOSS. I shall have to let the gentleman judge of that for himself.

The chairman referred to that as a fact. Mr. SIMS.

Mr. STAFFORD. I wish to say in reply to the query propounded by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Sims], that in the land-grant roads it is a matter of charter whereby the rates are fixed, and by which the Government is given a preferential rate for the transportation of troops and enlisted men and supplies, but as I understand the increased rates on other roads since the enactment of the interstate-commerce act, it has resulted by reason of the special provision of law itself that forbids the railroad making any preferential charge to the Government or to anybody else.

The practice heretofore has been for the Government to receive a preferential rate under a contract for the carriage of men and supplies, and to-day they are compelled because of the law to treat the Government on the same plane as they take individuals. It is the result of our own enactment by which the railroads are compelled to treat the Government on the same terms as they treat individuals and all other users of railroads.

Mr. SIMS. Under the rate bill can a railroad not transport a regiment of soldiers for less money than it would the same number of private individuals the same distance?

Mr. STAFFORD. I say it can not. It must treat the Government in the same way that it treats individuals. It could, under the railroad rate law, make a rate for a larger number of men if it saw fit.

Mr. NORRIS. That would have to be open to everybody.

Mr. STAFFORD. That would have to be accorded to every body and all treated alike. The railroads can no longer under the rate law make preferential agreements with the Gov-

Mr. SIMS. In the transportation of soldiers, sailors, and marines, does not the Government pay out a very large sum of Mr. STAFFORD. There is no question that the Government pays out large sums of money for that.

Mr. SIMS. And that comes out of the taxpayer?

Mr. STAFFORD. That does not need any reply. That is obvious.

Mr. SIMS. And why should we not, if the law is as the gentleman has stated, amend the law so as to permit the railroads in transporting the property of the Government, soldiers, sailors, and marines to give a preferential rate?

Mr. STAFFORD. I am not here at the present time to argue the merits of the proposition whether the Government should receive a preferential rate over an individual. That is a matter of business, and I do not see any reason why the Government should be treated any differently from any private concerns, and under the interstate-commerce act the Government is accorded the same treatment as that accorded to a private individual.

Mr. SIMS. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Foss], the chairman of the committee, stated the facts merely, without giving any reason for the facts, and I made these inquiries to develop the facts; and if they have been developed, I feel my inquiry has not been entirely in vain.

Mr. DAWSON. Let me add just one word. Admiral Pillsbury, in his testimony before the committee, made this state-

We do not begin to get the favorable rates from the railroads that we once did.

Mr. SIMS. That leaves the idea that it is the railroads and not the law

Mr. DAWSON. Oh, no; it is by reason of the enactment of the law which puts the Government on the same footing with individuals and which opens the highways of transportation to one equal treatment of all alike, to the small shippers, as well as to the big shippers.

Mr. SIMS. But I would like to ask the gentleman who has knowledge, why should not the railroads be permitted to transport government material, soldiers, sailors, and supplies, which must be paid for by taxation, why should not they be permitted to do it at a lower rate?

Mr. NORRIS. Why should they?
Mr. SIMS. Simply because it comes by means of taxation, and if the railroads, having a large amount of shipments to be made by the Government, desire or are willing to take it at a lower rate than the same service to individuals or a corporation, in the interest of the taxpayers, why should not they be permitted to do so?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; but the gentleman must remember the large shipper is placed on an equal basis with every other man.

Mr. SIMS. Yes; but the large private shipper is not shipping soldiers or sailors, for which the taxpayer must provide the money

Mr. NORRIS. There is no reason why, if the Government is large shipper, it should be treated any better than other shippers.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I renew the amendment because I want to inquire a little further on this. I want to ask the gentleman-

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will suspend until the Clerk reaches the point in the bill where it is in order.

The Clerk read as follows:

Recruiting: Expenses of recruiting for the naval service; rent of rendezvous and expenses of maintaining the same; advertising for and obtaining men and apprentice seamen; actual and necessary expenses in lieu of mileage to officers on duty with traveling recruiting parties, $130,000: Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be expended in recruiting seamen, ordinary seaman, or apprentice seamen, unless a certificate of birth or written evidence, other than his own statement or statement of another based thereon, satisfactory to the recruiting officer, showing the applicant to be of age required by naval regulations, shall be presented with the application for enlistment.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. The gentleman from Wisconsin spoke about land-grant railroads. I wish you would tell us which those railroads are, and whether or not these land-grant railroads have raised the rates on the Government for transportation; and if so, to what extent.

Mr. STAFFORD. I do not profess to be an encyclopedia of information in regard to land-grant railroads, having only a meager knowledge

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I think the compliment is justified-

Mr. STAFFORD (continuing). Of railroad legislation. I have not stated in any remarks I have made so far that these land-grant railroads have violated in any way the conditions of the grants which directed them to carry at a less rate troops and supplies for the Government. As to what railroads are land-grant roads, I may say that the first land grant to a railroad was that granted to the Illinois Central Railroad Company about 1855, or somewhere in the fifties. This grant was the inauguration of that system.

Subsequently land grants were given to most, if not all, of the northwestern and western railroads and to all transcontinental lines west of the Mississippi, with the exception of the Great Northern and the road that is now building to the west, the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Does the gentleman understand the Hepburn railroad-rate law we passed here was so amended as to permit the railroads to abandon the limitations of the charters and permit them to charge the Government what they please?

Mr. STAFFORD. Oh, farthest from that. The land-grant condition is still obligatory upon the railroads, and the inter-state-commerce act in no wise affected it, but it did affect, as I tried to represent, the other railroads that were not subject to any contract or any obligation, and those railroads are not obliged to grant to the Government a preferential rate over that accorded to individuals.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Do these land-grant railroads fail now to give the special rates to the Government in its transportation that it formerly gave because of the land-grant requirements?

Mr. STAFFORD. I have no information one way or the other on the subject, but I do not believe that it is contended by anyone that any attempt has been made to violate the agreement under which they received their grants.

Mr. NORRIS. It would be a violation of law, would it not, if it gave preferential rates?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. What was that?

Mr. NORRIS. I was just suggesting that if the land-grant railroads, or any other, make a different rate to the Government than it did to the public, it would be a violation of the law known as the "Hepburn Act."

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I am very glad this question has come up. I think the department could very well afford to look into it, and I think the railroads ought to be reminded that now and then we dig up their charters. And I am very glad the gentleman from Wisconsin has stated what he has.

Mr. STAFFORD. I believe the chairman of the committee has stated that the increase in this appropriation and other appropriations for transportation has resulted from the payment to various transcontinental lines which, prior to this year, had a bonded indebtedness owing the Government. Prior to the past year the Government has been engaged in allotting the charges for this method of transportation to the fund which those railroads were obligated to pay; and now that this indebtedness has been entirely paid, the Government has to make the appropriation. Mr. DAWSON. I will add just a word. Two of the railroads are in the situation which the gentleman from Wisconsin has just stated. As it appears in a report on the naval bill, it is stated in there that this appropriation for transportation has increased.

Mr. FOSS. I mentioned that.

Mr. DAWSON. It has increased further by the fact that in July of the present year the Central Pacific and Western Pacific Railroad companies completed the payment of their bonded indebtedness to the Government. Therefore no further deduction was made from the bills of those companies remaining unpaid.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Cox] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by striking out the following, beginning with the word "unless." line 4. page 7, and ending with the word "officer." in line 6, and insert the following: "unless a verified written statement by the parents, or either of them, or in case of their death, a verified written statement by the legal guardian, be first furnished to the recruiting officer," so as to read:

"Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be expended in recruiting seamen, ordinary seamen, or apprentice seamen, unless a verified written statement by the parents, or either of them, or in case of their death, a verified written statement by the legal guardian be first furnished to the recruiting officer, showing applicant to be of age required by naval regulations, which shall be presented with the application for enlistment."

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order. Mr. COX of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I want to compliment the committee for the language used in the limitation of its bill. The proviso found in the bill as reported by the committee is as follows:

Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be expended in recruiting seamen, ordinary seamen, or apprentice seamen, unless a certificate of birth or written evidence, other than his own statement or statement of another based thereon, satisfactory to the recruiting officer, showing the applicant to be of age required by naval regulations, shall be presented with the application for enlistment.

To my mind, the committee evidently had some purpose in view when they placed this limitation in the bill. I do not know what was in the minds of the committee, but it strikes me that one thing that must evidently have been in their minds was the enormous, continued increase of men who leave the navy, or, in other words, become deserters.

It strikes me that the proof ought to be specific, that it ought to be certain, that the boy seeking to enter the navy is of proper I do not believe there is an employer of labor in the United States that is able to take from the father the services of his boy without the father's consent except the Government of the United States; and I believe that if the evidence had to be furnished to the recruiting officer from the parent, the father or mother, or in the event they were both dead, by the legally constituted guardian, that the boy was of proper military age, that would obviate a large amount of desertion that we now find in the navy of the United States.

I find reported all through this bill different sums of money appropriated for the purpose of looking after desertions, sums of money appropriated for the purpose of paying the expenses of courts-martial, and I believe that if the parents were consulted in the first instance by the son when he is proposing to join the navy, and takes his parents' advice, it would obviate a large number of these desertions.

Mr. FOSS. I think they are consulted; and very often the young man comes with his parents, and the recruiting officer very often goes out and talks with the parents.

Mr. COX of Indiana. It may be true, Mr. Chairman, that the parents are consulted very often in this matter, but what is the objection to requiring the parents to be consulted in the first instance, or what is the objection in permitting the parents themselves to furnish the written evidence, under their own oaths, that the son who is making an application to join the navy is of proper age?

Mr. EDWARDS of Georgia. Is there no such requirement in the bill now?

Mr. COX of Indiana. None whatever. Mr. FOSS. It shows that the applicant must furnish a certificate of birth, or written statement other than his own statement, and it usually comes from the parent, or, in case the parents are not living, from his guardian.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Grant that is the usual way in which it comes. What objection can there be to making it specific to come from the parents in the first instance? It strikes me that the amendment I have offered will obviate, certainly reduce within limits, the objection to the provision as reported by the committee.

Mr. FOSS.

Mr. FOSS. How would you change it? Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. COX of Indiana. Very well. Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. How would you prepare the way for a bright young man who desires to enter the navy, but who had neither parent living, nor had he a guardian?

Mr. COX of Indiana. Under the common law in force in the United States—and I suppose the same law is in force in every State in the Union—at the age of 14 years a child is conclusively presumed to be able to choose his own guardian, and if he desires to enter the navy, he would have a perfect right to select the guardian and go into court and have the court appoint the person selected by him his guardian.

Mr. FOSS. At what cost?

Mr. COX of Indiana. I suppose at some trifling cost-not over two or three dollars.

Mr. BENNET of New York. I move to strike out the last two words, for the purpose of agreeing very largely with the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Cox] and of saying to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. LOUDENSLAGER] that, apparently, in the city of New York there is an industry of becoming guardians for boys who are under the legal age for the purpose of doing that which the law now provides, and getting boys into the navy by getting a guardian's certificate. I hope the amendment will pass, not so much because of the desertions, not because they are so large as compared with the army, but to cover these cases of boys of 14 and 15 years when they go down there and swear falsely they are over 18, and go to some of these people and get them appointed as guardian on false papers and have the consents signed. We men who come from the seacoast districts have hundreds of cases of a most heartrending character where there does not seem to be any way of getting these young men out of the service, and when we present proof that the boy is not of legal age, then they prosecute him, or they have the right to prosecute him, for fraudulent enlistment. I do not believe it ought to be the purpose of the Government to put a premium on this class of offense.

Mr. EDWARDS of Georgia. Is it not true that the greater proportions of desertions are among the youngest members of the navy? That is, among this very class that are under age?
Mr. BENNET of New York. Not necessarily the youngest men, but from the most recent recruits. I would not say as to age; but, of course; a boy of 14 or 15 years has not a great sense of responsibility as regards desertion.

Mr. DIXON. I will ask my colleague if it is not a fact that he has had a number of instances—

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has long since expired.

Mr. FOSS. Now, as to the point of order—

Mr. SHERLEY. I call for the regular order.

Mr. FOSS. I would ask the gentleman to explain one or two points in his amendment, if the gentleman from Kentucky will wait a minute.

Mr. SHERLEY. Well; but, Mr. Chairman, the "gentleman from Kentucky" is not willing to have an academic discussion when the point of order is still pending. Let us have it made and decided.

Mr. FOSS. If the gentleman will stay a moment, possibly we can come to some agreement by the insertion of words or changing them in the regular provision.

g them in the regular provision.

Mr. SHERLEY. I insist on the regular order.

Contlemen will suspend. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Illinois on the point of order.

Mr. FOSS. I think it is a change of existing law.

The CHAIRMAN. It will be noticed that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana is to a provision in the bill offered in the way of a limitation to the appropriation. If it is merely a limitation to the appropriation, then the amendment is in order. If it be more than a limitation of the appropriation, then it is merely a limitation on a provision already in the bill, subject to the point of order, and the point of order not being made, the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana the Chair holds to be in order.

Mr. DIXON. I will ask my colleague, Is it not a fact that in a number of instances parents have requested you to secure the discharge of their sons from the navy-minors, enlisted without their knowledge or consent?

Mr. COX of Indiana. Last winter I had two such instances coming up from my district. And I repeat, in my judgment, if the parents are consulted in the first instance, before their sons join, we will obviate a large amount of the desertions that are going on from the navy. The number of desertions from the navy is absolutely appalling. We have to-day 12,000 desertions from the navy out of a total of something like 40,000 enlisted men in the naval service.

To the average mind that indicates that there is something wrong, and that there should be some remedy brought about for wrong, and that there should be some remedy brought about for the present existing evil. I imagine that if a boy consults his parents before he enlists in the navy, and takes the advice which he will receive from his father, he will look well to the true condition before he enlists in the United States Navy. Again, as I said a moment ago, the United States is the only employer I know anything about that can take from a parent the assistance of the child before he reaches the age of 21 years. The age at which a boy can now enlist in the navy, if I am correctly informed, under the statutes of the United States, is 18; and when the Government of the United States undertakes to take from the parent three years' labor of the child and give it to the Government of the United States, I insist that the parent should be first consulted before that is done.

The parent should have the first claim upon the child for the child's work and labor, and when the Government takes the parent's right away before it reaches 21, strong evidence should be presented to the recruiting officer, showing that the boy was of proper age to join the navy. My amendment makes it plain, certain, and positive just what must be done before the boy enlists to serve in the navy. It requires the verified affidavit of one of the parents, or, if both parents be dead, then the affidavit of the child's legal guardian. The fact that application must be accompanied by an affidavit, sworn to before some officer authorized to administer oaths, would, in my judgment, meet the objections now going on as to the way and manner boys are permitted to enter the naval service.

I hope it will obtain.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I call for the reading of the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will again report the amendment.

The amendment was again read.

Mr. OLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to the gentleman's amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York offers an amendment to the amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "unless," insert "a certificate of birth or."

Mr. OLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, that would provide that if a certificate of birth was produced, the other statement need not be; because, if a certificate of birth was produced there could be no possible question of the boy enlisting in the navy before he reached the age of 18. So, under the circumstances, it seems to me there can be no reason for getting the affidavit of the parent or guardian. I think the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana, with my amendment, is proper.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the gentleman's amendment?

Mr. OLCOTT. The amendment provides that if a certificate of birth can be produced, it shall not be necessary to obtain an affidavit from the parents.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has not yet indicated what his amendment is.

Mr. OLCOTT. I beg the pardon of the Chairman. It is offered as an amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana, to insert after the word "unless" the words "a cer-tificate of birth or."

The CHAIRMAN. And leave the rest of the amendment as it stands?

Mr. OLCOTT. And leave the rest of the amendment as it is. Mr. SHERLEY. May we have the amendment reported as it Mr. OLCOTT. will read if the two amendments are adopted?

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the Clerk will report the amendment as it would read with the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be expended in recruiting seamen, ordinary seamen, or apprentice seamen unless a certificate of birth or a verified written statement by the parents, or either of them, or in case of their death a verified written statement by the legal guardian, be first furnished to the recruiting officer, showing the applicant to be of age required by the naval regulations, which shall be presented with the application for enlistment.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Chairman, I was not giving close attention, but I think this amendment, if agreed to, would apply to every enlisted man in the navy, and would require the furnishing of these documents as to all of them before you could expend any of the money. It looks as though it applied generally; not to the future, but to all who have been enlisted, many of whom have been in the navy for years.

Mr. COX of Indiana. I did not catch the gentleman's ques-

Mr. KEIFER. Does not the amendment prohibit the use of the money appropriated unless it is first ascertained that there has been a proper certificate as to every enlisted man?

Mr. COX of Indiana. No; the amendment which I propose is that the application to join the navy must be accompanied by a verified statement of his parents, or one of them, or if they be both dead, then the verified affidavit of the legal guardian.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. OLCOTT) there were 35 ayes and 34 noes.

So the amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now recurs on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana as amended by the gentleman from New York.

The question was taken, and the amendment as amended was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Naval Home, Philadelphia, Pa.: One superintendent of grounds, at $720; 1 steward, at $720; 1 store laborer, at $480; 1 matron, at $420; 1 beneficiaries' attendant, at $240; 1 chief cook, at $480; 1 assistant cook, at $360; 1 assistant cook, at $240; 1 chief laundress, at $192; 5 laundresses, at $168 each; 4 scrubbers, at $168 each; 1 head waitress, at $192; 8 waitresses, at $168 each; 1 kitchen servant, at $240; 8 laborers, at $240 each; 1 stable keeper and driver, at $360; 1 master at arms, at $480; 2 house corporals, at $300 each; 1 barber, at $360; 1 carpenter, at $845; 1 painter, at $845: 1 engineer for elevator and machinery, $720; 3 laborers, at $360 each; 3 laborers, at $300 each; total for employees, $15,250.

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order against the provision, page 11, line 8, "1 store laborer at $480," and on page 12, lines 1 and 2, "1 engineer for elevator and machinery, $720."

Mr. FOSS. I will take the last one first. This simply increases the salary of this man $10 a month. They have heretofore had a master mechanic, and they have discontinued him.

fore had a master mechanic, and they have discontinued him, so to speak, and his duties are being performed by this engineer, and they desire to increase his pay $10 a month.

Mr. MACON. I thought it was the policy of the committee in this bill not to enumerate employees.

Mr. FOSS. This home is maintained and supported by the Mr. FOSS. This home is maintained and supported by the interest of the naval pension fund. It is made up of contributions from officers and men in the navy at 20 cents a month.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. It is the interest on prize money.

Mr. FOSS. Yes; interest on prize money goes into it, and every man in the navy has to contribute to it.

Mr. STAFFORD. Does the Government contribute anything in case there is a discrepancy?

Mr. FOSS. No.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. It is a home provided by the men and paid for by the interest on the prize money that is obtained, and they sort of manage it by a board themselves.

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, in view of the statement, I do not insist on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is withdrawn.

Mr. KELIHER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection. The Clerk read as follows:

In all, for Naval Home, $78,151, which sum shall be paid out of the income from the naval pension fund: Provided, That for the performance of such additional services in and about the Naval Home as may be necessary the Secretary of the Navy is authorized to employ, on the recommendation of the governor, beneficiaries in said home, whose compensation shall be fixed by the Secretary and pald from the appropriation for the support of the home.

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert on page 13, after line 4, the following:
"For badges and ribbons to be distributed by the Secretary of the Navy to officers and men now or formerly of the Volunteer and Regular Navy and Marine Corps who have participated in engagements and campaigns deemed worthy of such commemoration, $2,500."

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against that. It is not germane to this paragraph.

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. I will ask the gentleman to reserve his point of order.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. For how long?

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. One minute. This amendment was prepared by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS]. He was obliged to leave the House half an hour ago and requested me to present it and to make further request that it be passed without prejudice until to-morrow. I ask unanimous consent that the amendment may be passed without prejudice until Mr. WEEKS returns.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. I have no objection to allowing the matter to stand without prejudice until to-morrow.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Vermont? [After a pause.] The Chair hears

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Ordnance and ordnance stores: For procuring, producing, preserving, and handling ordnance material; for the armament of ships; for fuel, material, and labor to be used in the general work of the Ordnance Department; for furniture at naval magazines, torpedo stations, and proving ground; for maintenance of the proving ground and powder factory, and for target practice, and for pay of chemists, clerical, drafting, inspection, and messenger service in navy-yards, naval stations, and naval magazines: "Provided, That the sum to be paid out of this appropriation under the direction of the Secretary of the Navy for chemists, clerical, drafting, inspection, watchmen, and messenger service in navy-yards, naval stations, and naval magazines for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1910, shall not exceed $398,890.28." In all, $5,278,171.99: Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be expended for the purchase of shells or projectiles except for shells or projectiles purchased in accordance with the terms and conditions of proposals submitted by the Secretary of the Navy to all of the manufacturers of shells and projectiles and upon bids received in accordance with the terms and requirements of such proposals. All shells and projectiles shall conform to the standard prescribed by the Secretary of the Navy.

Mr. COX of Indiana, Mr. Chairman, I offer the following.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by adding the following paragraph, after the word "Navy," line 6, page 14: "Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be expended for the purchase of powder made, manufactured, or sold in violation of an act of Congress passed July 2, 1890, being an act entitled 'An act to protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraints of trade and monopolies,' and all amendments made thereto, which powder shall be purchased in accordance and with the conditions submitted by the Secretary of the Navy to all manufacturers, dealers, and sellers of powder, and upon bids received in accordance with the terms and requirements of such proposals as to carry into effect the limitations of this provision. All powder shall conform to the standard prescribed by the Secretary of the Navy: Provided, That the Secretary of the Navy shall receive no bid for the purchase of powder unless the bid is accompanied by an affidavit showing that the powder sought to be sold is not made, manufactured, or offered to be sold in violation of any law passed by Congress."

Mr. COX of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, the amendment which the clerk has just read is self-explanatory, and to my mind aims at a present existing evil, especially if the facts and information furnished us yesterday by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Gaines] are true, and as appears in the Record of yesterday; and that these facts are true there is no doubt, in my mind, at least.

It is evident, from the information furnished, that the Government is paying by far too much for the powder it is now using. It is equally evident from that information that powder can be manufactured by the Government of the United States at a great deal cheaper price than it is being manufactured now United States. And if the Government can do it, why not private individuals? by other manufacturers and sold to the Government of the

It strikes me that when the Government of the United States is paying 70 cents a pound for its powder, and that this amount pays 40 per cent dividend on the investment, it is entirely too much-too large a profit to the men engaged in the manufacture In the statement contained in proposition 8, it is of powder. figured out that upon another basis it would pay an investment of 171 per cent dividend. That would be sufficient to satisfy any ordinary manufacturer of powder who sells it to the Government. The amendment which I have submitted for the consideration of the committee proposes that no amount of money appropriated in this paragraph shall be used in the purchase of powder made, manufactured, or sold by any powder trust in the United States. It further provides that all bids for government powder shall be accompanied by sworn affidavits of the maker, manufacturer, or proposed seller of powder that he or they have not violated any of the laws of the United States in the making, selling, or manufacture of this powder. I believe the time has come when Congress should put some limitation upon these trusts when the proof is clear that they are selling their products to the Government at such enormous profits.

We are now, and for a great many years in the past have been, held up by the powder trust in the United States in the purchase of powder by the Government. It is the experience and observation of all who have had an opportunity to examine the situation that the Government never gets work performed for it as cheaply as private individuals, and when it is admitted upon the floor of this House that the Government is now, and for several years past has been, buying all of the powder it uses and consumes, both in its army and navy, from one concern, this to me is self-evident that the Government is at the mercy of this one institution. We can not get away from that proposition. No amount of argument or reasoning will let us get away from it, that the Government can manufacture powder a great deal cheaper than it is being manufactured now by this one powder trust and sold to the Government. Some attempt has been made to explain this proposition away upon different grounds, but all explanation has fallen far short of proof of this proposition.

Again, it is an historical fact, if not a political one, that the Government for quite a while past has waged a suit against this powder trust that is now manufacturing and selling all the powder to the Government which the Government uses and consumes. This presents an anomalous condition; the Government buying powder from a corporation which it now declares to be a trust in restraint of trade, and which it declares has entered into a combination and a conspiracy for the sole pur-pose of getting control of the powder factories in the United States, so that it may not only govern the law of supply and demand, but that it may be able to control the price of its product which it sells to the Government.

The Government has one powder factory of its own at Indianhead, Md., and this plant it has owned and operated for several years in the past. In a letter written from Indianhead, Md., August 2, 1902, Joseph Straus, lieutenant-commander, United States Navy, inspector of ordnance in charge, makes this state-

The cost of manufacturing 1,000,000 pounds of powder at the Indianhead works during the fiscal year recently closed has been 47.7 cents per pound, exclusive of alcohol. Every item due to its manufacture is included in this cost; all raw materials, chemicals, laboratories, expenses, heat, light, power, care of grounds, buildings, etc., have been reckoned; also a charge for loss by fire, based upon the mean fire loss for the last six years.

Here is the statement of a positive fact coming from a man high up in naval circles who knows, or at least ought to know, what he is talking about. He makes the positive declaration that the Government is now manufacturing its powder at 47.7 cents per pound, exclusive of alcohol. The cost of the alcohol which enters into the manufacture of a pound of powder does not exceed 4 cents. This would make the complete total cost of manufacture of a pound of powder not to exceed 51.7 cents, and yet we find it to be a positive fact to-day that the Government is paying this trust not less than 67 cents a pound for every pound of powder which the Government buys from it. Upon this basis of the cost of manufacture of a pound of pow-der Lieutenant-Commander Straus makes this deduction. Upon the basis of 1,000,000 pounds of powder manufactured per annum, it will be seen that the price of 70 cents per pound yields a profit of $264,000, and this considers every possible charge except the pay of the officers connected with the financial administration of the enterprise.

Again, the same officer draws the following deductions from the cost of manufacturing a pound of powder by the Government and makes a comparison as to the probable cost there is to a private manufacturer manufacturing powder and selling it to the Government at the price of 70 cents per pound.

savs:

The total investment at Indianhead will amount to about $650,000. On this basis the stockholders should receive a dividend of over 40 per cent on the capital invested if the powder is sold at 70 cents per pound. If it were sold at 55 cents per pound, this would yield 17.5 per cent profit on capital invested; and in case the orders were cut down during any one year to one-half, the profit should still be satisfactory.

Up to the time the Government began the manufacture of its own powder it was paying as high as $1 per pound for powder which it bought from this trust, but since the Government has begun the manufacture of powder the price, for some reason or other, has gradually dropped from $1 per pound to about 70 cents per pound, and as low as 67 cents per pound. Will anyone believe for a moment that this drop in the price of powder has been due to anything other than the fact that the Government of the United States has gone into the manufacture of powder itself?

As late as January 19, 1909, N. E. Mason, Chief of the Bureau of Ordnance, wrote the following letter to Representative

GAINES of Tennessee:

I have to inform you that there are nine steps or links in the chain of manufacture of powder; some stronger than others—that is, capacity is greater; output, 1,000,000 pounds at weakest point. To double capacity—that is, to make output 2,000,000 pounds—$250,000 would be required, the powder plant and drying plant being the large items. Cost of powder, labor, and material alone, 43 cents per pound, year ending July 1, 1908; somewhat higher now because of increase in cost of alcohol.

Here, again, is a statement made by a man who surely knows what he is talking about, and he says the total cost of making a pound of powder, including labor and materials, amounts to only 43 cents, and yet gentlemen insist that they are justified in not voting to curb and control this trust by limiting the money here appropriated to the extent of refusing to let any part of this appropriation be paid for the purchase of powder manufactured by trusts.

The Government erected its powder plant, if I mistake not, in 1898. There was appropriated in this year for the Governin 1898. There was appropriated in this year for the Government Powder Factory, $93,700; in 1898, $250,000; in 1899, $1,000,000; in 1899, $25,000; in 1899, $1,500; in 1900, $500,000; in 1901, $500,000; in 1902, $500,000; in 1903, $500,000; in 1903, $500,000; in 1904, $500,000; in 1905, $500,000; in 1906, $500,000; in 1907, $500,000.

The price of powder to the Government since the year 1897 has ranged as follows: 1897, 300,000 pounds, at $1 per pound; 1898, 2,543,000 pounds, at 80 cents per pound; 1899, 350,000 pounds, at 80 cents per pound; 1900, 695,000 pounds, at 80 cents per pound; 1901, 1,401,000 pounds, at 74 cents per pound; 1902, per pound; 1301, 1,401,000 pounds, at 74 cents per pound; 1903, 2,268,000 pounds, at 74 cents per pound; 1904, 4,642,710 pounds, at 74 cents per pound; 1905, 4,492,000 pounds, at 74 cents per pound; 1906, 2,025,000 pounds at 69 to 74 cents per pound; 1907, 2,375,000 pounds, at 67 to 69 cents per pound.

It will be observed that the price dropped from 1897 to 1907 from $1 per pound to as low as 67 cents per pound. It would be useless and idle to ask the cause of this rapid decline in the cost of powder. It can be assigned to nothing other than the fact that the Government has gone into the manufacture of powder, and has, to a certain extent, forced the price of powder down. Gentlemen may talk as long and as loud as they please, but it is a notorious fact that the Government of the United States is to-day within the grasp of the worst trust that ever fastened itself upon the American people; and, if the Government, through its legal department, is unable to cope with this monster, it is time that we, the Representatives of America, should undertake to clip its wings by providing that no part of the money herein appropriated shall be expended for the purchase of powder made, manufactured, or sold by any trust engaged in unlawful restraint of trade in the United States.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois insist on his point of order?

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I desire simply to state that the price fixed this year is 67 cents instead of 70 cents; that this price is fixed by the joint army and navy board, who investigated the cost to the Government of the manufacture of powder; and I may say here that I have what has been regarded as a confidential statement by the board, in which they make a statement of the actual cost at the navy powder factory per pound of powder for the year 1907, including depreciation of plant, one-seventh of the fire losses. The plant has been in operation for seven years. This price is made exclusive of alcohol and such administrative expenses as the salaries of the officers on duty at the plant and the salaries of higher officials and other clerical force.

It is figured at 45 cents. Then the alcohol which enters into the manufacture of the powder is nearly 4 cents and the administrative cost is figured at nearly 3 cents. Then there are the taxes and the interest on the capital and the rejections, which, altogether, make up a total of 63:48 cents. I want to say that figure of 45 cents is the average from year to year, it being slightly less in 1908, due to the efficiency of the acid plant at Indianhead. On the other hand, the price of alcohol has recently increased very materially, which about offsets the savings made by the acid plant. The figure of 45 cents is still about as close as can be arrived at for the purpose in hand. That is the basis upon which they figure, and to that they add these other things which I have already enumerated. But—and I wish the gentleman's attention on this—this 63.48 cents, as computed by them, does not include the following items, for which no satisfactory estimates can be obtained. First, there are the freight charges. The companies are required to deliver f. o. b. any point in the United States. Second, it does not cover experimental work. Third, it does not cover allowances for extra hazardous risks and pensions to old or disabled employees. Fourth, risk of expensive plant becoming obsolete by changes in composition of powder or in methods of manufacture. When the change to smokeless powder was made, in 1899, a large amount of machinery suitable only for manufacturing brown powder, and which had recently been installed at a considerable expense, was rendered useless. Fifth, of the four private plants, one-that at Santa Cruz, Cal.-is lying idle and the other three are working at one-third, or less, of their full Since the overhead charges are virtually the same capacity. when working at full capacity, the output of a plant working at a reduced capacity is very much more expensive under these conditions. Sixth. No estimate of profit in addition to the 6 per cent on the capital invested has been made.

Even if a plant is worked to its full capacity, it would appear that 67 cents per pound does not provide as large a profit as is usually made in the manufacture of ordinary commercial articles. Since there is no prospect in the increase of the orders, the price of 67 cents is probably too low than too high. manifestly to the interest of the Government to have maintained as large a powder-manufacturing capacity as possible as a reserve in the event of war, in which case we will undoubtedly need all the powder that we can get. The bureau therefore desires not to increase the present output of the factory at Indianhead, although it recommends that its capacity be increased.

And I wish to say to the gentleman that this has been regarded as a confidential report, but I have asked permission to use it here to-day

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may have five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky? [After a pause.] . The Chair hears

Mr. FOSS. The board, after full investigation into this subject of the powder manufactured by the Government, believe, and Admiral Mason states in his hearing, that the Government is paying a low price for powder to-day; that the price is fixed not by the powder trust, but it is fixed by the board, and it was with great reluctance that the powder trust has complied

Mr. FITZGERALD. Why did not they refuse to do so if they were losing money?

Mr. FOSS (continuing). And one of their plants to-day is not in use.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Will the gentleman yield for a ques-

Mr. FOSS. Yes.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Were the figures which the gentleman has just given based upon the cost of manufacturing a pound of powder at the government works?

Mr. FOSS. At the government works at Indianhead, given to me by the Chief of the Bureau of Ordnance, whose business and whose duty it is to know these things.

Mr. COX of Indiana. I believe the statement now is that it costs 63 cents. Is that correct, or 67? I did not quite catch that.

Mr. FOSS. Forty-five cents is the actual cost, but adding alcohol, administration, taxes, rejections, and interest on the capital at 6 per cent, you get 63.48.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Can the gentleman explain or tell the House why the cost of the manufacture of a pound of powder at its government works has greatly increased in the last two years, conceding that statement which I read a moment ago, given out by the Naval Proving Board, August 2, 1906, is true, wherein it states that the actual cost of manufacturing a pound of powder at the Indianhead works was 47.7?

Mr. FOSS. It does not include those items which I have mentioned.

Mr. SHERLEY. Now, will the gentleman answer this inquiry? A part of the letter which has been read states that the cost, counting in the material and labor, is about 45 cents.

Mr. FOSS. Yes. Mr. SHERLEY. Then an estimate is made, figuring in various other matters such as insurance, interest on investment, and so forth, that the cost would reach a total-

Mr. FOSS. And the cost of alcohol.

Mr. SHERLEY. I am not undertaking to enumerate the items-that it would total 631 cents. Now, what I desire to know is this: Is the cost of these additional items the result of the independent judgment of naval officers, or are those items based upon information given by the powder manufacturers as to what similar work costs there?

Mr. FOSS. It is based, I suppose, on what they regard to be a fair estimate.

Mr. SHERLEY. Is it not a fact what they have done is to take from the powder-manufacturing people a percentage figured on what those very items would cost them, and on that they assume that by adding that to the naval price it would make 631

Mr. FOSS. No; let me give one of the items here. Here is alcohol, and that adds 4 cents to the 45. Now, that is something upon which they make the price in the open market, and during the last year the price has gone up.

Mr. SHERLEY. I understand you have got 49 cents; now where do you get the other 141 cents?

Mr. FOSS. Then they figure interest on the capital invested in the Indianhead plant, which was $1,500,000, and they figure that at 6 per cent, and that adds again to the cost 9 cents. Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman a question— Mr. FOSS. Then, in addition to that, they figure on rejections on some of this powder which is not up to standard, which amounts, as they state here, to 5.23 per cent of the product. That is the average, and that adds 2½ cents per pound to the cost of powder. That is the average. Then add 21 cents to the cost per pound of the powder.

Mr. SHERLEY. That has not been anything like the average of rejections in either the army or navy plants.

Mr. FOSS. Those objections are based on actual rejections. Mr. SHERLEY. I understand that, but that does not reach the proposition. The proposition, I suggest, is this-that the rejections in the government plants have not presented anything like the per cent presented by the powder people. Now, whether that is a justifiable item of cost at that rate is a question.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois

[Mr. Foss] has expired.

Mr. FOSS. These are the average rejections. They are figuring the cost of powder now on the cost of manufacture down at Indianhead.

Mr. SHERLEY. Of course the gentleman realizes that it is impossible for us to follow a detailed statement, out of which the gentleman has read only a portion. Now, I suggest, in order to handle this matter and not handicap the department or put a false price upon the powder, to let this letter, which the gentleman states is confidential, go into the Record, and allow these items to go over without prejudice until in the morning. Then, if the statement is as conclusive as the gentleman seems to think, I for one will not make any attempt to lower the price.

Mr. FOSS. I have not any objection to passing it over until morning.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Here is the government board. Here is a letter that I put in the RECORD last evening, giving a long statement from Secretary Metcalf.

Mr. SHERLEY. I will say to the gentleman that all of this information, and even more, will be printed in a few days in the hearings on the fortification bill. We have not yet received it.

Mr. FOSS. If there be no objection, I will put it in the RECORD, and will suggest that this matter go over until to-

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I want to read an important letter on this subject. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Foss] asks unanimous consent to pass the amendment without prejudice and to print a report, from which he has read, in the RECORD. Is there objection? There was no objection. The report is as follows:

NOTES ON ESTIMATES ON PRICE OF SMOKELESS POWDER.

The price on powder has for several years been fixed by the Govern-ent upon recommendations made by a board of army and naval ment upon recommendations made by a board of army and navar officers.

In arriving at its recommendations the board has based its estimates principally upon data obtained from the Naval Powder Factory at Indianhead, Md., which plant has been in operation for seven or eight years, and has undoubtedly an economical output. The capital necessary for a plant of similar capacity, including site, plant, material on hand, which includes raw material and powder in dry houses, is $1,500,000.

. 0385 . 0298 . 0012 Administrative cost___ Interest on capital ($1,500,000, at 6 per cent) ____ Rejections (5.23 per cent of product) ____

Item 1 is made to parallel, as far as possible, the factory cost at a private plant working at full capacity twenty-four hours per day. The figure 45 cents has varied from year to year, being slightly less in 1908, due to the efficiency of the acid plant at Indianhead. On the other hand, the price of alcohol has recently increased very materially, which about offsets the saving made by the acid plant. The figure 45 cents is still about as close as can be arrived at for the purpose in hand.

Item 3 is the only figure given by the powder companies, and necessarily the similar cost to the Government is very much less than this. The 63.48 cents as computed above does not include the following items, for which no satisfactory estimates can be obtained:

"1. Freight charges. The companies are required to deliver f. o. b. any point in the United States.

"2. Experimental work.

"3. Allowance for extra hazardous risk and pensions to old or disabled employees.

"3. Allowance for extra hazardous risk and pensions to old or disabled employees.

"4. Risk of expensive plants becoming obsolete by changes in composition of powder or in methods of manufacture. (When the change to smokeless powder was made in 1899, a large amount of machinery suitable only for manufacturing brown powder, and which had recently been installed at considerable expense, was rendered useless.)

"5. Of the four private plants, one, that at Santa Cruz, Cal., is lying idle, and the other three are working at one-third or less of their full capacity. Since the overhead charges are virtually the same when working at full capacity, the output of a plant working at a reduced capacity is very much more expensive under those conditions. The Du Ponts are keeping the plant at Santa Cruz in condition for manufacturing powder at the request of the Government.

"6. No estimate of profit in addition to the 6 per cent on the capital invested has been made."

Even if a plant is worked to its full capacity it would appear that 67 invested has been made."

Even if a plant is worked to its full capacity it would appear that 67 cents per pound does not provide as large a profit as is usually made in the manufacture of ordinary commercial articles. Since there is no prospect of an increase in the orders, the price of 67 cents is probably too low than too high. It is manifestly to the interest of the Government to have maintained as large a powder manufacturing capacity as possible as a reserve in the event of war, in which case we will undoubtedly need all the powder that we can get. The bureau therefore desires not to increase the present output of the factory at Indianhead, although it recommends that its capacity be increased.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I want to read this letter now, to go in the RECORD by the side of that one. I move to strike out the last word for that purpose. This morning I telephoned down to Indianhead-

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman can not move to strike out the last word on the motion that we pass the amendment until to-morrow.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Then, Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to read this letter.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection. Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I telephoned down to the officer in charge of the government powder factory at Indianhead. I do not know where that place is, but somewhere down the river. I wanted to go to the fountain head of the proposition. We have been for years getting a great deal from the Navy Department, and so forth, and it did not seem to satisfy everybody. So I telephoned to get a definite reply from the officer in charge. I made a memorandum of the substance of our which you will see on these sheets of paper conversation, which I hold in my hand. Later in the day I was called up by the Navy Department and was telephoned the letter which I am about to read, and was further informed that it would be sent to me by hand. It has been received, and reads as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE NAVY, BUREAU OF ORDNANCE, Washington, D. C., January 20, 1909.

Washington, D. C., January 20, 1909.

Sir: Referring to your telephone message to the inspector of ordnance in charge at Indianhead, Md., concerning the manufacture of powder, etc.—

1. I have to inform you that he has telephoned the following answer: "The powder factory is run at practically full capacity—about one and one-fourth million pounds a year.

"There are nine steps or links in the chain of manufacture; some links stronger than others; that is, capacity is greater; output, 1,009,000 pounds at weakest point. To double capacity—that is, to make output 2,000,000 pounds—$250,000 would be required, the power plant and drying plant being the large items. Cost of powder, labor, and material alone, 43 cents per pound, year ending July 1, 1908; somewhat higher now because of increase in cost of alcohol."

2. The Navy Department's orders require that all communications of this nature should be forwarded through the department, and this is sent you with the authority of the Acting Secretary of the Navy and also telephoned you.

Respectfully,

N. E. Mason,

Chief of Bureau of Ordnance.

Hon. John Wesley Gaines, M. C., Chief of Bureau of Ordnance.

House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

Now, here is a lotter the Now, here is a letter the department sends me, telling me the capacity of this plant is 1,250,000 pounds, and $250,000 appropriation would make it a 2,000,000-pounds, and $250,000 appropriation would make it a 2,000,000-pound plant. Now, will any man here say that that is a war-capacity plant, when we are now buying 2,000,000 pounds and making 1,000,000 pounds and need it all in peace? Why not increase its "capacity" to the war standard, if we make no powder there, in peace? It will be ready in time of war. Two hundred and fifty thousand dollars will double its capacity, this letter tells us.

Now, Mr. Chairman, here is what he says: The cost of the "labor and material" alone "is 43 cents for the year ending July 1, 1908," but "somewhat higher because of the higher cost of alco-Lieutenant Jackson also informed me that we send very highly paid powder inspectors, four or five, to these private concerns-one of which is the Powder trust-to examine the powder, and that they were each, as I understood, paid five or six thousand dollars, and that we had at the government powder plant but one inspector, a naval officer, and some subordinates to inspect. Furnishing these highly paid inspectors at private manufactories is a practice we pursue that we may get good powder, and we did not get it all the time during the Spanish war. Again, Secretary Long, in his report, November, 1897, savs:

The question of always having at hand a satisfactory source of supply for powder has received much consideration from the bureau, and it suggests that in view of the lack of sufficient competition among private manufacturers the Government should establish a powder factory of its own of moderate capacity.

[Report of Secretary of the Navy, 1898.]

SMOKELESS POWDER.

Smokeless powder is a necessity, not only on account of the absence of smoke, but because of the greater velocities obtained by its use and the freedom from residue, which facilitates rapid firing. While a satisfactory smokeless powder has been adopted and is manufactured in considerable quantities, it was, owing to lack of time and lack of facility for manufacturing on a large scale, impossible to introduce it generally into the navy during the recent war. Nevertheless, several vessels were given a complete outfit, and large quantities were distributed. Steps have been taken to give all vessels hereafter fitted out a complete supply, and it is proposed to accumulate a large amount. Congress at its last session appropriated a sum of money for the erection of a government factory for the manufacture of smokeless powder, and plans therefor have been prepared, land has been cleared at Indianhead, Md., and the work of construction is now in progress.

Immediately after the close of the war with Spain the purchase of brown powder was discontinued, and the manufacturers were directed to turn their attention exclusively to the manufacture of smokeless powder, so far as their orders for the navy were concerned. They have made commendable progress, and are turning out a satisfactory product in considerable quantities. It is proposed to supply all new ships with smokeless powder, and the powder for the Kearsage, Kentucky, and Alabama is now ready for them. The older vessels will also be supplied as rapidly as possible.

[Reports of the Navy Department, 1899.]

The government powder factory at Indianhead is progressing favorably and will be completed in a few months. Unavoidable delays in obtaining materials have retarded its progress to some extent, and it is preferable to do good rather than-hasty work. It is neither expected nor desired to enter into competition at these works with private manufacturers, except as to quality, it being the policy of the department to foster the commercial industry, upon which the country must largely draw its sumply. draw its supply.

[Reports of the Navy Department, 1900.] SMOKELESS POWDER.

Manufacturers of smokeless powder are now experiencing little difficulty in supplying powder of excellent quality which meets the required climatic, physical, and ballistic tests. Three of the battle ships and one cruiser have already received an outfit of smokeless powder, and other vessels will be supplied as they are commissioned.

The manufacture of smokeless powder by the Government has been successfully carried on during the past year.

I have asked the librarian here to run through the statutes and see how much money we have appropriated for this factory, and he hands me the following tabulation:

I will here insert in the Record the letter from Secretary Metcalf and the appendices thereto that I obtained permission to insert in the RECORD yesterday:

NAVY DEPARTMENT, Washington, February 7, 1908.

Washington, February 7, 1998.

SIR: Referring to your letter of January 31, 1908, requesting certain information regarding the cost of powder purchased from private firms, etc.—

1. From 1893 until 1899, during which years practically all the brown powder ever supplied the navy was obtained, 5,953,118 pounds of brown powder were purchased from private manufacturers, which firms were either a part of the Du Pont Powder Company or probably had working agreements with this firm. The price of this powder fluctuated slightly, but the average price throughout these years was 32 cents per pound. The Government manufactured during these years no brown powder whatever.

firms were either a part of the Du Pont Powder Company or probably had working agreements with this firm. The price of this powder fluctuated slightly, but the average price throughout these years was 32 cents per pound. The Government manufactured during these years no brown powder whatever.

2. In December, 1898, all outstanding orders for brown powder were canceled, and since then only smokeless powder has been manufactured for cannon. The amounts purchased are as follows:

1897. 300,000 pounds, at $1 per pound.

1898. 2,543,500 pounds, at $0 cents per pound.

1899. 350,000 pounds, at 80 cents per pound.

1901. 1,401,000 pounds, at 80 cents per pound.

1902. 1,551,000 pounds, at 74 cents per pound.

1903. 2,268,000 pounds, at 74 cents per pound.

1904. 4,642,710 pounds, at 74 cents per pound.

1905. 4,492,000 pounds, at 74 cents per pound.

1906. 2,025,000 pounds, at 69 cents to 74 cents per pound.

1907. 2,375,000 pounds, at 67 cents to 69 cents per pound.

The above is obtained from the requisitions made in the Bureau of Ordanace during the calendar years given.

3. Up to date about 6,500,000 pounds of smokeless powder have been manufactured at the Government Powder Factory at Indianhead, Md. The accompanying correspondence gives in detail the cost of this powder during the latter years. Necessarily the cost was much higher in the early stages of manufacture.

4. The price paid for the first 200,000 pounds of smokeless powder, purchased in June, 1897, was $1 per pound, plus the alcohol. In October, 1897, at the instance of the department, this price was reduced to 80 cents per pound, alcohol furnished by the Government, which meant an actual cost of about 74 cents per pound, eld until the beginning of the year 1901, when it was again reduced to 70 cents per pound, plus the alcohol. This reduction was made in view of estimates as to the cost of manufacture at the Government Powder Factory. This price of 70 cents per pound, alcohol furnished by the Government, which mean and navy board on smokeless powder, c

5. There are being forwarded copies of certain correspondence upon this subject, which it is requested be returned to the Navy Department, Bureau of Ordnance, when you have no further use for them. Also, information can be obtained on pages 255 and 256 of the "Hearings" before the House Committee on Naval Appropriations of 1907; on pages 41 to 43, and page 81 (Appendix C) "Hearings" of 1908; and in the "Hearings" of 1909. Mr. J. A. Haskell, vice-president of the Du Pout Powder Companies, was before the subcommittee of the House Committee on Appropriations on January 24, 1907, and his testimony can be found in the "Hearings" for that date.

6. Referring to the second paragraph: The establishment of the Government Powder Factory was recommended by the department in its Annual Report of 1898, and an appropriation for its establishment was made the same year. Since it has been completed it has run to the full extent of its capacity, working twenty-four hours a day, and has produced about 6,500,000 pounds of powder. In addition to this work the laboratory, which forms a part of the factory, has conducted all stability tests and chemical examinations of the samples selected from the lots of private manufacturers in the natural course of inspections.

spections.

7. Referring to the last paragraph in your letter, Congress passed, in the latter part of February, 1907, public resolution No. 15, directing the Secretary of Commerce and Labor to investigate and report to Congress concerning existing patents granted to officers and employees in certain cases. Full details of the information required under this resolution have been compiled and forwarded to the Department of Commerce and Labor. It is understood, however, that it has not yet been published, or at least not issued.

WILMINGTON, DEL., August 27, 1906.

AUSTIN M. KNIGHT, Commander, U. S. Navy.

President Joint Army and Navy Board on Smokeless Powder Specifications, Washington, D. C.

Dear Sir: Complying with your request that we give you our reasons for opposing any reduction in the price now paid by the Government for smokeless powder, we submit the following discussion:

In opening this discussion we desire to say that, in our judgment, the price paid for the powder is far less important than its quality, and that at the present time, with the processes of manufacture and even the composition of the powder in a more or less experimental and uncertain condition, an effort to reduce the price is likely to be false economy. With the army and navy it should always be the aim to have the best possible powder regardless of the cost. The desire should be to give an adequate price and to expect a constant improvement in the article. In order to produce a superior article we must be allowed a reasonable and fair margin of profit so that we may be able to purchase the best materials, employ the best skilled labor, and be allowed to work and rework the material until the desired result is obtained. If we must stop short of that because of price, it is easy to determine what the natural result will be—either loss on our part or an inferior powder. We have spared no expense in our efforts to improve our product, and we should receive an adequate compensation.

At the beginning, when the price was fixed at $1 per pound, the manufacturers had little knowledge of the subject and their plants were not suited to economical production. Before experience had shown us how to make a profit, the Government reduced the price to S0 cents a pound, and again to 70 cents, while we were making powder at a loss or with no profit. It is only within the last three years that a profit has been made. It would be a great injustice to the companies who have continued under these circumstances to produce a good powder, and who have spared no expense to impro sell the general trade where we have active competition. We are paid by the Government for a superior powder to that used by the commercial trade only 70 cents per pound, while the trade is paying 80 to 85 cents.

The Government has a system of inspection that grows daily more rigid, to which inspection we do not object, but which tends to increase the cost of production. The bureaus have just adopted new specifications which are more exacting, and to which they have added new and untried tests, which will probably add to the number of rejections. These specifications undertake to control each step of the processes to be used, to specify raw materials, number of washings, their duration, etc., and in the end we are still held responsible for the results.

In arriving at the cost of powder manufactured by the Government its experts lose sight of many items of expense which the Government trags through other channels, as salaries of officers, technical men, book-keepers, clerks, traveling expenses, etc. The Government charges some of these items to other accounts and overlooks them in estimating the cost of manufacture of powder. Upon examination of our books we find that the following result would be obtained by taking what we are informed is the cost of powder at Indianhead on the manufacture of 1,002,000 pounds:

We find that during the past year of our operations the ratio of rejections to the amount of powder manufactured and delivered to the Government was 5.23 per cent. If from the manufacture of powder at Indianhead would produce 949,000 pounds of acceptable powder and the cost of prowder manufactured and cellvering 1,002,000 pounds of powder Indianhead would produce 949,000 pounds of acceptable powder and the cost per pound would be increased from 47.45 cents (their cost of powder manufactured exclusive of alcohol) to 49.98 cents, and their cost of 54.63 cents (including alcohol) would be increased to 57.93 cents. If to this there be added the amounts paid by our company which have not been taken into co will in a large measure destroy the value of all the present smokeless-powder plants. When these facts are considered, it should be easy powder plants. When these facts are considered, it should be easy powder plants. When these facts are considered, it should be easy powder plants. When the work is a powder than the proper of the party of the plant of the plant of the smouth of the contracts of it the plants are to run on a single-shift basis, then it naturally costs more to make the powder. If the Government should again be in position to give orders for a sufficient amount of the property of the

This company has a record for the past one hundred years of always holding its best intellect, its money, and its plants wholly at the service of the Government in all times of need and of treating the Government fairly and honestly in all its dealings, and we do not deem it necessary that we should give additional proof now of our willingness to do the same in the future.

on Smokeless Powder Specifications,

Bureau of Ordnance, Navy Department,

Washington, D. C.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Before we proceed, I ask unanimous consent to ask the chairman of the committee whether he has any official warrant for the statement that this powder plant cost a million and a half?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Nebraska asks unanimous consent that he may propound a question to the gentleman from Illinois, or that he may have the floor. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I have the figures according to the report.

Mr. FOSS. I will say to the gentleman that I prefer that this matter go over until to-morrow. The figures I have are figures that come from the Bureau of Ordnance.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I have the figures from the Bureau of Ordnance, and they show that it is less than $850,000. I am speaking of the government plant at Indianhead.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Perhaps the gentleman is speaking of the Du Pont plant.

Mr. FOSS. No; I am speaking of the government plant. The Clerk read as follows:

Purchase and manufacture of smokeless powder, $650,000.

Mr. SHERLEY. As to that paragraph, I ask that it go over. Mr. FOSS. I ask that this paragraph also may go over.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

For Naval Gun Factory, Washington, D. C.: New and improved machinery for existing shops, $150,000.

Mr. TAWNEY. I move to strike out the last word for the ourpose of asking the chairman of the committee a question. On what basis do you estimate for the new and improved machinery for existing shops in the Washington Gun Factory to be $150,000?

Mr. FOSS. We have allowed that sum practically for a number of years. The chief of ordnance has told us that he can not get along with any less. Tools and machinery are wearing out. They are manufacturing heavy guns, and it is necessary for them to have this, what seemingly is a large sum.

Mr. TAWNEY. Is it the full amount of the estimate? Mr. FOSS. Yes; it is the full amount of the estimate. Mr. STAFFORD. Can the gentleman state how much is used of this appropriation here?

Mr. FOSS. They use every part of it.
Mr. MACON. They use $150,000 for this purpose each year?
Mr. TAWNEY. Are they increasing the machinery?
Mr. FOSS. They are not increasing the machinery, except as appears in this bill.

Mr. TAWNEY. I rose to ask in what way?

Mr. FOSS. We are not increasing the plant at all; we are just keeping the machinery up to a high state of efficiency. That is all.

Mr. TAWNEY. The machinery is not of a character, surely, that has need to be replaced every year or every five years?

Mr. FOSS. Well, it is very expensive when anything gets at of order. We asked the Chief of Ordnance, as we wanted out of order. to inquire whether this was always needed or not:

Do you need all of that?

Admiral Mason answered:

Yes, sir; we have had that quite a number of years. That is for wear and tear on the machinery in the big shop.

The CHAIRMAN. Does it require that every year?

Admiral Mason. Yes, sir.

Mr. MACON. It is expended every year for that purpose under this appropriation?

The Clerk read as follows:

For continuing the relining and conversion of 12-inch Mark III guns to Mark IV guns, $150,000.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking about this provision:

For continuing the relining and conversion of 12-inch Mark III guns to Mark IV guns, $150,000.

When were those guns made? And what use have they been put to which necessitates their relining?

Mr. FOSS. Those are old guns which have been in use a number of years.

Mr. TAWNEY. How were they used?

Mr. FOSS. In target practice.

Mr. TAWNEY. It is use in target practice that necessitates their relining?

Mr. FOSS.

Mr. TAWNEY. How long can a new gun be used merely in target practice without relining?

Mr. FOSS. The Chief of the Bureau of Ordnance said about 120 times

Mr. TAWNEY. About 120 times in target practice?

Mr. FOSS. Yes.

Mr. TOSS. 1cs.
Mr. TAWNEY. What does one of these guns cost?
Mr. PADGETT. A 12-inch gun costs about $40,000.
Mr. FOSS. This relining will cost about $12,000 each.

Mr. KEIFER. Some of them will not stand firing that often,

Mr. FOSS. These are all old guns.

Mr. TAWNEY. How many are there to be relined?

Mr. FOSS. Twelve.

Mr. NORRIS. Will what the gentleman has said apply to new guns as well as to old ones, about the necessity for relining?

Mr. FOSS. Yes; they will have to be relined after they have been used a while.

Mr. NORRIS. After they have been discharged 140 times? Mr. FOSS. After they have been discharged 140 times:
Mr. FOSS. After they have been fired 120 times they will have to be relined. The erosion is such as to make it necessary.
Mr. BUTLER. Unless they use a different kind of powder.
Mr. NORRIS. Then, guns of this sort would not last through one really heavy battle?

Mr. FOSS. The battle of the Sea of Japan was fought and won in forty minutes. Most of these modern battles are very

Mr. NORRIS. It may be that when Dewey stopped for breakfast he stopped to reline his guns.

Mr. TAWNEY. No; he stopped to reline the stomachs of his men. [Laughter.]

The Clerk read as follows:

Ammunition for ships: For procuring, producing, preserving, and handling ammunition for issue to ships, $3,000,000: Provided, That the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized to utilize all ammunition and other supplies already on hand under the appropriations "Increase of the navy; Armor and armament," "Reserve ammunition," and "Reserve powder and shell," for general issue to ships in commission, as though purchased from this appropriation: Provided, That no part of this apprepriation shall be expended for the purchase of shells or projectiles except for shells or projectiles purchased in accordance with the terms and conditions of proposals submitted by the Secretary of the Navy to all of the manufacturers of shells and projectiles and upon bids received in accordance with the terms and requirements of such proposals. All shells and projectiles shall conform to the standards prescribed by the Secretary of the Navy.

Mr. SHERLEY Mr. Chairman Leak requirements of such Mr. SHERLEY Mr. Chairman Leak requirements

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that this paragraph also go over without prejudice until tomorrow.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I think it ought to go over, in connection with the other.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent that this paragraph be passed without prejudice until to-morrow. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I ask unanimous consent to print paper sent to me this morning by the Department of Justice, which I called for.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to print in the RECORD a statement which he holds in his hand.

Mr. TAWNEY. What is the statement about? Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. It is in relation to the powder trust, a statement of certain facts that came to light in the suit against that trust.

Mr. TAWNEY. Does it pertain to the matters contained in this bill?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Oh, yes. I would not want to put it in here if it did not. I put myself to a great deal of trouble to enlighten the House, as well as myself, on some questions.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

The document referred to is as follows:

The document referred to is as follows:

In the testimony taken in the case against the so-called "powder trust" an agreement was brought to light between the trust and European manufacturers, one portion of which is of considerable public interest. The parties to the agreement were the following:

Messrs. E. I. du Pont de Nemours & Co., of Wilmington, Del.; Laffin & Rand Powder Company, of New York City; Eastern Dynamite Company, of Wilmington, Del.; the Miami Powder Company, of Xenia, Ohio; the American Powder Millis, of Boston, Mass.; the Ætina Powder Company, of Cleveland, Ohio; the California Powder Works, of San Francisco, Cal.; the Grant Powder Company (Consolidated), of San Francisco, Cal.; the Judson Dynamite and Powder Company, of San Francisco, Cal.; the Vereinigte Koln-Rottweller Pulverfabriken, of Cologne; and the Nobel Dynamite Trust Company (Limited), of London.

This agreement was to be in effect for a period of ten years, and is believed to have been substantially continued until the present time. The parties to the agreement being the chief manufacturers of explosives, and controlling numerous subsidiary concerns, agreed to file with each other a list of companies controlled by the combination entering into the agreement, and the specific statements of the things undertaken are contained in paragraphs 3 to 8, inclusive, of the agreement, which are as follows:

J., are not to be completed, and the whole scheme as worked out by Mr. Muller is to be abandoned. In consideration of this scheme being abandoned and the erection of the works being stopped, the American factories undertake to bear all expenses hitherto incurred in connection therewith, and they will, moreover, discharge the obligations which Mr. Muller has undertaken in connection with the above-mentioned scheme, with regard to which obligations a special subsidiary agreement is to be made. And it is, moreover, agreed that the American factories shall order and take from the European factories, i. e., from the T. Rhenish Westphalian Sprengstoff A. G. every year 5,000,000 detonators at the following prices, viz., 11 marks for No. 3, 12 marks for No. 5 rim, 13 marks for No. 4, 15.50 marks for No. 5, 16.50 marks for No. 5 rim, 20 marks for No. 6, and 21 marks for No. 6 rim, all these prices to be understood per 1,000 ex. ship. "Whenever the American factories receive an inquiry for any government other than their own, either directly or indirectly, they are to communicate with the European factories through the chairman appointed, as hereinafter set forth, and by that means to ascertain the price at which the European factories are quoting or have fixed, and they shall be bound not to quote or sell at any lower figure than the price at which the European factories are quoting or have fixed. Should the European factories receive an inquiry from the Government of the United States of North America, or decide to quote for delivery for that Government, either directly or indirectly, they shall first in the like manner ascertain the price quoted or fixed by the American factories, and shall be bound not to quote or sell below that figure.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. Longworth having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 8422. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the civil war and to widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors; and

S. 8254. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the civil war and certain dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bill of the following title:

H. R. 24344. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the civil war, and to widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed, with amendments, bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

H. R. 23850. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the civil war and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors; and

H. R. 23849. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the civil war and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

The Clerk read as follows:

Torpedoes and appliances: For the purchase and manufacture of torpedoes and appliances, $625,000.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I observe that there is an increase of $300,000 for the purchase and manufacture of torpedoes and appliances. I would like to have the chairman explain the necessity for this increase.

Mr. MACON. There is an increase of $325,000.

Mr. FOSS. I want to say that we are very short on tor-pedoes. The Chief of the Bureau of Ordnance asked for twice this amount; we cut it in two. He said:

We are still behind in torpedoes.

"How much behind?" was asked of him.

What I mean by behind is that we are short, very short, in torpedoes compared with the number they have abroad.

And then he gives us a statement, which was rather a startling statement, as to the condition of our navy on the subject of torpedoes

Mr. TAWNEY. Are these reserve torpedoes; and if not reserve, how are they used now?

Mr. FOSS. They are used in practice shooting on board ships and also in reserve, wherever they want to use torpedoes of any kind.

Mr. OLCOTT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FOSS. I will yield to the gentleman. Mr. OLCOTT. Is it not a fact that they stated that the English navy had 10,000 torpedoes and we had about 400?

Mr. FOSS. I did not care to mention the number, but we have only about 445.

Mr. TAWNEY. I hope we are not determining our naval necessities entirely by what other nations have on hand or are doing.

Mr. OLCOTT. There ought to be some comparison between them.

Mr. FOSS. ·No; but we are very short, the supply at the present time is very small, and the committee has cut the appropriation down from the estimate one-half.

Mr. TAWNEY. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. Longworth having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, sundry messages, in writing, from the President of the United States were communicated to the House of Representatives by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries, who also informed the House of Representatives that the President had, on January 20, 1909, approved and signedbills of the following titles:

H. R. 8615. An act to correct the naval record of Edward T. Lincoln;

H. R. 14343. An act to correct the naval record of Randolph W. Campbell; and

H. R. 23351. An act for the relief of the owners of the Mexican steamship Tabasqueno.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as 1010ws:

For experimental work in the development of armor-piercing projectiles, fuses, powders and high explosives, in connection with problems of the attack of armor with direct and inclined fire at various ranges, including the purchase of armor, powder, projectiles, and fuses for the above purposes, and of all necessary material and labor in connection therewith; and for other experimental work under the cognizance of the Bureau of Ordnance in connection with the development of ordnance material for the navy, $100,000.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, this is a new provision. I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. FOSS. In the estimate they ask for $200,000, and we cut it in two, allowed them $100,000 for experiment, and they regard it as very necessary.

Mr. TAWNEY. From what appropriation have these experiments been paid for heretofore? We have had experiments in the development of armor piercing.

Mr. FOSS. They have got along as best they could under the ordnance and ordnance stores. What little they have expended has been very small and has been done with that appro-

Mr. FOSS. Oh, this is simply for experimental work.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. We may want to make some change in it.

Mr. FOSS. There is no necessity for having this paragraph

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. If we find out that there is, will the gentleman have any objection to our going back to it?

Mr. FOSS. Oh, no.

The Clerk read as follows:

Arming and equipping naval militia: For arms, accouterments, ammunition, signal and medical outfits, boats and their equipment and maintenance, fuel and clothing, and the printing or purchase of necessary books of instruction for the naval militin of the various States, Territories, and the District of Columbia, under such regulations as the Secretary of the Navy may prescribe, $100,000.

of the work covered by this paragraph.

Mr. STAFFORD. I have not made any question as to that; my query is directed to the scope of the work of the naval militia.

Mr. FOSS. They are doing excellent work; they are training and have maneuvers during the summer time on the lake, as the gentleman knows, and are fitting themselves for a reserve force in time of war. There is no body of men anywhere that is doing more excellent work than the naval reserve of our country to-day.

Mr. STAFFORD. Is any part of the expense being sustained by the States themselves?

Mr. FOSS. Oh, yes. Mr. STAFFORD. T Then this is merely supplementary to the expense undertaken by the States?

Mr. FOSS. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Coal and transportation: Purchase of coal and other fuel for steamers and ships' use, and other equipment purposes, including expenses of transportation, storage, and handling the same, and for the general maintenance of naval coaling depots and coaling plants, $5,000,000.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last The appropriation for coal for the current fiscal year was $5,000,000. That was a considerable increase over the appropriation for the preceding year, made necessary, as we were then informed, on account of the fleet going on its trip around the world.

Mr. FOSS. Yes; but we had a deficiency of $1,700,000. Mr. TAWNEY. The appropriation in the naval appropriation Mr. FOSS.

bill for the current fiscal year included the increase on account of the voyage of the fleet around the world. Now, I would like to ask the gentleman if it is necessary to appropriate the same amount this year, in view of the fact that so far as we know there is no trip of that kind contemplated during the year 1910?

Mr. FOSS. Why, no; but they depleted every coal pile they came in sight of. [Laughter.]
Mr. TAWNEY. Does the gentleman mean to say that our reserve, accumulated prior to the time this fleet started out, has been exhausted? Mr. BUTLER.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. I would not say exhausted.

Mr. TAWNEY. It has been greatly depleted, then, so as to require this amount for the next fiscal year to resupply the various coaling stations?

Mr. FOSS. Yes. Mr. ADAIR. Can the gentleman tell us what the cost of that trip around the world was?

Mr. FOSS. They have not finished yet.

Mr. ADAIR. What was the appropriation for the fiscal year

Mr. PADGETT. About two and a half millions.

Mr. FOSS. The gentleman does not mean the appropriation under this paragraph—it was a good deal more than that.

Mr. PADGETT. No. If the gentleman will look in Mr. Pulsifer's book, he will see that the amount of coal purchased for 1908 was two and a half million dollars; for the last year, 1909, about five millions.

Mr. FOSS. For the coal item alone, the gentleman means, as to the two millions and a half.

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. FOSS. And this paragraph includes the transportation. Mr. PADGETT. I mean coal and transportation. In other words, there was an increase of two and a half millions on account of that trip around the world.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. Does the gentleman mean the act of 1907?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. That was four millions and odd.

Mr. STAFFORD. If they required only two and a half million dollars two years ago, what is the need of having double the amount for the coming year unless it is contemplated to have an annual pilgrimage around the world?

Mr. FOSS. If the gentleman will read this item, he will find that coal is one item and transportation another. He will find this covers transportation, storage, and handling of the same, and general maintenance of naval coaling stations and plants.

Mr. STAFFORD. After the stations have been supplied with coal, that have been depleted by the fleet in the trip around the world, will it be necessary, in the opinion of the committee, to have as large an appropriation as five millions to maintain the fleet each year?

Mr. FOSS. Well, I should say I think it would. Mr. STAFFORD. Will it require more if we go on providing for two large battle ships each year?

Mr. FOSS. Yes; if we go on building up the navy, we will have to increase the appropriation.

Mr. STAFFORD. How much more if two battle ships a year are added?

I could not say. Mr. FOSS.

Mr. STAFFORD. Can the gentleman give any estimate based upon an increase of the navy of two large battle ships each year as to what would be the increased cost in the total bill.

Mr. FOSS. No; I could not give any estimate. I do not know how many tons of coal a battle ship burns. Some ships burn a hundred tons a day and some less. It depends entirely on what these ships are put to.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. And how fast they go.

Mr. FOSS. Yes; a good deal on the speed, and there are a great many elements that enter into a question of this kind, but this appropriation, in my judgment, will not be reduced.

Mr. STAFFORD. The committee might be able to furnish some general estimate as to what will be the increased cost if Congress should appropriate money for providing two additional war ships each year.

Mr. FOSS. I could not give that information to the gentle-

Mr. PADGETT. May I answer a question that was asked just a moment ago? Mr. Pulsifer states on page 645 with reference to coal that on a ton of coal a battle ship will go about 3.25 knots. The Louisiana bunkers hold 2,500 tons and could go twenty-eight days at 10 knots an hour, or 6,720 knots.

Mr. FOSS. The gentleman can figure it out from that. Mr. STAFFORD. Of course, but I thought probably the clerk of the committee could compute it and furnish us with the information. Mr. TAWNEY. I would like to ask the gentleman whether the navy is using any coal now from the island of Luzon. Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. The gentleman means taken from the island? Mr. FOSS. No; that coal which was so much talked about at the time was found to be absolutely useless for the navy.

Mr. POLLARD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out next to the last word, in order to ask the chairman of the committee a question. I see that the wording of the paragraph here includes transportation. Does that also include the cost that the Government was put to in chartering the vessels to act as couriers to accompany the fleet?

Mr. FOSS. Yes; but I would say most of that was taken care of by a special appropriation which came from the Appropriations Committee in the shape of a deficiency, amounting to $1,700,000, but some of it did not. The cost of the fleet, we may say, so far as the coal proposition is concerned, was two and a half million dollars all told. A million dollars of it was for the cost of the coal, and about a million and a half for transportation.

Mr. POLLARD. Does that include the cost of chartering the ships?

Mr. FOSS. Yes; that includes the cost of chartering the ships under the term of "transportation."

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I understood the chairman of the committee to say the transportation cost about a million and a half for coal during the past year

Mr. FOSS. No: I am speaking about the cruise of the Atlantic Fleet.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I wish to inquire whether the gentleman can inform the committee how much was paid for transportation of coal for the fleet on this trip which has just been

Mr. FOSS. I will state to the gentleman that the statement appears on page 71 of the hearings, given by Admiral Cowles, Chief of the Bureau of Equipment, showing the approximate cost of coal and its transportation to supply the requirements of the Atlantic Fleet for its voyage around the world. The number of tons was 365,320 and the cost of the coal was $1,078,994 and the cost of transportation was $1,463,845; in all, substantially $2,500,000.

Mr. FITZGERALD. How much was the coal per ton and the cost per ton to transport it?

Mr. FOSS. The gentleman can figure that out. Mr. FITZGERALD. I can not figure it out.

Mr. FOSS. The number of tons was 365,000 and the cost was $1,078,000.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Well, if I were a lightning calculator, I would tell the gentleman how much that was a ton; but I am not. I wish to get information, for this reason: I was informed last summer that an offer was made to the department to supply coal for the fleet, I think at Sydney—I am not quite sure of the place-of the grade equal to the coal obtained in this country at a price per ton less than the cost of transporting it from the Atlantic seaboard; that the department declined the offer and bought coal here at a price in excess of what it was offered delivered at Sydney, and paid, moveover, the cost of transportation, which in itself was in excess of the price of the coal. I should like to know whether that happened, and the reason the department gives for the refusal to accept an offer of that character.

Mr. STAFFORD. I may say to the gentleman the average price on the figures given was $2.94

Mr. OLCOTT. It approximates $3 a ton. Mr. FITZGERALD. That is for the coal?

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is for the coal?
Mr. OLCOTT. Without considering the transportation—
Mr. FITZGERALD. But I want to know the cost of the transportation.

The transportation cost a little more than $3. Mr. OLCOTT. Mr. FITZGERALD. Is that in American or foreign bottoms?
Mr. FOSS. You probably know most of the coal we sent with the fleet went in foreign bottoms. There were two or three American bottoms, but the rest of them were foreign bottoms.

Mr. FITZGERALD. What was the difference in the cost between the foreign and American bottoms?

Mr. FOSS. The American bottoms wanted about twice as much for the transportation of the coal as in foreign bottoms, just about twice as much.

The Clerk read as follows:

Depots for coal: To enable the Secretary of the Navy to execute the provisions of section 1552 of the Revised Statutes, authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to establish, at such places as he may deem necessary, suitable depots for coal and other fuel for the supply of steamships of war, $450,000.

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I want to ask the chairman of the committee about this appropriation. I see it is exactly the same as it was last year, $450,000.

Mr. FOSS. Yes.

Mr. MACON. Were not the coaling stations appropriated for last year located?

Mr. FOSS. These are to finish up the plans at San Diego, Cal., and also California City Point.

Mr. MACON. How did you arrive at the conclusion that it would require the same amount this year that it did last year?
Mr. FOSS. Well, the estimates which were submitted to the department stated that.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

BUREAU OF YARDS AND DOCKS.

Maintenance of yards and docks: For general maintenance of yards and docks, namely: For books, maps, models, and drawings; purchase and repair of fire engines; fire apparatus and plants; machinery; purchase and maintenance of oxen, horses, and driving teams; carts, timber wheels, and all vehicles for use in the navy-yards; tools and repairs of the same; stationery; furniture for government houses and offices in navy-yards and naval stations; coal and other fuel; candles, oll, and gas; attendance on light and power plants; cleaning and clearing up yards and care of buildings; attendance on fires, lights, fire engines, and fire apparatus and plants; incidental labor at navy-yards; water tax, tolls, and ferriage; pay of waterhmen in navy-yards; awnings and packing boxes; and for rent of wharf and storehouse at Erie, Pa., for use of and accommodation of U. S. S. Wolverine, and for pay of employees on leave, $1,500,000: Provided, That the sum to be paid out of this appropriation under the direction of the Secretary of the Navy for clerical, inspection, drafting, messenger, and other classified work in the navy-yards and naval stations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1910, shall not exceed $425,000.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I observe that the appropria-

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I observe that the appropriation under this head is $1,250,000 in excess of the appropriation for the same purposes for the current fiscal year.

Mr. FOSS. Not $1,250,000; just $250,000. Mr. MACON. Two hundred and fifty thousand dollars.

Mr. TAWNEY. I see that the increase is $250,000. I want to inquire whether this estimated increase is made for the reason that there will be more repairing of ships in the navy-yards during the fiscal year than there was during the current fiscal year?

Mr. FOSS. No; this has nothing to do with that. Mr. TAWNEY. Then what is the occasion for this material increase?

Mr. FOSS. Hereafter this bureau, the Bureau of Yards and Docks, will purchase all the furniture for all the other bureaus of the Navy Department. That is one item which makes the increase.

Mr. TAWNEY. Has there been a consolidation?

Mr. FOSS. There has been a consolidation on that item, which is a large item, too. And then we have always allowed a little increase in this appropriation each year, and we have been appropriating for more buildings at the navy-yard and, of course, it requires a larger sum for maintenance.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Navy-yard, Washington, D. C.: Improvements to storehouse for guns and mounts, $7,000: concrete roofs for foundry buildings, $15,000; improvements to building 118, $3,000; improvements to building 41, $20,000: fireproof storehouse for fuses, acids, and oils, $15,000; in all, $60,000: Provided, That hereafter the Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington Railroad Company be, and it is hereby, authorized and required to maintain its track connection with the United States navy-yard in the city of Washington, D. C., by means of a single track on K street and Canal street SE, either as at present located or as the same may hereafter be relocated, in whole or in part, with the approval of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, and to continue the operation thereof, anything contained in any prior act or acts of Congress to the contrary notwithstanding.

Mr. Cheirman, I. make the point of order against.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the entire provision, beginning in line 6 with the word "Provided" and going down to and including line 16.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS] makes a point of order.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, it is clearly subject to the point of order, but I wish to say—
The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Tennessee reserve his point of order?

Mr. SIMS. I will reserve it, of course, with the privilege of making a statement myself.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I do not care to say anything. I will just let it go.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman makes the point of order on page 23, commencing with the word "Provided," in line 6, to the end of the paragraph.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman-

Mr. PADGETT. I call for the regular order.

Mr. SIMS. I make the point of order, then.
The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.
Mr. FITZGERALD. I simply wish to say that it is information that ought to be in the RECORD, but I will act in the same way that the gentleman is acting.

The Clerk read as follows:

Naval station, Key West, Fla.: Latrines, $5,000; concrete cistern, $25,000; in all, $30,000.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I would like to ask the chairman of the committee if this appropriation of $30,000 and the items which go to make it up is the entire amount that was recommended by the department for Key West?

Mr. FOSS. I believe it was.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Was it the amount recommended by the department, or did the department cut down the commandant's recommendation?

Mr. FOSS. It was recommended by the department. The commandant, of course, recommended to the department, and whether the department cut out some of these estimates recommended to the department I do not know. But these were recommended by the department as they came to the committee.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Was there any recommendation for a foundry at Key West?

Mr. FOSS. I do not think there was.

Mr. SPARKMAN. I think perhaps at the last session of Congress there was.

Mr. FOSS. Yes; but none this year.

Mr. SPARKMAN. I would also like to ask the gentleman if he does not think it would be a good idea to appropriate for one there? I saw a recommendation a year or so old for $60,000 for a foundry there.

Mr. FOSS. I do not think it was in the estimates this year.

I am sure it was not.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, simply to ask the consent of the committee to put a couple of letters in the RECORD on the subject-matter of the point of order I made.

Mr. TAWNEY. Are both letters alike? They are from different parties. Mr. SIMS.

Mr. TAWNEY. Are they both alike? Mr. SIMS. They are not the same exactly.

Mr. Chairman, I ask for unanimous consent to print in the RECORD the two letters that I referred to.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to print in the Record the two letters to which he refers. Is there objection?

There was no objection. Following are the letters:

EAST WASHINGTON CITIZENS ASSOCIATION, Washington, D. C., January 18, 1909.

Washington, D. C., January 18, 1909.

Washington, D. C., January 18, 1909.

Sir: We are opposed to, and ask you to vote against, the provision in the naval appropriation bill requiring the "Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington Railroad Company" (Pennsylvania), to maintain permanently its railroad connection with the Washington Navy-Yard by grade tracks on K and Canal streets SE., for the following reasons, namely:

namely:
Said railroad connection is the only grade track remaining in the city, and it has seven dangerous grade crossings, mostly unprotected by either gatekeepers or flagmen, and its removal is required by the acts of 1901 and 1903, providing for the elimination of grade crossings and the construction of the Union Station. It is dangerous to the citizens, depreciative of property values, and has long been known as "dead man's curve."

the construction of the Union Station. It is dangerous to the citizens, depreciative of property values, and has long been known as "dead man's curve."

By act approved May 27, 1908 (H. R. 20120, Public, No. 144), provision was made for a new railroad connection to the navy-yard by way of the north bank of the "Anacostia River," and the time limit for the removal of the present yard connection extended for two years, until 1910, and by a decree of the court in a suit by the United States against the railroad company said removal has been enjoined until said year. In the naval appropriation bill for fiscal year ending June 30, 1908, the sum of $40,000 was appropriated to provide "necessary bridge and railroad tracks" to accommodate, within the yard inclosure, the new railroad connection contemplated by the next-above-mentioned act (H. R. 20120).

The adoption of the present provision in the naval bill now before Congress would be doing the very thing that the House refused to do on direct vote last April (vide Congressional Record, p. 5349, vol. 42, No. 104), when the House passed H. R. bill No. 20120 (the bill so passed was substituted for House bill 13844), which merely left down the present grade tracks without any new route provided for; this last-mentioned bill, which was rejected, was brought in by the District of Columbia Committee.

For the past twenty years the citizens of the District, particularly the members of the association, have, by public meetings, petitions, and memorials, earnestly urged the elimination of grade crossings within the city, and Congress, finally recognizing the necessity for such removal, has by the expenditure of about five and one-half million dollars (vide p. 8, Report of Commissioners of the District of Columbia for year 1908) afforded entire relief for the city except this one remnant of grade crossings. Why should it remain? The Navy Department does not ask for its maintenance permanently, but, on the contrary, has for the last three years asked for another route. We wonde

Yours, very respectfully,

W. Mosby Williams, For Steam Railroad Committee, Address, Columbian Building.

WASHINGTON, D. C., January 16, 1909.

Washington, D. C., January 16, 1909.

Hon. T. W. Sims, M. C.,

House of Representatives, United States Capitol, City.

My Dear Mr. Sims: Having written you in the past on behalf of the property owners whose interests are affected by the grade tracks in the southeast section of the city, near the navy-yard, I wish to call your attention to the proposition, as outlined in to-day's papers, of the Naval Appropriation Committee to make said grade tracks permanent. You are so well informed on this subject that it is unnecessary for me to go into the legislation had in this matter up to the present time, but I would like to call your attention to erroneous impressions of the Naval Committee in this regard, namely:

If your bill (H. R. 24334) is yassed, as it should be, there will be no necessity for further legislativa.

The present railroad is called by the Naval Committee "a small spur;" It is only a small spur from K to M streets, but it is part of the former main tracks of the Pennsylvania Railroad from New Jersey avenue to Fifth street, a distance of seven squares in all, and having, on the whole, seven dangerous grade crossings.

The present shipments of freight to the navy-yard will not have to be stopped because the courts have provided for the maintenance of the present tracks until May 27, 1910.

The committee report states that a subcommittee was appointed to investigate the purchase of land offered for the purpose of obtaining the new railroad connection and that it should not be purchased because it was held at an exorbitant figure. This objection it met by the terms of your bill providing for condemnation of a right of way by a jury, who will fix the value of the land taken.

The further statement is made by the committee that the section of the city through which the present tracks run is sparsely inhabited, which statement could not have been made had the committee traversed the line of the railroad tracks, for the reason that practically every building lot facing upon and in the immediate vicinity thereof is improved by small dwelling houses; in addition to this, the public reservation between K and L, Fifth and Sixth streets, traversed by the yard railroad connection, has been recently used as a public playgrounds reservation, and a high wire fence has been built on each side of the railroad track, in order to try to protect the lives of the children who use the public space.

The citizens generally are convinced that the interests back of keeping this railroad connection are first and above all the Pennsylvania Railroad Company, and with it is the Standard Oil trust and the Allegheny Coal Company, and with it is the Standard Oil trust and the Allegheny Coal Company in the present have year and tracks.

This is very apparent when you read the 1901 elimination of grade crossings act (Public No. 49, sec. 2). You

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to print in the Record a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury relating to the railroads to the navy-yard, Washington, D. C.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to print in the RECORD the letter he referred to. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The letter is as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, December 9, 1908.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith for the consideration of Congress copy of a communication from the Secretary of the Navy of the 5th instant, submitting an estimate of appropriation in the sum of $303,683.33 for the purchase of land and change in railroad system, including new construction, for the navy-yard, Washington, D. C.

Respectfully,

GEO. B. CORTELYOU,

The SPEAKER OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, Washington, December 5, 1908.

Sir: I have the honor to forward herewith for transmission to Congress an estimate prepared by the Bureau of Yards and Docks under the caption "Public works, Bureau of Yards and Docks," subhead "Navy-yard, Washington, D. C.," for the purchase of land and change in railroad system, including new construction, $303,683.33. Attached to this estimate are copies of correspondence in explanation thereof.

Very respectfully,

Trunal H. Nawarana.

TRUMAN H. NEWBERRY

The SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY.

Supplemental estimates of appropriations required for the service of the fiscal year ending June 80, 1910, by the Bureau of Yards and Docks, Navy Department.

PUBLIC WORKS, BUREAU OF YARDS AND DOCKS.

estimates had been approved and forwarded.

PHILADELPHIA, BALTIMORE AND WASHINGTON RAILROAD CO., OFFICE OF THE SECOND VICE-PRESIDENT,
Philadelphia, October 5, 1993.

DEAR SIR: Referring to the question of the branch line, or siding, to connect the navy-yard at Washington with the tracks of the Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington Railroad Company, at its recent session Congress passed an act "Public-No. 144, H. R. 20120," authorizing and directing the Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington Railroad Company to construct same and prescribing the location, terms, and conditions governing the use thereof. The act provides that the entire cost of furnishing the right of way and building said siding shall be borne by the railroad company; also that where the line approved by the District Commissioners lies within the bed of any public highway or through any public space, the railroad company is given the right to occupy same; further, that the construction of the track or siding shall be begun within six months and completed within two years from the date of the act, and that pending such construction the railroad company is authorized to maintain its present track connection with the navy-yard.

Investigation disclosed the following facts:

"1. That the volume of business during the year 1907 (when activities were great) to and from the navy-yard amounted, so far as the Pennsylvania system is concerned, to 62,384 tons, producing a gross revenue of $102,593, and to and from the lines south of Washington and via the Baltimore and Ohlo Railroad to 5,170 tons, for the movement of which the Pennsylvania system received $907, gross.

"2. That the estimated cost of the construction of the line as approved by the District Commissioners, exclusive of the right of way, amounts to $93,480.

"3. That very little portion of the line would occupy any public highway or public space.

"4. That the cost of the right of way through private property is unestimable because of the value of the ground taken and the destruction or impairment of the riparian rights appurtenant thereto."

Because of the small gross earnings, the heavy cost of construction, and the probably large cost of the right of way this company can not see its way clear to build the tracks under the conditions prescribed in the act, and in view of the limited time fixed for maintaining the present track connection it seems proper to me that your department should be advised of our conclusions, in order that you may take such steps as you may deem necessary to protect yourself from track connection with the railroad.

Permit me to say that in my judgment the United States Government should build and own this track, which is, after all, as much a part of the n

Hon. TRUMAN H. NEWBERRY,
Assistant Secretary of the Navy,

[First indorsement.]

NAVY DEPARTMENT, October 9, 1908. Referred to the commandant, navy-yard, Washington, for remark.

V. H. METCALF, Secretary.

[Second Indorsement.]

[Second indorsement.]

Washington, D. C., October 14, 1908.*

(1) Respectfully returned to the Secretary of the Navy.

(2) If the Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington Raliroad Company can not be compelled, and I believe they can not be, to build the spur connecting this yard with their system, there are only two alternatives, one to get a bill through Congress to allow the tracks to remain where they are at present, or for the Government to build the spur at its expense.

(3) It is absolutely essential for the efficiency, and even existence, of this yard to have raliroad connection.

(4) If the last alternative is adopted, then the following sum should be obtained during the present session of Congress and the money made immediately available, so that the tracks can be finished before the expiration of the two years' grace which are allowed and which expire May 27, 1910:

Purchase of squares 955 and 979	$161,	872.	00
Building railroad yard in above squares to accommodate 80 cars	17,	331.	33
Building spur to these squares (last estimate of railroad company) as approved by District Commissioners	93,	480.	00
Square No. 1067Square No. 1001		000.
m.t.Y	202	000	20

(5) We are going ahead in this yard to change all the switches in the northwest corner of the yard in anticipation of the new connections, and the Bureau of Yards and Docks has opened bids for the railroad bridge across Slip No. 1.

Rear-Admiral, U. S. Navy,

Commandant and Superintendent Naval Gun Factory.

[Third indorsement.]

NAVY DEPARTMENT, October 31, 1908.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, October 31, 1908.

Referred to the Bureau of Yards and Docks.

In view of the decision of the railroad company, as within communicated, not to proceed with the construction of the siding to connect its tracks with the Washington Navy-Yard, the second of the alternative courses of action presented by the commandant of the yard in his indorsement (second) herewith, which contemplates the building of the spur by the Government, is approved.

The bureau will, accordingly, include in its estimates to be submitted to Congress at the coming session an item of $303,683.33 to cover the cost of constructing such spur track, including the establishment of a freight yard and the purchase of the necessary land and rights of way, as indicated in paragraph 4 of the commandant's indorsement.

NEWBERRY, Secretary.

Naval station, Pearl Harbor, Hawaii: Toward dredging an entrance channel of a depth of 35 feet, $600,000; toward construction of dry dock, to cost $2,000,000, $200,000; toward yard development, $100,000; in all, $900,000.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last I desire to ask the chairman of the committee what progress has been made during the last year with respect to the construction of the naval station at Pearl Harbor, Hawaii, and whether the land for the site has been acquired?

Mr. FOSS. The land has been in the possession of the Government for a number of years, but no actual work has been

Mr. TAWNEY. Why is it there has been no work done? It is a very important matter.

Mr. FOSS. They have had to get out their specifications and plans for the dry dock; and, as I understand, they have not yet received any bids, or not opened them, and they will open the bids next month. Of course, the most important thing is in connection with the dock,

Mr. TAWNEY. Is the dredging of this channel necessary for the construction of the station and dock?

Mr. FOSS. It is necessary in order to get ships up there.

Mr. TAWNEY. I know it is necessary to the use of the station after it is built; but my question is as to the propriety of opening that channel so that war vessels may go in before we have constructed the station and have had it fortified.

Mr. FOSS. It ought to be done all at the same time. is the way we have made the appropriation here. The work ought to go on all at the same time. It will take some years to do it. This is a very large project, which will cost $3,000,000, to dredge this channel up to the navy-yard, and there are a number of corners to be filed off, so to speak.

Mr. TAWNEY. Will it require all this money to dredge out the harbor?

Mr. FOSS.

Mr. TAWNEY. What I am opposed to is to having this work done so that war vessels can go up the harbor years before we will have occasion for it and before the station is completed.

Mr. FOSS. It is a harbor of refuge if we should have any trouble in the years to come.

Mr. TAWNEY. It is also fortified at the present time.

Mr. FOSS. It is fortified against anybody getting up there and getting out, and fortified against us as a harbor of refuge.

Mr. KEIFER. I would like to ask the gentleman a question in reference to what was said by the gentleman from Minnesota. I do not think the harbor needs dredging-any large part of it. There is about a mile and a half in which the water is deep enough. The difficulty is that it needs straightening more than anything else. A great many of our battle ships can be taken in now, but not under their own steam. They can be drawn in, but they can not run in on their own steam. I have been there and looked over this channel with great care. That harbor itself has plenty of room for all the ships of the world after they pass through this channel.

Mr. TAWNEY. I would like to ask the gentleman another question. At the rate that the Navy Department has been moving toward the initiation of this naval station during the last year, how long will it be before the station will be completed?

Mr. FOSS. Well, I can not answer that question; but I think the Navy Department has moved with some expedition.

Mr. TAWNEY. During the last session of Congress we were led to believe that there was imminent necessity for this station to be constructed in the very near future. Now, since it has been authorized, the necessity seems to have passed away to a great extent.

great extent.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I will ask how much has been spent out of the million dollars appropriated last year?

Mr. FOSS. Not a dollar has been spent.

Mr. FITZGERALD. How will they use this $900,000 if they have not spent any of the million yet?

Mr. FOSS. The plans have all been laid out, and they say they will need this additional sum during the coming year.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I know; but the gentleman says that they have just opened the bids for the dredging of the channel, that they have not even commenced the work. They have a that they have not even commenced the work. They have a million dollars toward it, and they have not spent a dollar so far. Now, what are they going to do with the additional $900,000?

Mr. FOSS. They will spend it. They say that they need every dollar of it during the coming year.

Mr. FITZGERALD. They will not spend it, in my judgment, not to be offensive; and it seems to me we are giving them an amount of money that they can not possibly require. Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. It can not be lost.

Mr. FITZGERALD. But it tends toward making a deficit, which is a very bad thing to do.

Mr. FOSS. They will spend it; the gentleman need not worry.

The Clerk read as follows:

PUBLIC WORKS UNDER THE SECRETARY OF THE NAVY.

Buildings and grounds, Naval Academy: For the purchase of land for the extension of the present rifle range near Annapolis for the use of the midshipmen at the Naval Academy, $75,000.

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order against that provision.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I hardly think this is subject to a point of order. It is for the purchase of an additional lot of land adjoining the present rifle range at Annapolis. If it was a separate tract of land, not adjoining the present range, then it would probably be subject to a point of order; but this being an extension of the present rifle range, it is not, in my judgment, subject to the point of order. There are a number of decisions on that point. I remember a number of years ago a point of order was raised against the purchase of additional land down here at the Washington Gun Factory, and the Chair at that time held that it was not subject to a point of order, inasmuch as the land sought to be purchased adjoined the land that was already government property.

Mr. MACON. The gentleman does not mean to say that we could, under existing law, appropriate to buy all the land that adjoined everything that the Government possesses, does he?

Mr. FOSS. No; but this is a continuation of work in progress.

Mr. MACON. I want to ask the gentleman if this $75,000 tract of land that is proposed to be purchased is contiguous to the present rifle range?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. MACON. Is it necessary that the Government should own it for the purpose indicated in the bill?

Mr. FOSS. Oh, very necessary.
Mr. MACON. What is the price per acre?
Mr. FOSS. The price is $75,000, and I do not remember the exact number of acres.

Mr. PADGETT. Two hundred and seventy-three acres.

Mr. MACON. May I ask the gentleman the necessity for this? We have not increased the number of cadets that have to practice at this range, have we?

Mr. FOSS. No; but this land which we seek to purchase is about to be used for villa sites in case the Government does not purchase it. Heretofore we have been firing over upon this land without any danger to human life. Now, a time has been reached when the land is valuable for residence purposes, and the owner says that unless we buy it he is going to sell it for that purpose, in which case our present rifle range will be destroyed. I may say that I took the matter up with the superintendent at Annapolis to see if we could not purchase this land for a good deal less than $75,000; to see if we could not get it for $60,000, but the owner has declined to reduce his price. I have here a statement from the officer at Annapolis who took the matter up with him.

Mr. FITZGERALD. How many acres are there? Mr. PADGETT. Two hundred and seventy-three. Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Will the gentleman accept this amendment:

Or so much thereof as may be necessary.

Mr. FOSS. Oh, yes; I would be very glad indeed to accept that amendment, because the Navy Department will not spend a dollar more than is necessary.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. If that amendment is put in, then it will not be mandatory to spend that amount.

Mr. MACON. I thought the price of the ground had been agreed upon?

Mr. FOSS. No; it has not been agreed upon; but we inquired to see whether the owner would accept $60,000 for the land, and he declined to do so. We want to get it as cheaply as possible.

Mr. TAWNEY. What is the price per acre that you propose to pay?

Mr. FOSS. We may get it for less than $75,000, but there are 273 acres, and we are appropriating here $75,000. There are instances of recent sales, of both small and large amounts of land along the Severn River, which have changed hands at from $500 to $1,200 an acre.

Mr. TAWNEY. Is this agricultural land? Mr. ROBERTS. No. It is contiguous to the present rifle range, and the shots go over the butts.

Mr. COX of Indiana. How much land does the Government own there for rifle-range purposes?

Mr. FOSS. I think about 40 acres.

Mr. TAWNEY. The range is 800 yards long at the present

Mr. BUTLER. What is included in the new area? Mr. FOSS. Two hundred and seventy-three acres.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Is this land within the corporation limits of the city of Annapolis?

Mr. FOSS. I do not think it is.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Has this proposition to sell the land to the Government ever been up before Congress previous to this session?

Mr. FOSS. It has never come in as an estimate from the department before, but there has been some talk of buying it here-

Mr. COX of Indiana. How far does it extend from the corporate limits?

Mr. FOSS. It is across the river; 2 or 3 miles.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Do I understand the gentleman to say that it is now used for farming purposes?

Mr. FOSS. No; it is not. Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. The Government leases it.

Mr. MACON. The Government now leases the whole tract? Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. Yes; and they will not lease it to the Government any longer.

Mr. FOSS. The owner says that he will have to sell it out for building sites for homes unless the Government buys it. We are in the position where we will have to take it or he will sell it.

Mr. MACON. Do we need the entire tract?

Mr. OLCOTT. If we do not get the 275 acres, we will have to buy a brand new range somewhere else.

Mr. BUTLER. We will have to take it or move out?

Mr. FOSS. I want to say that the owner has been very good about this; he has never charged the Government a cent for the use of it.

Mr. MACON. It looks like an exorbitant price to me. lieve in calling the bluff of the owner and telling him he can sell out to some one else. I believe it is a bluff to get an exorbitant price from the Government, and I think we should tell him to dispose of it to somebody else. Nobody would pay that price for that kind of land but the Government.

Mr. ROBERTS. We are told by the superintendent of the academy that in the use of the present range, which is an 800yard range, the shots go over the butts and land on this property which it is proposed to purchase. No complaint has been made as yet, because there is nobody residing there; there are no houses there. But when the owner of the land desires to mow it, he notifies the authorities at the academy, and during that period there is no firing. Now, then, it is proposed to cut that land up into villa sites or house lots, and as soon as houses are built there the Government loses the use of its present 800yard range.

Mr. MACON. Does the gentleman think that the city is going to extend across the river?

Mr. ROBERTS. They are beginning to build on that side of the river now.

Mr. MACON. Have they taken up everything on the other side—the city side of the river?

Mr. ROBERTS. No: but there is desirable land on this side upon which they are intending to build. That is the only information the committee has acted upon, and it seems to us that if we did not acquire it we should lose the benefit of the present range, and it was wise for the Government to purchase the land and retain the present range and also get a thousand-yard range

Mr. FITZGERALD. Does the gentleman think it is necessary to buy 273 acres of land in order to extend the range 200 yards? Mr. ROBERTS. This is necessary to cover the land where the shots on the present range go over this land. We get, in addition, a thousand-yard range. Mr. FITZGERALD. It is a small-arms range?

Mr. ROBERTS. It is a rifle range; it is not a pistol range. The shots go over the butts of the present range and make it impossible for people to live there.

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, I know the precedents that disclose provisions in appropriation bills are not subject to a point of order where the land sought to be purchased is contiguous to that already owned by the Government; where it is desired to extend a rifle range, as in this instance. For that reason I will not insist upon the point of order, knowing that the precedents are the other way.

It does strike me, however, that the Government is being held up bodily by the owner of this land when he demands that he be paid $75,000 for 273 acres of land across the river from the city and in an out-of-the-way place; but we can not help it if the committee thinks it must be done, for the committee is stronger than individual Members of this House, and I am sure its will will prevail in this instance.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I want to rean amendment. I shall offer an amendment at the end of the word "dollars," in line 19, "or so much thereof as may be necessary."

Mr. FOSS. I will accept that amendment.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Has there been any offer to take the property under the right of eminent domain?

Mr. ROBERTS. No; we had no authority for it.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. We have power to take it in that way.

Mr. ROBERTS. Not without legislative authority.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Tennessee offer an amendment?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 19, after the word "dollars," insert "or so much thereof as

Mr. FOSS. I will accept that amendment. Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. My recollection is that recently we have paid a claim of some individual who was shot down there accidentally by one of these riflemen in their practice, clearly showing, if I am correct, the necessity of having this public improvement. I think that, while the price may be too much for the land, yet if we have to keep on paying damages, it may be cheaper to purchase it at $75,000 in the end.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Naval training station, California, buildings: Roads, grounds, and planting of trees, $2,000; oiling parade grounds and roads adjacent, $2,050; shacks for the detention camp, $4,370; salt-water flushing system, $2,825.52; dredging the north side of island, $7,200; in all, $18,445.52.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I desire to call the attention of the gentleman in charge of the bill to the language in the paragraph as to oiling the parade grounds. What is it proposed to do—oil the road or the grounds

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. Both.
Mr. TAWNEY. What is the extent of the parade grounds?
Mr. FOSS. It will cost about $2,000. This is simply to lay the dust in the summer time. Admiral Pillsbury says it is one of the most dusty places in the country, and it is very windy, and that the wind carries germs, and they want to oil the parade ground and road. That would cost $2,000.

Mr. TAWNEY. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Naval training station, Great Lakes, buildings: Roads, sidewalks, inner basin sea wall, entrance piers and dredging, arch bridge, wagon bridge to power house, walls and fences, garbage crematory, and grading, $314,000; raliroad scales, scale house, and spur, $9,200; electric fixtures, interior and exterior arcs, and incandescent lamps, $33,500; cooking equipment, disinfecting equipment, and cold-storage installation, $10,000; fire apparatus, $4,150; elevators and dumb waiter, $6,450; storage balconies and trolleys in boathouse, $11,500; tower clock, electric clocks, and wiring, $1,600; furniture, filing apparatus, shelving, cupboards, fittings, lockers, and interior equipment for buildings, $23,000.

In all, to complete naval training station, Great Table 200.

In all, to complete naval training station, Great Lakes, $413,400.

notice in the clause just read that the language is to complete the naval training station. Is that the total amount that will be needed to complete the station as planned?

Mr FOSS Voc. Mr. STAFFORD. I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. FOSS. Yes. Mr. STAFFORD. Can the gentleman give to the committee the total amount that has been appropriated in the improvement of this station so as to make it adaptable for the purposes intended?

Mr. FOSS. I have not figured out the amount; but over $3,000,000, I should say.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman does not expect, then, that it will require any additional appropriation next year for construction purposes?

Mr. FOSS. No. This completes the station, as I understand it.

Mr. STAFFORD. Can the gentleman furnish the committee with any idea as to when the station will be ready for occu-

Mr. FOSS. July 1, 1910. Mr. STAFFORD. When was the work originally started? Mr. FOSS. About three or four years ago.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. Nineteen hundred and six, I think. Mr. STAFFORD. How many will the quarters accommodate? Mr. FOSS. Fifteen hundred, I believe.

The Clerk read as follows:

Naval magazine, Lake Denmark, N. J.: One magazine, including necessary clearing, grading, rallroad track, water mains, electric lights, hose houses, and watchmen's clocks, $12,500. One high-explosive house for storage of explosive "D," including necessary clearing, grading, rallroad track, water mains, electric lights, hose houses, and watchmen's clocks, $12,500. Extension of administration building to provide office for general storekeeper, for dispensary, and laboratory for testing powder, $3,000.

In all, $28,000.

Mr. STAFFORD. I reserve the point of order for the purpose of ascertaining whether this is a new project. In the report of the committee I do not find any estimate having been made for this project a year ago.

Mr. FOSS. Oh, that is an old magazine. Sometimes we appropriate one year for a magazine, and other times we let it go over for a year.

Mr. STAFFORD. Can the gentleman give the committee any information as to the number of these magazines that are distributed throughout the country?

Mr. FOSS. I could, but I have not the information here at hand. Most of them are mentioned right here in the bill. There are only two or three besides these.

Mr. STAFFORD. What advantage comes from having them distributed at different places rather than having them condistributed at different places rather than having them con-solidated? Yesterday, in the committee, there was a strong effort made, based on the ground of economy, to discontinue the pension agencies. I would like to know whether there is any reason why they should be distributed at different places.

Mr. FOSS. I do not know of any particular reason. They have been authorized by Congress from time to time. They are not very desirable institutions, I will say to the gentleman.

Mr. STAFFORD. Could the work, without sacrifice to the naval service, be carried on in one station in certain localities rather than having them at different localities?

Mr. ROBERTS. You do not want your powder all in one place. Mr. FOSS. It is desirable to have them scattered around; that is, to divide them up. It is not a good thing to have all your eggs in one basket.

Mr. STAFFORD. As I understand, there could be some consolidation of some stations.

Mr. FOSS. Not in the case of magazines.

Mr. STAFFORD. Then I misunderstood the answer the gentleman made to a question a few moments ago.

Mr. FOSS. I do not think it would be desirable in the case of powder magazines. We would not want to put all our powder or ammunition in one magazine.

Mr. STAFFORD. My point was whether there are not now more stations than are needed for the best interests of the

Mr. FOSS. No; there are not.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Naval magazine, New England coast (Hingham, Mass.): Toward the erection of the necessary buildings on ground the purchase of which is now under negotiation, as authorized by the act approved April 27, 1904, for a new naval magazine on the New England coast, also toward inclosing said grounds, grading and filling in, building roads and walks, improvement on the water front, necessary wharves and cranes, railroad tracks and rolling stock for local service, fire and water service, and equipment of the establishment, $100,000; in all, $100,000.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. FOSS. On what?

Mr. FITZGERALD. On the paragraph just read. Mr. FOSS. On the naval magazine on the New England coast?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. FOSS. That is already authorized by law and we have already appropriated $400,000 for it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The paragraph itself says that the land has not been acquired, so that we have not any land on which to erect these buildings-no land to grade. I want some information about it and I shall reserve the point of order.

Mr. ROBERTS. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from New York is too literal, and he is not familiar with the facts in this particular case. The land acquired for this particular magazine lies part of it on one side of the river and part on the other. The Government has already acquired enough land out of the total tract which they desire to acquire now to begin the con-struction of buildings, fences, and things like that. I believe there are some small tracts the title to which is still in the courts, but the greater proportion of the land desired has already been acquired.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I am not interested in that particularly. Mr. ROBERTS. It does away with the gentleman's point of order, however.

Mr. FITZGERALD. What I wish to know is what it is proposed to expend on this naval magazine-

Mr. ROBERTS. Why——
Mr. FITZGERALD. One moment, I have the floor.
Mr. ROBERTS. I thought the gentleman asked for informa-

Mr. FITZGERALD. I want to know something about the character of the buildings, what it is intended they shall cost, and what, if any, limit has been in the mind of the committee.

Mr. ROBERTS. If the gentleman will read the act of 1904-April 27—he can get that information without inquiring about That act provides the land and buildings shall not exceed $500,000. That is the fundamental act.

Mr. FOSS. And $400,000 has been already appropriated, and that completes it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. This completes it.

Mr. FOSS. Under the appropriation of 1904.
Mr. FITZGERALD. That is the information I desired in the RECORD. I withdraw the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

PUBLIC WORKS, MARINE CORPS.

Barracks and quarters, Marine Corps:
To complete the marine garrison, navy-yard, Philadelphia, Pa., one marine barracks, $150,000.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on the paragraph, lines 19 to 21, page 32. I desire to inquire what authority there is for the proposed barracks to be erected here.

Mr. Chairman, this is a continuation of work Mr. FOSS. already in progress, and we are providing for an addition to barracks already at Philadelphia.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Under what authority?
Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. The naval station is already there.

Mr. FOSS. This is a regular government navy-yard.

Mr. FITZGERALD. But that is not in order on an appropriation bill.

Mr. ROBERTS. Will the gentleman again state that point?
Mr. FITZGERALD. There are two rulings on the subject—that it is not in order to erect barracks in navy-yards on an appropriation bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Illinois point out to the Chair what provision there is in the law authorizing these barracks?

Mr. FOSS. I do not know, Mr. Chairman, there is any provision authorizing these particular barracks. I do not think there is any, but it has been in order to provide barracks or buildings at navy-yards. We already have barracks there for the marines, which are necessary, and this is an extension of those barracks.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Before the gentleman proceeds, let me ask him a question. I notice under "Public works, Marine Corps," provision is made for additional barracks at several places, and later on in the bill is a provision that the marines shall be kept at sea.

Mr. OLCOTT. Oh, no. Mr. FITZGERALD. I shall read it, Mr. FOSS. About 2,000 out of 10,000.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I can not put my hand on it at present, but the committee has reported a provision to compel these marines to do some sea duty; at the same time it is providing for very extensive additions to their accommodations on land. I have my own notion as to what should be done with the marines, but I should like to know just what the committee really wants done, whether it wants to keep them on land and provide these additional accommodations or whether it believes they should go to sea and stay there. I could understand the increase in accommodations on land if it were the intention not to have marines do sea duty; but it is difficult to understand why they should have these extensive land accommodations in addition to what they have already if it be the intention to compel all, or a large number of them, to do sea duty.

Mr. OLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, in response to the remarks of my colleague from New York, I will say the provision in regard to putting marines on ships or keeping them on ships applies only to a small percentage of them, perhaps 20 per cent or 25 per cent-

Mr. FITZGERALD. Then what is all this fuss about Mr. OLCOTT (continuing). As a matter of absolute fact, the marine barracks or marine quarters in Philadelphia were so inadequate that the marines had to be housed in tents.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It would be better to take them away from Philadelphia.

Mr. OLCOTT. I am predicating my statement on the number of men that will remain providing things exist as they did before the order was made taking the marines off the ships. This is absolutely necessary for the proper habitation of the marines that are in the Philadelphia Navy-Yard.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It may be or it may not.
Mr. OLCOTT. I can only say when I make that assertion that that is what we learned in the hearings from the officers of the navy and officers of the marines who have appeared before us.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I suppose this will be followed up by the recommendation that the marine barracks at New York be the additional men.

abandoned, as has been suggested. After they have built up sufficiently at other places in the country it will be proposed either to abandon the barracks at New York entirely or to build barracks in the district of my colleague from New York [Mr. Cocks], where the zephyrs from Oyster Bay will cool and refresh the members of the Marine Corps.

Mr. OLCOTT. I will say that as long as I am on the Committee on Naval Affairs I think that the gentleman need have no fear that there will be an abandonment of the barracks in his district and in the district of my other colleague.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not know what assurance my colleague from New York has, but I wish to say that I have no assurance that he will be on the Naval Committee after the 4th of March.

Mr. OLCOTT. Nor have I.

Mr. FITZGERALD. So his assumption of his ability to be of any particular help, unless it is based upon some information not in my possession, is really of not much value to me.

Mr. FOSS. Does the gentleman withdraw his point of order? Mr. FITZGERALD. I may withdraw the point of order, but I want sufficient information as to the necessity for these barracks to be given before I do withdraw it.

Mr. OLCOTT. The information is that the barracks are absolutely insufficient for the members of the Marine Corps living in Philadelphia, and they have to live in tents.

Mr. FITZGERALD. How many men will be housed in the building that is to be completed at the expense of $150,000?

Mr. OLCOTT. Four hundred. I will say that these are only wings to the barracks. The building originally cost $200,000 or $250,000 to complete, and this sum is to add wings to the building that is already constructed and which was never completed. The center of the building has been built, and this provision is for the wings to the building.

Mr. TAWNEY. How many men will this accommodate? Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. Three hundred additional.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman said 400 to me.

Mr. PADGETT. Colonel Denny stated that it will accommodate 600.

Mr. FITZGERALD. There is a great variety of opinion. It was said in reply to my question that it would accommodate 400, and the reply to the question of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] is 300, and now the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Padgett] says 600.
Mr. PADGETT. If the gentleman will permit, I will read the answer of Colonel Denny, found on page 318 of the hearing:

We have outgrown the one barracks at the League Island yard, and it is suggested here that we build another much like the present one, which would permit about 600 men to be accommodated at the station.

Mr. FITZGERALD. At the station?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes. Mr. FITZGERALD. But it is not contemplated to abandon the present barracks?

Mr. PADGETT. No; this appropriation is for the purpose of adding wings to the present barracks.

Mr. FITZGERALD. How many men will be accommodated by this $150,000?

Mr. PADGETT. About 300 are accommodated at the present time, so that the increase would be for 300 men. The hearings

The CHAIRMAN, How many will be accommodated there now? Colonel DENNY. About 300.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It seems to me that 300 marines are about all that we should accommodate or make accommodations for at Philadelphia.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman permit? I think he should not have any qualms that Philadelphia intends to make an onslaught on New York and withdraw the barracks from that station.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman misconceives my position.

Mr. STAFFORD. He can not cite in the recent history of the country wherein Philadelphia has had any such design

Mr. FITZGERALD. There is no rivalry between Philadel-phia and New York. What I have in mind is the demoralization of the members of the Marine Corps by being stationed in large numbers at Philadelphia. The gentleman entirely mis-conceives what I have in mind. The mere fact that some officer thinks that his corps has outgrown accommodations at a particular place is not sufficient justification for me to authorize an addition to marine barracks.

These marine barracks are not complete when you put up the building. There are a number of accessories that will cost to complete the barracks, I suppose, from $50,000 to $75,000. If the department desires additional buildings, it should give some information as to what the total cost will be to accommodate

Mr. STAFFORD. I will read from page 318 of the hearings on the proposition of the gentleman from New York. To a question propounded by Mr. Butler, Colonel Denny said:

We have plenty of land there to build on.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is the misfortune about this navy-yard at Philadelphia. There is so much land there that they have to come every year to get authority to put something on it—to occupy the vacant space. [Laughter.] It would be a benefit to the country if they did not have the land.

Mr. STAFFORD. I question if that condition existed in New York that the gentleman would attach the same objection to it that he does to the yard in Philadelphia. This is an entirely different proposition.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman was never there; he is simply speaking from what he has heard of it.

Mr. STAFFORD. I lived in Philadelphia for some time, and am quite well acquainted with the conditions there.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That accounts for some of the excellent things I have never understood about the gentleman from Wisonsin. [Laughter.]
Mr. STAFFORD. That also would account for a good many things which the gentleman advocates or opposes in this naval bill, because it might infringe on the navy-yard at New York, which he so ably represents, and which is located in his district.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not represent the New York NavyYard, Mr. Chairman. I am interested in having all the government plants utilized to the utmost capacity; but until this question of what we shall do with the marines is settled, it seems to me very unwise to be expending, as proposed here, $150,000 at one place and $150,000 at another place, and then to complete the marine garrison at Pearl Harbor, where not a spade has been turned, $135,000, and $50,000 for six officers' quarters. It is proposed to expend for public works in this bill for the Marine Corps close to $500,000. Unless there can be found authority for this appropriation, it will not be made at this time, because I shall insist upon the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Illinois on the point of order.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, we have at the present time a marine barracks in the navy-yard at Philadelphia, and I understand that this provides for a wing upon the present barracks now in Philadelphia at this navy-yard. It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that that is the continuation of a work already in progress

The CHAIRMAN. Whatever may be the ruling of the Chair upon the item for a wing for the barracks, the Chair can not see how the present item refers to a work previously constructed.

Mr. FOSS. It says to "complete the marine garrison," which is done by the addition of a wing.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Why, "garrison" is the men. They constitute the garrison; the buildings do not constitute the garrison. It has never been held that putting wings on anything is a continuance of a public work in progress. [Laughter.]
Mr. FOSS. I say that the word "garrison" applies to the whole business.

The CHAIRMAN. It seems to the Chair the term "garrison" is not restricted to one marine barracks as a thing now authorized by law, and hence the item is subject to the point of order. Therefore, the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. FOSS. Well, now, Mr. Chairman, I offer this provision:

To extend the marine barracks by the addition of a wing thereto, navy-yard, Philadelphia, Pa., $150,000.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I will make the point of order on that. The CHAIRMAN. Wait until the Clerk has reported the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert "To extend the marine barracks, by the addition of a wing, navy-yard, Philadelphia, Pa., $150,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York makes the point of order.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is to complete a building and exceeds the limit of cost.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like to ask the gentleman from New York and the gentleman from Illinois if there be a limit of cost upon the barracks?

Mr. FOSS. If there be a limit of cost?

The CHAIRMAN. That is, whether the limit was fixed by

No; this will be the total.

Mr. FOSS. No; this will be the total. The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman cite the law under which the barracks were built, so that we can tell?

Mr. FOSS. There was no limit of cost which provided for the marine barracks.

Mr. FITZGERALD. How does the gentleman know, if he has not the act at his hand? He has not seen it for years.

Mr. FOSS. We do not provide for barracks now.

Mr. FITZGERALD. You are here completing something built about thirty years ago.

Mr. FOSS. We have changed the word "complete" to the word "extend," which is a different thing.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands the gentleman from Illinois to say that there was no limit of cost upon the barracks?

Mr. FOSS. There was no limit as to the cost.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I do not like to have the Chair bound by a statement like that.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will be glad to obtain information from the gentleman from New York on the subject.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Of course it is not within the possibilities for the gentleman from New York to give information to the Chair, but this is not to be trifled with in that way. The law should be produced if the gentleman is to substantiate his argument.

The CHAIRMAN. But the gentleman says there is no law. Mr. FITZGERALD. Well, not to be unkind to the gentleman, I doubt whether his recollection is very acute on this matter, or he would state what the law was. These barracks, like other places, were built a great many years ago.

Mr. ROBERTS. No; these are quite recent. Mr. FITZGERALD. These are not quite recent.

Mr. ROBERTS. I beg to differ with the gentleman. Mr. FITZGERALD. There are two gentlemen here who come from very near that locality. One of them ought to know when these barracks were built.

Mr. BUTLER. Eight or ten years ago.

The CHAIRMAN. On the statement of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Foss], in charge of the bill, the chairman of the committee, that there is no limit of cost fixed in reference to the construction of these barracks, the Chair feels that an amendment proposing to construct an additional wing to the barracks is an item that is in order as a continuation of a public work. The Chair therefore overrules the point of order.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I wish to offer an amendment. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Mr. FITZGERALD. After the word "thereto" add "at a cost not to exceed $150,000." I think we ought to put some limitation upon the cost of these barracks.

Mr. FOSS. I accept that amendment. The Clerk read as follows:

Insert, after the word "thereto," the words "at a cost not to exceed $150,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Foss] as amended by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD].

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

To complete the quartermaster's depot, Philadelphia, Pa., and the purchase of ground adjoining such depot, $25,000.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I reserve a point of order on this para-

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I should like some information about this.

Mr. BUTLER. This item in the bill is to complete the quartermaster's depot, Philadelphia, Pa., and the purchase of ground adjoining such depot, $25,000. At the hearing before the committee the chairman said:

mittee the chairman said:

I thought we completed that last year.
Colonel Denny. No; the committee has been very generous with us about that. We have two buildings, two offices, storehouses, and workshops, and we are building a third additional one. When completed, we will have a splendid storehouse there, all we need, where we can make everything we require except arms, practically.

The Chairman. Will this complete it?
Colonel Denny. This will complete it.

Mr. Padgett. I would like to ask about the change of the language here—"Toward the completion of the quartermaster's depot" is simply a continuing proposition. "To complete" is the language that we have heretofore used. Why is it changed?
Colonel Denny. There was no purpose in adopting the language. There is no reason why it should not be "To" or "Toward," whichever the committee prefers, and I believe, as you have said, that the committee used the word "To" heretofore.

To explain to the gentleman from Tennessee, this is a small piece of ground which the department would like to purchase, alongside of its depot of supplies, for protection to its building, for the purpose of making a small addition to this building, and to get rid of some cheap buildings which crowd up close to it. Our ownership of this ground will protect the government buildings, and the committee feel that in view of the expenditure which has already been made at that point this is a wise thing

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. How many acres of land do we now own there?

Mr. BUTLER. I do not know that it would amount to acres. It is on Broad street, Philadelphia, alongside of the old depot of the Philadelphia, Wilmington and Baltimore Railroad Company. It is a very valuable piece of ground, acquired there some years ago. It is where the Marine Corps has its depot from which it draws all its supplies.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Can you tell us about how large it is?

Mr. BUTLER. My colleague, General Bingham, may remember how many feet front on Broad street—perhaps two or three hundred.

Mr. BINGHAM. Over 200 feet.

Mr. BUTLER. It runs a considerable depth in the rear. It is one of the most valuable pieces of property the Government owns.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. Colonel Denny was asked-

What is the necessity of this additional ground?

He replied-

The way we are now, the north end of the second and third additions now abuts against a little settlement of Italians—very cheap houses that are not fireproof—and our fear was that unless there was a space of, say, 30 or 40 feet our building would not be free from any possible fire in these little shacks.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. But have you any testimony that it is worth $25,000?

Mr. BUTLER. No; except the location and the evidence here. There is no doubt in the minds of any of us who know the location.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. How much are you going to buy? Mr. BINGHAM. Let me state, for the benefit of the gentleman from Tennessee, that there has been expended in this quartermaster's establishment almost half a million dollars. It is one of the handsomest and most useful buildings in the entire service. Now, this small section of ground in the rear is absolutely necessary for the convenience of loading and un-They can build up to the present line and render the present building practically useless. We want to get possession of this small piece of ground on account of its great usefulness to the building.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. How large a piece of land is it? Mr. BUTLER. Between 30 and 40 feet front on the street, and runs at right angles from Broad street.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. What evidence have you that it is worth $25,000?

Mr. BUTLER. It is not quite in the heart of the city, but within 10 or 15 squares of the Broad Street Station. Land is very valuable there, but the buildings adjoining the government building are poor.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I will ask the chairman of the committee if he has any information about it?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. There seems to be no evidence of the value of the land. Of course, if it is worth $25,000, that is one proposition; but if it is worth less than that, that is another. There is no evidence what it is worth. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended for five minutes, and that he confine himself to the evidence of the value.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks that the time of the gentleman be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BUTLER. The chairman of the committee said to Colonel Denny:

What does that $25,000 go for?

Colonel Denny replied:

That is for the purpose of building the interior arrangements in the last addition authorized last year—elevators, electric machines for operatives, fire escapes, shelving for supplies, etc.

Mr. PADGETT. If the gentleman will turn to page 320, he will find that he says it was to purchase two small lots, at $4,000 each, making $8,000, and that the remainder goes for fixing up and improving the building.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. How much is to be used for the fixing up?

Mr. BUTLER. About $17,000.
Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. The balance is to go for land? Mr. BUTLER. Yes; $8,000 for 30 or 40 feet on the street.

Two lots, $4,000 each, covering 30 or 40 feet.

Mr. PADGETT. And about 200 feet long. Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. What do they say about the value?

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. The value was fixed by three trust companies

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. What do they say about it?

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. They say that the lots were worth $4,000 each. That is the estimate given to us by the real estate experts of three big trust companies in Philadelphia.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York withdraw his point of order?

Mr. FITZGERALD. After the explanation that has been made I withdraw the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

To complete the marine garrison, navy-yard, Bremerton, Wash., one marine barracks, $150,000; in all, $150,000.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order to that paragraph.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. Mann. Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 26394, the naval appropriation bill, and had come to no resolution thereon. COMMISSIONS TO RETIRED ARMY OFFICERS WITH INCREASED RANK.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I submit a conference report on the bill (S. 653) to authorize commissions to issue in the cases of officers of the army retired with increased rank. ask unanimous consent that we may dispose of it to-night instead of first printing it in the RECORD under the rule. There is only one little item in it. It is for commissions to officers on the retired list having increased rank. It does not give them any more pay or rank, but simply a commission. As it passed the House it applied to the army and the navy and the Marine Corps, and in the Senate they had the Revenue-Cutter Service put in to apply to those who retired under the provisions of the law a year ago, as referred to by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann]. I wish to say that he was exactly right at that time, and I was wrong. It now applies to the Revenue-Cutter Service so that those who retired a year ago get a commission for the increased rank.

Mr. WILLIAMS. What is the request for unanimous consent? Mr. HULL of Iowa. Simply that we agree to the report of the conference committee instead of printing it under the rules.

Mr. FITZGERALD. What is the necessity for this haste?
Mr. HULL of Iowa. There is no particular necessity, only it saves taking the time of the House to call it up and print it and go through the same performance.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Does it raise anybody's salary?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. It does not.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] Chair hears none. The question is on agreeing to the conference

The question was taken, and the conference report was agreed to.

The conference report is as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 653) to authorize commissions to issue in the cases of officers of the army retired with increased rank, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate to the amendments of the House and agree to the same.

J. A. T. HULL, A. B. CAPRON, JAMES HAY. Managers on the part of the House. F. E. WARREN, N. B. SCOTT, JAS. P. TALIAFERRO, Managers on the part of the Senate.

DESERTERS FROM NAVAL SERVICE.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (S. 5473) to authorize the Secretary of the Navy in certain cases to mitigate or remit the loss of rights of citizenship imposed by law upon deserters from the naval service, with a House amendment thereto, disagreed to.

Mr. ROBERTS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House insist on its amendment to the Senate bill and agree to the conference asked for by the Senate.

The motion was agreed to.

The Chair announced the following conferees: Mr. Roberts, Mr. Dawson, and Mr. Padgett.

COMMITTEE APPOINTMENTS.

The Chair announced the following appointment on the Committee on Claims, vice Mr. Lilley: Mr. Wood.

The Chair laid before the House the following:

The Clerk read as follows

WILKESBORO, N. C., January 19, 1909.

Hon. Joseph G. Cannon,

Speaker House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

Dear Sir: I respectfully tender my resignation as a member of the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to take effect immediately.

Yours, very truly,

R. V. Hackett.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, Mr. HACKETT will be relieved from further service on the committee. Is there ob-

There was no objection.

The Chair announced the following committee appointment: Committee on Invalid Pensions, Mr. Russell of Missouri.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. SAUNDERS, indefinitely on account of illness in his family.

FINAL REPORT JAMESTOWN TERCENTENNIAL COMMISSION.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Industrial Arts and Expositions and ordered printed. To the Senate and House of Representatives:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

In compliance with the provisions of the acts of Congress approved March 3, 1965, and June 30, 1906, respectively, I submit herewith the final report of the Jamestown Tercentennial Commission, embodying the reports of various officers of the Jamestown Exposition, held at Norfolk, Va., in 1907.

It is recommended by the commission that if the report is published as a public document the illustrations be included. If it should be so published, I would recommend that a sufficient sum be authorized from the unexpended balance remaining in the appropriation of $50,000 for expenses of the Jamestown Tercentennial Commission to cover the expense of printing 2,000 copies, 500 for the Senate, 1,000 for the House of Representatives, and 500 for distribution to public libraries throughout the country.

Theodore Roosevelt. THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, January 20, 1909.

ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

Under clause 2, Rule XXIV, Senate bills of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees, as indicated below:

S. 8254. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the civil war and certain dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors-to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

S. 8422. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the civil war and to widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors-to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

INTERNATIONAL TUBERCULOSIS CONGRESS.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States (S. Doc. No. 671), which was read and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds and ordered printed. To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith for the information of the Congress a communication from the Secretary of the Smithsonian Institution, together with reports from the superintendent of construction of the new National Museum building, the disbursing agent of the institution, and the secretary-general of the International Tuberculosis Congress, as to the details of the work done by the Smithsonian Institution in fitting up the building for the meeting of said congress and the results accomplished by the congress.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, January 20, 1909.

EXTENDING REMARKS IN THE RECORD.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend some remarks in the RECORD which I made this afternoon while the House was in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

OUTWARD ALIEN MANIFESTS.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the minority of the committee may have three days within which to file an adverse report on the bill (S. 7785) relative to outward alien manifests of certain vessels, which bill I am about to report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent that the minority may have three days within which to submit their views on the bill referred to. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ADJOURNMENT.

Then (at 5 o'clock and 17 minutes p. m.), on motion of Mr. Foss, the House adjourned.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting recommendations of relief for Mrs. Leona Sugui (H. Doc. No. 1351)—to the Committee on Claims and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a letter from the Secretary of Commerce and Labor submitting an estimate of appropriation for the Light-House Establishment (H. [Telegram.]

Santa Fe, N. Mex., January 20, 1909. The honorable President of the Senate of the United States, Washington, D. C.

United States, Washington, D. C.

The thirty-eighth legislative assembly of New Mexico, now in session at Santa Fe, has to-day directed the secretary of New Mexico to transmit to the Congress of the United States the following joint memorial: "Your memorial is to call the attention of Congress to the action of the Republican and Democratic national conventions favoring immediate statehood for New Mexico and Arizona. This legislature urges and insists that such represents the wishes of the people of the United States; that New Mexico, having 500,000 inhabitants, ample resources, and sufficient intelligence to maintain and administer a state government has reached the proper time to be admitted as a State in the Union. We ask and demand immediate action that our people may have all the benefits and advantages of the most favored American citizens, with full right of self-government, limited only as other States are limited under the Constitution."

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the amendment submitted by himself on the 13th instant, pro-posing to appropriate $25,000 for the construction of a suitable vessel or launch for the customs service at Portland, Me., etc., intended to be proposed to the sundry civil appropriation bill, reported favorably thereon, and moved that it be printed and. with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Appropriations, which was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. I am directed by the Committee on Appropriations, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 26399) making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1909, to report it with amendments, and I submit a report (No. 813) thereon.

I shall ask the Senate to take up this bill after the passage of the legislative appropriation bill.

VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be placed on the calendar.

Mr. WARREN, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 10606) for the relief of Robert S. Dame, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 814) thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 16015) for the relief of Lafayette L. McKnight, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 815) thereon.

Mr. HEYBURN, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the bill (S. 4090) to provide for the acquiring of additional ground and for the enlarging of the government building at Boise, Idaho, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 816) thereon.

Mr. McCREARY, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 6199) to credit certain officers of the Medical Department, U. S. Army, with services rendered as acting assistant surgeons during the civil war, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 817) thereon.

Mr. BROWN, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 19095) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to sell isolated tracts of land within the Nez Perces Indian Reservation, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 818) thereon.

Mr. GAMBLE, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. 8067) authorizing the creation of a "Le Beau land district," reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 819) thereon.

Mr. CLAPP, from the Committee on Claims, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them each with an amendment and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (S. 6986) for the relief of registers and former registers of the United States land offices (Report No. 820); and

A bill (S. 8252) for the relief of Elizabeth G. Martin (Report No. 821).

Mr. BURNHAM, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4119) to pay John Wagner, of Campbell Hall, N. Y., for carrying the mails, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 822) thereon.

Mr. WARNER, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 20171) to correct the military record of George H. Tracy, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 823) thereon.

Mr. PILES, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. 8429) to refund certain tonnage taxes and light dues levied on the steamship Montara without register, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 824) thereon.

IMPROVEMENT OF EAST BOOTHBAY HARBOR, MAINE,

Mr. FRYE. I report favorably from the Committee on Commerce concurrent resolution No. 70. These concurrent resolutions ought to be passed now, for the River and Harbor Committee in the other House are considering these very questions.

Concurrent resolution No. 70, submitted by Mr. Frye on the 18th instant, was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause to be made an examination and survey of East Boothbay Harbor, Maine, with a view to extending the improvement contemplated in the report submitted in House Document No. 944, Sixtieth Congress, first session, to Hodgdon's wharf.

IMPROVEMENT OF SABINE PASS, TEXAS,

Mr. FRYE. I am directed by the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred Senate concurrent resolution No. 69, submitted by the Senator from Texas [Mr. Culberson] on the 14th instant, to report it favorably with an amendment, and I ask for its adoption.

The Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the concurrent resolution.

The amendment was to add an additional section, as section 3. so as to make the concurrent resolution read:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring). That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause to be made an examination and survey of the jettles and channel of Sabine Pass, in the State of Texas, from the 30-foot contour beyond the bar at the entrance to said Sabine Pass to and including the turning basin at Port Arthur, with a view to widening the channel and the Port Arthur ship canal to 200 feet at bottom and increasing the depth thereof and of the turning basin to 30 feet at mean low Gulf tide, together with the extension of the walls of the existing jettles to the 30-foot contour, and to submit estimates for such improvements.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, also authorized and directed to cause to be made an examination and survey of Taylors Bayou and the lumber slip adjacent thereto, with the view of Temoving the narrow strip of land separating Taylors Bayou and lumber slip and the deepening of said Taylors Bayou and lumber slip and the deepening of Said Taylors Bayou and lumber slip for a length of 2,500 feet to a depth of 30 feet.

SEC. 3. That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause to be made an examination and survey of the Neches River from Beaumont to its mouth and of the Sabine River from Orange to its mouth and the canal extending from the mouths of the Sabine and Neches rivers to the mouth of Taylors Bayou, with a view to widening and deepening said canal to a width of 200 feet at the bottom of said canal and increasing the depth thereof to 30 feet, and with a further view of removing the obstructions in the said rivers and improving the same to a depth of 30 feet.

The amendment was agreed to.

The concurrent resolution as amended was agreed to.

IMPROVEMENT OF RYE HARBOR, NEW HAMPSHIRE.

Mr. CRANE, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred Senate concurrent resolution No. 74, submitted by Mr. BURNHAM on the 19th instant, reported it without amendment.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask unanimous consent that the concurrent resolution just reported be now considered.

The concurrent resolution was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause an examination and survey to be made of Rye Harbor, in the State of New Hampshire, with a view to restoring navigation therein, and to submit estimates for the same.

PROMOTIONS IN MEDICAL CORPS OF THE ARMY.

Mr. WARREN. I am directed by the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 8265) to regulate examinations for promotion in the Medical Corps of the Army, to report it favorably without amendment, and I submit a report (No. 809) thereon. I ask for the immediate consideration of the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be read for the information of the Senate.

The Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That any officer on the active list of the army as a major of the Medical Corps who at his first examination for promotion to the grade of lieutenant-colonel in said corps has been or shall hereafter be found disqualified for such promotion for any reason other than physical disability incurred in the line of duty shall be suspended from promotion and his right thereto shall pass successively to such officers next below him in rank in said corps as are or may become eligible to promotion under existing law during the period of his suspension. Any officer suspended from promotion as hereinbefore provided shall be reexamined as soon as practicable after the expiration of one year from the date of the completion of the examination that resulted in his suspension; and if on such reexamination that resulted in his suspension; and if on such reexamination he is found qualified for promotion, he shall again become eligible thereot; but if he is found disqualified by reason of physical disability incurred in line of duty, he shall be retired with the rank to which his seniority entities him to be promoted; and if he is not found disqualified by reason of such physical disability, but is found disqualified for promotion for any other reason, he shall be retired without promotion.

Mr. GALIJINGER. Mr. President, I wish to ask the Senator

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I wish to ask the Senator from Wyoming a question as to the bill. I have not had occasion to look at it. I will ask the Senator what change it makes in existing law so far as the examination and promotion of medical officers is concerned?

Mr. WARREN. The existing law regarding examinations for promotion in the Medical Corps which passed two years ago, through a change made that did not seem to be fully understood at the time, provided that officers must be examined whenever they passed from one grade to another until they arrived at the position of lieutenant-colonel; but it left the majors in such position that, failing in an examination, they stood right where they were. They had no chance for a reexamination, could not be retired, and others went up over them to the grade of lieutenant-colonel, while these men, practically discredited, were left as majors and still kept in the service.

Of course the result of that is that no post or garrison feels quite contented to have sent to them a major discredited by the department but still retained in the service.

This bill provides that these majors may have the same right as those in the line and in other departments, to take another examination, and failing in that they may be retired.

Mr. GALLINGER. The second examination takes place twelve months after the first?

Mr. WARREN. As near as practicable after twelve months. Mr. GALLINGER. I can see no objection to the bill. I think it is a wise one.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee in the Whole. The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time and passed.

CENTENARY OF BIRTH OF ABRAHAM LINCOLN.

Mr. WETMORE. I am directed by the Committee on the Library, to whom was referred the joint resolution (S. R. 117) relating to the celebration of the one hundredth anniversary of the birth of Abraham Lincoln, and making the 12th day of February, 1909, a legal holiday, to report it favorably with amendments. I call the attention of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. DICK] to the joint resolution.

Mr. DICK. I ask for the present consideration of the joint resolution.

The Secretary read the joint resolution, and, there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The joint resolution was reported from the Committee on the Library with amendments. The first amendment was, on page 2, line 3, to strike out the word "That."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, line 14, to strike out the words "that we recommend action" and insert the words "it is hereby recommended that action be taken," so as to read:

Be it further resolved, It is hereby recommended that action be taken looking to the erection in the city of Washington of a monument which shall be worthy his great fame, his service to humanity and to his country, and fittingly commemorate the grandeur of character, the nobility of life, and the epoch-making career of Abraham Lincoln:

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, the joint resolution recommends the building of a suitable monument in the city of Washington to commemorate the memory of Abraham Lincoln. To that, of course, I do not take exception, but I believe that a fitting memorial commemorative of the great deeds and the memory of Abraham Lincoln should take form more pronounced than the erection of a monument in competition with the Washington Monument. It has been recently suggested that a monument somewhat inferior in appearance to the Washington Monument should be erected west thereof, or at some remote place in the park.

I do not wish to enter upon the subject at length at this time, but I do desire to express approval of the suggestion of a commission which has recently reported through Mr. McCleary, of Minnesota, in favor of a great proposed Lincoln highway from the city of Washington to Gettysburg as a somewhat fitting memorial to the memory of this great man. I believe in due time that great highway will be extended south from the central to the city of Bishmand. from the capital to the city of Richmond.

I do not intend to move any amendment to the pending joint resolution. The propriety of its passage is manifest; the desire to have it passed promptly is universal; but I make the observations I now submit for the purpose of having it distinctly understood that the recommendation for a monument in the city of Washington is not to be taken in any sense as binding upon the Senate or Congress as to the manner in which expression shall be given in the form of a memorial to Lincoln.

Mr. SCOTT. The Senator had better move to strike out that clause

Mr. CARTER. It might be well to eliminate that portion which refers to a monument in Washington. No monument can be erected in Washington in competition with the Washington Monument that will at all respond to the desire of the American people to properly commemorate the memory of Abraham Lincoln. A statue on a corner or in a park such as we ordinarily erect to a man who happened to command in a successful engagement on the field or in the conduct of a series of campaigns in war will not be a memorial to Abraham Lincoln such as the American people desire to erect.

In order that there may be no mistake in the future as to the purpose of Congress in this behalf, and in order to leave the entire field open, on the suggestion of a Senator I move to amend the joint resolution by striking out that portion which proposes to recommend the building of a monument in Washington City to commemorate Abraham Lincoln.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will report the amendment proposed by the Senator from Montana.

The SECRETARY. In line 15, page 2, strike out the words

"in the city of Washington of a monument" and insert in lieu thereof the words "of a memorial."

Mr. CARTER. I do not wish to confine the memorial to the city of Washington, but I think it would be well at this time to strike out the words so that Congress will in no sense be committed to any particular form of expression.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I should like to suggest to the Senator from Montana that the word "monument" be stricken out and the words "a suitable memorial" be substituted.

Mr. CARTER. I now have the text before me and I can make the amendment more specific. I suggest, in line 15, after the word "erection," to strike out the words "in the city of Washington of a monument".

Mr. DIXON. We are unable on this side to hear what the joint resolution is that is under consideration. What is the calendar number?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is a joint resolution just reported by the Committee on the Library.

Mr. SCOTT. It is impossible for us on this side to hear the junior Senator from Montana.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will again read the joint resolution by title.

The Secretary read the joint resolution by title.

Mr. CARTER. In order to perfect the amendment, I move to strike out all after the words "looking to the," in line 15, to and including the word "monument" in the same line, and to insert in lieu thereof "the construction of a suitable memo-

Mr. FORAKER. So that it will read how?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the

The SECRETARY. On page 2, line 15, strike out the words erection in the city of Washington of a monument" and in lieu insert "construction of a suitable memorial," so that, if amended, it will read:

Be it further resolved, It is hereby recommended that action be taken looking to the construction of a sultable memorial, which shall be worthy his great fame, his service to humanity and to his country, and fittingly commemorate his grandeur of character, the nobility of life, and the epoch-making career of Abraham Lincoln.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will ask the Senator from Montana why he proposes to strike out the "District of Columbia." Is not this the place for a monument to Abraham Lincoln?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Of course it Mr. GALLINGER. Where else? Of course it is.

Mr. CARTER. Unquestionably the memorial to Abraham Lincoln will be connected with the city of Washington. I presume the Senator did not hear my previous observation to the effect that I believe we should not be bound by a recommendation which would preclude consideration of the proposed Lincoln highway from the White House door to the battlefield of Gettysburg on the north.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is a dream, Mr. President.

Mr. CARTER. It may be realized in due time. I do not wish that any expression now indulged shall preclude consideration of that project.

Mr. GALLINGER. Would the Senator from Montana have a public highway as a monument to Abraham Lincoln?

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, the public highways of the world are the most enduring monuments in the world. this Lincoln way 150 or 200 feet wide, and appropriating large additional spaces here and there, the States of this Union one after another would erect groups of statuary or monuments along that line, which would make it one of the most historic drives on the globe.

Mr. KNOX. Will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. CARTER, Certainly.

Mr. KNOX. I wish to ask the Senator from Montana if it is not true that one of the most famous and enduring monuments of the world is the Appian Way, erected by the censor Appias and commemorating him, and if it is not true that one of the greatest monuments of Japan to one of her sovereigns is a great highway?

Mr. CARTER. Most assuredly, Mr. President. I think, after our ordinary monuments shall have crumbled away, the memorial roadway proposed will remain to commemorate the immortal fame of this great President of the United States. One of the difficulties in the way of an appropriate monument rests in the fact that it is not desired to erect in this capital any monument in competition with the monument erected to George Washington. And to have a piece of statuary or a group of figures erected to commemorate the memory of Abraham Lincoln, as the memory of Lafayette is perpetuated or commemorated in Lafayette Square, would, I think, fall short of the just desires of the American people to commemorate the memory of Lincoln in the most pronounced, enduring, and emphatic way.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I have no disposition to be technical about this matter at all. I have thought for a long time that it was discreditable to the Government of the United States that we did not have a suitable memorial to Lincoln, and I have believed that one ought to be constructed in the city of Washington. If there is a prospect of carrying out the project the Senator from Montana has alluded to-to have a great highway, covering 40 or 50 miles, between here and the battlefield of Gettysburg-and if there is any hope that the States of the Union will erect monuments along that proposed highway, I admit that that is a magnificent conception and its completion would be a magnificent project.

I have a vague knowledge of the Appian Way. the old countries have built memorials of that kind, and yet I did not suppose until this morning that there was any very serious thought that that suggestion would be carried into effect. If it be true that it may become an accomplished fact, I would certainly join with other Senators in the belief that that would be a very suitable memorial to Lincoln, or to any other great American, and yet I feel that Lincoln is entitled to a splendid monument of some kind in this great city.

I asked the question largely for the reason that heretofore when we have talked of erecting monuments to men who distinguished themselves in the military or the civil branches of the Government, outside of the city of Washington, we have been met with the objection that Congress ought not to appropriate money to build monuments anywhere except in the city of Washington. My attention was attracted by the suggestion that in this particular case we should eliminate the provision confining this matter to the city of Washington. I still think that when it becomes an accomplished fact, whether it comes in competition or not with the great monument to the memory of George Washington, we will have a suitable memorial in this city to the great emancipator.

Mr. BURKETT. Mr. President, it has been almost impossible for us on this side of the Chamber to find out just what is under consideration. I have sent to the Clerk's desk and I have a copy of Senate joint resolution 117. That is the one under consideration?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That is the joint resolution under consideration.

Mr. BURKETT. We have been unable to find out what amendment has been made to the proposed legislation.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. There have been two formal amendments from the committee agreed to. The Senator from Montana submitted an amendment, which will be read by the Secre-

Mr. BURKETT. Mr. President, I want to say just a word. This is not a matter that anybody wants to object to. As I understand, the joint resolution is not on the calendar, and it comes up this morning by unanimous consent. I have glanced through the joint resolution and, with the exception of possibly the last section, it is, I am certain, entirely unobjectionable to every-body. But if it is to be undertaken in this way by unanimous consent upon a bill that is not printed, so far as having been printed since the report has come in, and if we are on a bill that is not on the calendar, to take up the question as to what kind of a memorial we are going to erect here or somewhere else to the memory of Abraham Lincoln, I think it ought to be objected to.

I am not opposed to erecting a suitable monument here; I am not prepared to say this morning that I am opposed to building a highway from here to Gettysburg; but I am opposed to committing the Senate and Congress to any particular thing, with no more opportunity for discussion or consideration than we will have here this morning on a bill considered by unanimous consent.

It seems to me that it is unwise to take up a measure of this importance and of this significance by unanimous consent this morning, and upon a joint resolution that is only calculated to have reference to celebrating the birthday of Abraham Lincoln.

I have read the last section of the joint resolution, and I want to call the attention of Senators to it. The last section provides:

That we recommend action looking to the erection in the city of Washington of a monument which shall be worthy his great fame, his service to humanity and to his country, and fittingly commemorate the grandeur of character, the nobility of life, and the epoch-making career of Abra-

Recommend action by whom? Who are we recommending to take action in this matter? What are we going to do?

Mr. WETMORE. Mr. President, I will state that those words were amended so as to read "it is hereby recommended that action be taken," instead of saying "we recommend."

I may state that it was no idea of the committee or of the Senator who introduced the joint resolution to commit Congress to any particular proposition. The object was simply to call the attention of Congress to the fact that it would be well to have a memorial erected to Lincoln. The committee so understood it and reported it that way, but not with a view to commit Congress to any particular proposition. The suggestion of the Senator from Montana is perfectly in accordance with

Mr. BURKETT. Mr. President, I have not any objection, I will say, to the passage of the joint resolution so far as expressing the opinion of the Senate is concerned, that we favor at some time, in some way, somehow, at some place a suitable memorial to Abraham Lincoln, and this matter shall at some time be put into action. I think that would be very appropriate.

But I do object, as I started out to say, to adopting some plan here in the confusion that is in the Chamber this morning, and when many of us over here have not been able to understand anything that has been going on, and commit the Government to any particular kind of a memorial at this time.

If the last clause is intended for anything more than the Senator from Rhode Island has suggested, I certainly think the joint resolution ought to be laid over until it comes up on the calendar regularly, and we can have time for the discussion of it.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. Knox] introduced in this Congress Senate bill 7665, which authorizes the construction of a great memorial highway from the city of Washington to the battlefield of Gettysburg. His bill has not yet been reported from the committee, but it brings the whole subject before us in connection with the joint resolution that was reported this morning.

I think well of the proposition to make an avenue from here to Gettysburg, as has been suggested, and I think it most appropriate that there should be some suitable memorial in honor of Lincoln here in the District of Columbia, but it occurs to me, and it does to others in this part of the Chamber, that the two propositions might well go together.

Therefore I ask that the joint resolution may go over until to-morrow, in order that we may recast it and try to frame something that will enable us to make an appropriate memorial, including the highway.

Mr. KNOX. I ask the Senator from Ohio to withdraw his request that it may go over. I think the matter can be agreed upon in the form of an amendment which I propose to suggest to the joint resolution, if the Senator will withdraw the request.

Mr. FORAKER. Very well; I will withdraw the request with pleasure, if the Senator feels that we can save time by that means.

Mr. KNOX. I move to amend-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio withdraw his request?

the Senator from Pennsylvania, who is about to offer an amendment.

Mr. KNOX. I move to amend the joint resolution by adding, in line 9, after the word "Lincoln," at the end of the joint resolution, the words "in the nature of a great national highway from the city of Washington to Gettysburg, Pa."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Pennsylvania proposes an amendment, which will be stated.

The Secretary. At the end of the joint resolution insert: In the nature of a great national highway from the city of Washington to Gettysburg, Pa.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I am thoroughly in favor of the proposition for a great highway. I think no nobler monu-ment could be devised than such a highway running from the capital to one of the greatest battlefields of the war. President, I do not think that the amendment ought to be framed so as to exclude some other memorial to Lincoln here, and I am afraid, if I caught the wording correctly, that it would exclude the memorial. It might be most appropriate to place at the beginning of the highway a great arch or other monument, and I do not want an amendment adopted that would exclude the erection of a memorial in the city of Washington. The building of a highway of itself would not exclude it, of course, I think it is very desirable that the bill should permit both to be done, though I shall vote personally for the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President, I did not understand the Senator from Montana to say anything which could be construed into a discrimination against the city of Washington. He simply enlarges the scope of the resolution so that it may apply either to the city of Washington or the District of Columbia or adjoining territory. I understand it to be broad enough to cover not only the suggestion of the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. Wetmore] but the suggestion of the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. Knox]. And I want to say that I would not be in favor of the construction under federal authority of a memorial to the memory of Abraham Lincoln that did not have its base and starting point in the city of Washington. I think the language is broad enough to cover the object in view, which is a most worthy one.

If there is a Senator on this floor who is not interested in the beauty and the development of this city, I do not know who he is. Any plan of this character should start here, but if there is any disagreement among us as to the character of the memorial, there can be none upon the question of making Lincoln's birthday a legal holiday, and the resolution should pass.

Mr. DICK. Mr. President, the primary object of the resolution was to fittingly commemorate the one hundredth anniversary of the birth of Abraham Lincoln. The erection of a suitable memorial is a distinct proposition. As to the first, there seems to be no disagreement or difference of opinion. As to the second, there may be a great variety of views.

I have no objection to the language of the amendment offered by the Senator from Montana [Mr. Carter], which leaves it open, but I seriously object to committing Congress to any single proposition which may involve the real purpose of the joint resolution, namely, that on the 12th day of February we shall fittingly commemorate this great anniversary

Mr. SCOTT. I suggest to separate the joint resolution. Mr. DICK. I am willing that the joint resolution shall be separated, as suggested by the Senator from West Virginia. All that the joint resolution seeks to do is to recommend that suitable action be taken looking to some fitting memorial that shall be erected here or elsewhere. I hope, however, that no action will be taken that will conflict with the real purpose of the resolution itself, to which universal attention has been invited by the press of the country, by resolutions from numerous organizations, and by a message from the President. To that end I invite the attention of the Senate and urge that no unusual or hurtful delay may be occasioned by adding amendments now which may in any way interfere with its speedy passage.

Mr. CARTER. Inasmuch as there does not seem to be any objection to the amendment I had the honor to offer, I ask that it be submitted to the Senate.

For information, I should like a state-Mr. NEWLANDS. ment as to the amendments that are pending to the joint resolution.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will report the pending amendment.

Mr. LODGE. Before the amendment— Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, I rise to a point of order. The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Texas will state his point of order.

Mr. CULBERSON. I desire to know if unanimous consent Mr FORAKER. I withdraw my request until I have heard has yet been given for the consideration of the joint resolution.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Unanimous consent was given. Mr. CULBERSON. I understood the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BURKETT] to object.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Some time after the consent was given the Senator from Nebraska inquired if the joint resolution was being considered by unanimous consent.

Mr. LODGE. I want to suggest a modification of the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. Knox], and that is to use the words, "memorial of Lincoln, which shall include the building of a highway." I want to make it clear that we do not exclude by the highway the construction of a memorial in Washington.

Mr. KNOX. I accept that.
The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Montana is first in order, and that amendment will be stated for the information of the Senate.

Mr. LODGE. I beg pardon. Mr. BURKETT. I rise to a point of order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator will state his point of

Mr. BURKETT. I rose a while ago; I was watching this matter; I understood unanimous consent had been asked. We could not hear over here how far along it had gotten. When I rose I asked if the joint resolution was pending by unanimous consent. I understood the Vice-President to say that it was. My observations were made with that understanding. I think those who heard me will bear me out that I had made the observation that if the consideration of this resolution was to be continued, and it was to be amended so as to become objectionable on the question of what kind of memorial we were going to have, I should want to object to it, and that objection ought to be made to it. I understood at the time that unanimous consent had not been given.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair put the request for unanimous consent to the Senate, and announced that no objection was made.

Mr. BURKETT. I will say to the Chair that I was trying to hear; that I was listening very closely for that request to be made, and therefore I asked that question.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair thought he made the statement distinctly.

Mr. BURKETT. I think it was the fault of the confusion in the Chamber and not of the Chair.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Nebraska will please suspend. The Senate will be in order. Senators will cease audible conversation. The Senator from Nebraska will proceed.

Mr. BURKETT. In view of the fact, then, Mr. President, that unanimous consent has been given and that it is apparent that not only this joint resolution but a great many bills that are not before us properly are going to be brought up for consideration, I ask the Senator in charge of this joint resolution if he would not be willing that it should go over, for it is apparent, by the advantage this joint resolution has obtained, that some other legislation, to which a great many would object to giving unanimous consent, is going to be attached to it in the form of amendments. It seems to me but fair, therefore, that the joint resolution should go over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair is inclined to think that in view of the circumstances under which unanimous consent was given, and in view of the obvious misunderstanding, it would be but fair that the Senator should have the right to object now, and that the joint resolution should go over.

Mr. DICK. Mr. President— Mr. SCOTT. Then let us understand that the Senator from Nebraska objects to the consideration of paying proper tribute to the memory of President Lincoln.

Mr. DICK. Mr. President—
Mr. BURKETT. Mr. President, let me say—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Ohio [Mr, Dick] has the floor. Does he yield to the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BURKETT 1

Mr. DICK. Do I understand-

Mr. NEWLANDS. I thought I had the floor, Mr. President, and I yielded to the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Lodge].

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Nevada is correct. Does he yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. NEWLANDS. I do.

Mr. DICK. I addressed the Chair, Mr. President, for the purpose of inquiring if the Senator from Nebraska objected to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. BURKETT. Mr. President, I will answer the Senator. I think I ought to do so, in view of the gratuitous remark the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. Scorr] has thrown in here, proper, for he has been here a good many more years than I have.

The "Senator from Nebraska" does not object to the consideration of this joint resolution, but the "Senator from Nebraska" does object to taking advantage of the right that this joint resolution may have and loading it up with other legisla-tion to which the "Senator from Nebraska" does object. The "Senator from Nebraska" does not object to paying this tribute and to passing this joint resolution; he thinks it is very proper; but he does object to having this joint resolution considered with a view of loading it up with other legislation that is objectionable.

There may be other Senators who favor the bill to construct a road to Gettysburg. A majority of the Senate will determine that. We shall have that opportunity when the bill shall come up for consideration. That is well and proper, and the "Senator from Nebraska" has nothing more to say as to that; but he does not think it is proper to take advantage of this joint resolution, popular as it is and appropriate as it is, and load it up with some other things that a good many Senators do have objection to, and which, to say the least, are questionable.

Mr. LODGE. On the point of order which has just been raised I desire to say that it is very clear that whenever this joint resolution comes up, it will be germane to it to add an amendment for a memorial. The Senator from Nebraska can not rule out amendments that he does not like. ments must come up in connection with the joint resolution if they are germane, and, of course, it will be open to the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. WETMORE] to move to take the joint resolution up to-morrow at any time.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President—
Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I yield to the Senator from South Caro-

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, I rise simply for the purpose of suggesting that it would be a misfortune and it would be a reflection upon the Senate if we could not agree upon the general purpose of this joint resolution, which is to honor with appropriate ceremonial the memory of Lincoln; and surely this squabble as to whether it shall be a highway to Gettysburg or a memorial which we shall build, ought not to militate against the prompt passage by unanimous consent of the other part of the joint resolution. I hope those who have been the means of bringing in this moot question in regard to the highway will not press that feature if it is objectionable to some northern Senators here and they do not feel that they should commit themselves to the proposition.

Mr. CARTER. If the Senator from Nevada will permit

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Certainly.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, I beg to state to the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] and to the Senate that the amendment I proposed had for its object leaving the question of the form of the memorial open for future consideration. The language in the resolution in line 15 providing for the erection of a monument in the city of Washington, I ask to amend by inserting the words "the construction of a suitable memorial," leaving out the word "monument" and not incorporating the word "highway." Thus Congress would not be in any manner committed to the form of the memorial that might hereafter be considered.

There was no intention on my part to discriminate against the District of Columbia. My main purpose was to preserve to Congress the untrammeled right, without terms or recommendation outstanding to interfere, to pursue such course as might be deemed proper in reference to the construction of this memorial at some future time.

Mr. McLAURIN. Mr. President—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. NEWLANDS. I yield to the Senator from Mississippi. Mr. McLAURIN. Mr. President, if there is to be built a public road from the city of Washington as a memorial to Mr. Lincoln, I suggest that, inasmuch as it is something like 50 miles, as I believe it is stated, to Gettysburg and only about 30 miles from here to Manassas, where the first great battle of the war was fought-a battle which I believe was attended by a great many Members of Congress, or those who were Members of Congress at the time—it would be a great deal more apwhich was very certainly uncalled for, and I will not say im- propriate to build a road from here to that place. It might have been a very valuable road had it been built at that time. I suggest that Manassas be substituted for Gettysburg.

Mr. WETMORE. Mr. President, the amendment proposed by the Senator from Montana [Mr. CARTER] is perfectly agreeable to the committee. That amendment does not commit Congress to any particular project. It seems to me that it would be most unfortunate if to-day we did commit ourselves to any project. This resolution simply calls the attention of the Congress of the United States to the suitability of a memorial to Lincoln without indicating what that memorial shall be or where it shall be

I would therefore suggest that all these different projects can be considered hereafter when the time comes, but that today we all harmonize and unite in merely stating that such a memorial shall somewhere be erected to the memory of Lincoln.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I should like now the information for which I asked in the first instance, as to the amendments to this joint resolution which are now pending.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendments; but, first, the Chair will ask, Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. DIXON. Mr. President, as stated by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. Burkett], no one in this part of the Chamber is aware of what the joint resolution under consideration may be, except from the general statements made on the floor. think there is certainly no one over here who is not in favor of something of this kind; but, at least, let the joint resolution be printed and let it go on the calendar until to-morrow, so that we may have some intelligent conception of what these various amendments may be and to what they may refer.

placed on the desks of Senators, so that we may at least know what is under consideration.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Under the circumstances, Chair will decide that upon objection the joint resolution shall think the joint resolution at least ought to be printed and

IMPROVEMENT OF COLUMBIA RIVER, WASHINGTON.

Mr. SIMMONS. I am directed by the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred Senate concurrent resolution No. 73, to report it without amendment, and I call the attention of the Senator from Washington [Mr. Piles] to it.

Mr. PILES. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the concurrent resolution.

go to the calendar.

The concurrent resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to cause a survey and estimate to be made of the Columbia River between Wenatchee and the mouth of the Snake River in the State of Washington, with a view of making such improvements as may be deemed necessary, in order to provide for navigation between the upper and lower

IMPROVEMENT OF MATTAPONI RIVER, VIRGINIA.

Mr. MARTIN. I am directed by the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred Senate concurrent resolution No. 75, to report it without amendment. I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring). That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause an examination and survey to be made and submit estimates for the following improvements in the Mattaponi River, Virginia:

For a channel 200 feet wide and 14 feet deep from York River to the landing one-half mile above the bridge at Walkerton.

For a channel 100 feet wide and 7 feet deep from the above-mentioned landing to Aulette.

For a channel 100 feet wide and 7 feet deep from the above-mentioned landing to Ayletts.

For a channel 60 feet wide and 5 feet deep from Ayletts to Dunkirk.

For a channel 7 feet deep across the Middle Ground, connecting the Mattaponi and Pamunkey channels, just off West Point.

For a suitable turning basin at Ayletts.

For the straightening and cutting off certain bends and points of land projecting into the river at several points between Walkerton and Ayletts.

For a thorough snagging and removal of logs from the river between Walkerton and Dunkirk, and the clearing of the river banks of all trees, stumps, etc., which make navigation dangerous at times of extra high tides or freshets in the river.

JOHN H. LAYNE.

Mr. TALIAFERRO. I am directed by the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 15098) to correct the military record of John H. Layne, to report it favorably without amendment, and I submit a report (No. 810) I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It directs the Secretary of War to correct the military record of John H. Layne, late private in Company G, Nineteenth Regiment U. S. Infantry, war with Spain, who was injured at Ponce, P. R., while volunteering to help save government stores which were about to be washed away by a rapidly rising stream, and to have his discharge read: "Discharged by reason of injuries incurred in line of duty," instead of "Discharged by favor."

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FISH-CULTURAL STATIONS ON PUGET SOUND.

Mr. BOURNF. I am directed by the Committee on Fisheries, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 15452) to establish two or more fish-cultural stations on Puget Sound, to report it favorably with an amendment. I call the attention of the Senator from Washington [Mr. Piles] to this bill.

Mr. PILES. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill. It was passed last winter by the House of Representatives, and there is grave necessity that it should be passed by the Senate. It is a very short bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Washington for the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. WARREN. I do not want to object to the ordinary consideration of these matters, and I will not object to this bill, but I shall feel under the necessity of objecting to the consideration of any other bills this morning until we can get up the appropriation bill.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President, I hope the Senator from Wyoming will not make that statement now. I desire to report a very simple little joint resolution of interest to the Senator from Kansas [Mr. Curtis], which he may desire to have considered.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I have myself refrained from asking for the consideration of bills that are very important for the reason that every Senator has some bill here in which he is especially interested, and I am afraid that the day may be consumed in their consideration. I will ask to what measure does the Senator from Michigan especially refer?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. A joint resolution, local to Kansas, which I desire to report from the Committee on Commerce as soon as I can get the opportunity.

Mr. WARREN. I will not object.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill reported by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. BOURNE]?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 15452) to establish two or more fish-cultural stations on Puget Sound.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Fisheries with an amendment on page 1, line 5, after the words "Puget Sound" to insert "or its tributaries in the," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of Commerce and Labor be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to establish two or more fish-cultural stations on Puget Sound or its tributaries, in the State of Washington, for the propagation of salmon and other food fishes, and to make the necessary surveys, and purchase sites, construct ponds and buildings, construct, purchase, and hire boats and equipments, and employ such assistance as may be required for the construction and operation of such fish-cultural stations at suitable points to be selected by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, and the number of such stations to be determined by him, and for said purpose the sum of $50,000 is hereby authorized to be appropriated.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

HARBOR LINES IN THE KANSAS RIVER.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I am directed by the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the joint resolution (S. R. 115) authorizing the Secretary of War to establish harbor lines in the Kansas River, at Kansas City, Kans., to report it favorably without amendment, and I submit a report (No. 811) thereon. I call the attention of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS] to the joint resolution.

Mr. CURTIS. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution which has just been reported.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution. It authorizes the Secretary of War to fix and establish pierhead and bulkhead lines, either or both, in the Kansas River at Kansas City, Kans., beyond which no piers, wharves, bulkheads, or other works shall be extended or deposits made, except under such regulations as shall be prescribed from time to time by the Secretary of War.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

IMPROVEMENT OF SWINOMISH SLOUGH, WASHINGTON.

Mr. PILES. I am directed by the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred Senate concurrent resolution No. 72, to report it favorably without amendment. I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

There being no objection, the concurrent resolution was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to cause a survey and estimate to be made of the Swinomish Slough, Washington, with a view to such extensions and modifications of the project for the improvement of the same as may be necessary in the interests of particular to the same as may be necessary in the interests of

IMPROVEMENT OF SAMAMISH RIVER, WASHINGTON.

Mr. PILES. I am directed by the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred Senate concurrent resolution No. 71, to report it without amendment. I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

There being no objection, the concurrent resolution was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to cause a survey and estimate to be made of the Samamish River, Washington, with a view of clearing and restoring said river to navigation.

Mr. PERKINS submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $350,000 to continue the improvement of the channel at Mare Island Navy-Yard, Cal., intended to be proposed by him to the naval appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs and ordered to be printed.

Mr. DICK submitted an amendment proposing to use the crypt and window spaces of the United States Naval Academy chapel as memorials to United States naval officers who have successfully commanded a fleet or squadron in battle, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the naval appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs and ordered to be printed.

Mr. WARNER submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $25,000 to increase the limit of cost for the public building at Maryville, Mo., intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. PILES submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $763,000 for improvements at the navy-yard, Puget Sound, Washington, intended to be proposed by him to the naval appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs and ordered to be printed.

PENSIONS AND INCREASE OF PENSIONS.

Mr. SCOTT (by request) submitted an amendment intended Mr. CURTIS introduced a bill (S. 8682) granting an increase to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 8629) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the civil war and to certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors, which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS-CYPRIAN T. JENKINS.

On motion of Mr. Taliaferro it was Ordered. That there may be withdrawn from the files of the Senate all the papers relative to the bill S. 1398, Sixtleth Congress, first session, for the relief of Cyprian T. Jenkins, there having been no adverse report thereon.

IMPROVEMENT OF APALACHICOLA RIVER AND ST. ANDREW BAY, FLORIDA.

Mr. MILTON submitted the following concurrent resolution (S. C. Res. 76) which was referred to the Committee on Com-

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause a survey to be made of the most feasible and practical way of connecting the waters of Apalachicola River and St. Andrew Bay, in the State of Florida, with a view to determining the advantage, best location, and probable cost of a canal connecting said waters, and to submit a plan and estimate for such improvement.

CLAIMS AGAINST CHOCTAWS AND CHICKASAWS.

Mr. TELLER submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 258), which was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to.

which was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to.

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, directed to transmit to the Senate the report of J. W. Howell, an assistant attorney in the office of the Assistant Attorney-General for the Department of the Interior, covering the investigation conducted by him by order of the President of the United States or the Secretary of the Interior during the months of November and December, 1908, of the claims of certain persons to share in the common property of the Choctaws and Chickasaws; and the said Secretary is further directed to transmit with said report all papers filed with the department which formed the basis of said investigation, as well as all data, memoranda, photographs, and all other evidence of every kind and description pertaining or appertaining to said investigation and secured by said J. W. Howell or any other officer or agent of the department connected with said investigation and of which any notation was made.

AMERICAN SUGAR REFINING COMPANY.

Mr. CULBERSON. I offer the resolution which I send to the desk, and I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution (S. Res. 259), as follows:

Resolved, That the Attorney-General be, and he is hereby, directed to send to the Senate copies of all correspondence in the Department of Justice relating to an alleged violation of the act of July 2, 1890, by the American Sugar Refining Company in connection with an alleged loan by that company to one Segal, in which was pledged as security therefor a majority of the capital stock of the Pennsylvania Sugar Refining Company with voting power thereon, and under which it is alleged an agreement was entered into that the Pennsylvania Sugar Refining Company should not engage in business.

The VICE-PRESIDENT Let there objection to the property of the pennsylvania Sugar Refining Company should not engage in business.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. KEAN. Let the resolution go over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection being made, the resolution will lie over.

JOSEPH F. RITCHERDSON.

I ask unanimous consent for the immedi-Mr. McCREARY. ate consideration of the bill (S. 4116) authorizing the Secretary of War to place the name of Joseph F. Ritcherdson on the rolls of Company C, One hundred and twenty-second Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and issue him an honorable discharge. will state that a precisely similar bill passed the Senate at the

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I am sorry to have to object, but I gave notice a little while ago that I should feel compelled to call up the legislative appropriation bill. Therefore I shall have to object.

Mr. McCREARY. I hope the Senator will not object to this bill. I did not hear him give the notice to which he refers.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is made.

USE OF CARRIAGES BY OFFICIALS,

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following resolution (S. Res. 257), submitted by Mr. FLINT on the 20th

Resolved, That the Committee on Appropriations be, and they are hereby, directed to ascertain and report to the Senate whether any officers of the Government, including the army and navy, are devoting to their personal or private use any carriages, automobiles, or other vehicles which are the property of or are provided by the Government.

Mr. WARREN. I do not see the Senator from California in his seat at this moment, and I suggest that the resolution lie over without prejudice.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. M. C. Latta, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had approved and signed the following acts:

On January 21:

S. 213. An act for the relief of S. R. Green;

S. 879. An act for the relief of John S. Higgins, paymaster, United States Navy;

S. 1751. An act to reimburse Anna B. Moore, late postmaster at Rhyolite, Nev., for money expended for clerical assistance;

S. 2253. An act for the relief of Theodore F. Northrop;

S. 3848. An act for the relief of James A. Russell; S. 5388. An act for the relief of Benjamin C. Welch;

S. 8143. An act granting to the Chicago and Northwestern Railway Company a right to change the location of its right of way across the Niobrara Military Reservation;
S. 4632. An act for the relief of the Davison Chemical Company, of Baltimore, Md.; and S. 6136. An act authorizing the Secretary of War to grant a revocable license to certain lands to Boise, Idaho.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WARREN. I ask the Senate to resume the consideration of the legislative appropriation bill.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 23464) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1910, and for other purposes.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will report the pending amendment.

Mr. WARREN. The pending amendments are on pages 167 and 168, commencing in line 13.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. There is pending an amendment to the amendment, which the Secretary will state.

The Secretary. On page 167, line 13, it is proposed to strike out "ten" and insert "eight," so as to read:

Circuit courts: For 29 circuit judges, at $8,000 each.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That is the amendment proposed by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. Borah]. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. BORAH. I desire to ask the Senator in charge of the bill a question with reference to the expenses and the allowances now made to take care of the expenses.

Mr. WARREN. I stated yesterday the law regarding the expenses, and I have in my hand, which has just come from the Treasury Department, a statement for the last fiscal year of the expenses paid by the Government for each and every one of the circuit and district judges.

The way the bill stands, it would leave the matter of expenses exactly as the present law provides. They would have the salary we may accord them, and it would simply reimburse them for what they have paid out, provided it did not exceed $10 in any one day. It is impossible for them to get a penny legally except where they have paid it out in traveling expenses away from home, and it is impossible for them always to get as much as they pay out, because of the limit of $10 per day. Perhaps the Senator would like to have the list read.

Mr. BORAH. I do not know that I care to have it read. The law now provides a means by which they have an expense account up to $10 a day.

I believe there was a call for the yeas and nays on this question.

Mr. WARREN. Does the Senator wish to move nine thousand or eight thousand?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment proposes to strike out "ten" and insert "eight."

Mr. WARREN. Very well. I hope the amendment will be

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment, on which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. SCOTT. The change is what? Will the Secretary again state the amendment?

The Secretary. On page 167, line 13, it is proposed to amend the committee amendment by striking out "ten" and inserting 'eight," so as to read:

For 29 circuit judges, at $8,000 each.

Mr. WARREN. I suggest the absence of a quorum. The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Wyoming suggests the absence of a quorum. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Bacon Bailey Bankhead Beveridge	Cullom Curtis Davis	Gary Guggenheim Hale	Overman Page Paynter
Borah	Depew Dick	Hemenway Johnston	Penrose Perkins
Bourne Brandegee	Dillingham Dixon	Kean Kittredge	Rayner
Brown	du Pont	Knox	Simmons
Bulkeley Burkett	Flint Foraker	La Follette Lodge	Smith, Md. Stephenson
Burnham	Foster	Long	Tallaferro
Burrows Carter	Frazier Frye	McCreary McEnery	Teller Tillman
Clapp	Fulton	McLaurin	Warner
Crane Culberson	Gallinger Gamble	Martin Milton	Warren Wetmore

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Sixty-four Senators have answered to their names. A quorum of the Senate is present.

Mr. WARREN. I ask that the question be stated.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will again state the amendment to the amendment.

The Secretary. On page 167, line 13, the amendment of the committee proposes to strike out "seven" and insert "ten." It is now proposed to strike out "ten" and insert "eight;" so as to read:

For 29 circuit judges at $8,000 each.

Mr. BACON. I understand-and I will ask the Senator from Wyoming if I am correct—that if the salary is fixed at $8,000, the judges will in addition to that get the per diem of $10 a day for expenses when away from their homes.

Mr. WARREN. As I have already stated, it does not interfere with the present law. It is simply a vote upon the question of the raise of salary.

Mr. BACON. Then I am correct in that statement?

Mr. WARREN. They get their reimbursement of expenses when away from home.

Mr. BACON. I understand.
Mr. WARREN. Not exceeding $10 a day.
Mr. TELLER. They get no allowance when at home, but when away they get the expenses absolutely incurred, not exceeding $10 a day.

Mr. BACON. I understand that.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll on the question of agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. WARREN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. Money], He is not present at this moment. I transfer the pair with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. Money] to the Senator from New York [Mr. Platt], and I will vote. I vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. KEAN. My colleague [Mr. Briggs] is necessarily absent. If he were present, he would vote "nay." He is paired with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. TAYLOR].

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming, I have a general pair with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE]. I transfer the pair for this vote and for the day to the Senator from Washington [Mr. ANKENY]. I vote "nay."

Mr. BAILEY (after having voted in the affirmative). I am paired with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. Elkins]; and much as I should like to permit my vote to stand, I feel compelled, in his absence, to withdraw it.

Mr. GAMBLE. I desire to inquire if the Senator from Nevada [Mr. Newlands] has voted? I am paired with that Senator. The VICE-PRESIDENT. He has not voted.

Mr. GAMBLE. I transfer my pair to the junior Senator from Nevada [Mr. Nixon] and will allow my vote to stand.

Mr. BAILEY. I am advised that the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. Gore] is absent and without a pair. I transfer my pair with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. Elkins] to the Sen ator from Oklahoma [Mr. Gore] and will let my vote stand.

The result was announced—yeas 31, nays 38, as follows:

So Mr. Borah's amendment to the amendment was rejected. The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question recurs on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next passed-over amendment was, on page 167, line 23, to strike out "six" and insert "eight;" and in line 25, before the word "thousand," to strike out "five hundred and four" and insert "six hundred and seventy-two," so as to read:

District courts: For salaries of the 84 district judges of the United States, at $8,000 each, $672,000.

Mr. FORAKER. I move to strike out "eight" and insert "nine." I want to say a word in behalf of the amendment.

Every practitioner in the courts of the United States knows that the district judges do as much work as the circuit judges. They really do more. The district judges sit as circuit judges. The circuit judges never sit as district judges. The living The living expenses are the same. It seems to me there ought not to be any more than a nominal difference between them. I know that the district judge in the district in which I live is one of the hardest working judges on the bench anywhere in the country, and I think that is true throughout the country.

Mr. BACON. I should like to ask the Senator from Ohio a question.

Mr. FORAKER. The difference at this time is but a thousand dollars, and I do not believe we ought to make it greater than that; and having determined that the salary of the circuit judges shall be $10,000, the salary of the district judges should not be less than $9,000.

Mr. BACON. I should like to ask the Senator a question. I am particular to ask him the question, because there is no harder working Member of the Senate, as I happen to know personally, than the Senator from Ohio. Does he think there is any district judge who does more labor than does the Sena-

Mr. FORAKER. I think not; but at the same time I have practically half the year that I can devote to my own private business, which the district judge does not have. The district judge and the circuit judge are of necessity denied our opportunity to pay attention to private affairs.

Mr. BACON. I want to say to the Senator from Ohio that in having half the year for his private business he has very much more than I have. I give my entire time, except a small time devoted to vacation, to my official duties and to nothing else.

Mr. FORAKER. I am sure the Senator from Georgia does work all the time about his business as a Senator. I can return the compliment he has paid me. I do not know any Member in this body who works more steadily and industriously than does the Senator from Georgia. I have no doubt that, as he says, he devotes practically all of his time to his official duties. With me it is somewhat different. I have, as a matter of necessity, to devote part of my time to my own affairs.

Mr. BAILEY. I desire to suggest to the Senator from Ohio that, while there is a difference between him and the district judge, in that the Senator has a part of his time which he may devote to his personal affairs and the judge has not, there is also this other difference, that the judge does not need to do that because the Federal Government not only pays him his salary while he is at work, but it continues it after he has retired, and that salary follows him to the grave. The salary of a district judge amounts to a fixed and permanent annuity. Therefore he has no reason to be looking about his private affairs.

Mr. FORAKER. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. BAILEY. Certainly.

Mr. FORAKER. Is there any more need for a circuit judge having $10,000 than there is for a district judge having $9,000? Mr. BAILEY. There is not, and I am not so sure that there is not more logic in the Senator's motion than there is in many of these increases. I will ask the Senator from Ohio what his State pays the judges of its highest court?

Mr. FORAKER. The salaries are less than $10,000; I think $6,000 or $7,000, possibly $8,000 in some of the large cities. I am not sure about it. I did know at one time, when I had the honor to sit on the bench. I knew what the salary was, but that was many years ago. We were then paid $5,000 a year. The salary was immediately after that raised to $6,000, and I am not sure but that there has been an increase of late years in the salaries of the judges in the large cities of the State. I am sorry I can not give the Senator better information.

Mr. BAILEY. The Senator has supplied sufficient informa-on. I simply asked the question for the purpose of calling attention to the fact that we sit here as the Senators from the various States, and we are voting to give the trial judges of the United States Government larger salaries than our States pay the appellate judges in the several States which we repre-

Mr. KEAN. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. BAILEY. Certainly.

Mr. KEAN. I should like to say to the Senator from Texas that that does not apply to the State of New Jersey.

Mr. BAILEY. I know it is not the universal rule, but, Mr. President, the fact is that the States which have the highest salaries frequently have the poorest judges.

Mr. KEAN. That is not the case in New Jersey. Mr. BAILEY. I do not say that it is true of New Jersey.

Mr. KEAN. It can not be said of New Jersey. Mr. BAILEY. I do not say it is true of New Jersey, but I do say that there was a time in the history of this Republic when the chancery reports of New Jersey compared favorably with any ever delivered from the bench.

Mr. KEAN. And I think they do to-day.

Mr. BAILEY. Yet those earlier chancellors did not receive the $10,000 which their successors receive to-day. The greatest courts in this Union have not been those in which the judges have received the highest salaries; and it is a matter of common experience among lawyers that that State to-day which pays the highest salaries to its judges-I mean trial and appellate judges-furnishes reports upon which you can find something on both sides of almost every question which is raised. I do not think the size of the salary will determine the wisdom of a judge.

But, however that may be, I can not comprehend how we can feel as Senators that we ought to pay the trial judges of the Federal Government higher salaries than we pay the highest judges in our several States. Either we pay these too much or else we pay these too little. It will not do to say we pay them too little, because we have commanded in our several States men of the greatest ability and of the highest character who are glad to write their names imperishably in the jurisprudence of their States by serving as chief or supreme judges.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. BAILEY. I do.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. If I may be permitted to make a suggestion to the Senator from Texas, I will state that the reason which underlies the difference in the legislation is that the men who make the salaries of the judges of our appellate courts in the various States of the Union are considerably nearer to the taxpayers than we are.

Mr. BAILEY. I am afraid, Mr. President, that is the full and perfect explanation. So much more is the pity. I do not think we ought to be so free with the people's money because we are so far from the people's power. I do not assert that Senators here would be afraid to vote this way if they were in the legislatures of their several States instead of the Senate of the United States, but in this atmosphere we become infected with the idea that salaries ought to be large because entertainments ought to be brilliant and numerous. That may be the explanation of all these increases.

Mr. WARREN. Does the Senator from Texas apply that to the district judges throughout the United States?

Mr. BAILEY. Oh, no; but having set the example of giving large salaries to important officials, of course it follows on down, and it will include everybody of importance except the House and the Senate. The House and the Senate are a little sensitive about doing anything for themselves. Consequently they are perfectly willing to leave themselves underpaid, if it be true that these judges are entitled to receive what they are given by this bill.

Mr. WARREN. If the Senator will permit me-

Mr. BAILEY. If the Senator will allow me, there is not a circuit judge of the United States who would not be glad to leave the bench to take a seat in the Senate.

Mr. WARREN. For the honor.
Mr. BAILEY. For the honor, yes; and for the honor of a position on the bench they ought to be satisfied when they have been given sufficient to live upon in decency.

Mr. WARREN. Will the Senator allow me to make a suggestion right there?

Mr. BAILEY. Certainly. Mr. WARREN. I think the Senator has not considered, or, if he has, I should like to have his opinion on the fact, that the state supreme judges usually live at the capital. They have no traveling expenses. The district judges in many States have several hundred dollars, and sometimes more than a thousand dollars, of traveling expenses in a year, for which there is no reimbursement. So district judges in a State where the courts are held at points which are not near each other have large traveling and away-from-home expenses. Perhaps the Senator heard me say yesterday that we undertook last year to cover it, and we put a provision into the sundry civil appropriation bill allowing the district judges not exceeding $6 a day for such expenses, but it went out in conference. While they now receive the pay if they go on circuit outside their district, they do not receive any reimbursement for any of their expenses for travel within their districts.

Mr. BAILEY. Certainly not.
Mr. WARREN. And there is where they differ from the state

I know of district judges in the State equal to the district judges of the federal bench who hold court eleven months in the year, having but one month's vacation, who are away from their homes eight-tenths of their time, and who pay every dollar of their expenses when away; and they never have the privilege of drawing $10 when transferred to another district. That is true, I have no doubt, in Wyoming. I know that it is true in Texas; and without intending to make any invidious comparison, I may say that the federal judges in Texas are the equal of federal judges elsewhere; and yet they are in no wise superior, either in intellect or in character, to many of the men who serve us upon the district bench of our State. those district judges receive one-half of what the federal judges receive. They are away from home more than the federal judges, and work harder when they are at home than the federal judges do.

Now, I want to say to the Senator from Ohio, if it is true that the federal judges are overworked, the remedy is not an increase in pay.
Mr. MARTIN rose.

Mr. BAILEY. The remedy is a reduction in labor, and instead of increasing the pay let us appoint more judges, so that they can do less work and, therefore, better work. I yield to the Senator from Virginia. Mr. MARTIN. With the permission of the Senator from Texas, I desire to say that in my State the supreme court judges are rarely at home. They have to hold court in three separate and distinct places, so that no one of them is ever at home any considerable part of the year; and the salary is $4,500.

Mr. WARREN. Let me ask the Senator if the State does not provide for their contingent expenses. Most States do.

Mr. MARTIN. They do not in my State.
Mr. WARREN. They provide nothing?

Mr. MARTIN. Nothing.

Mr. BAILEY. In many of the States what the Senator from Virginia says is true. It is true in Tennessee. In our State our supreme court is located at the seat of government, but it is not true that all the judges live there. They have retained their several residences and make their homes there only during their incumbency. But we are one of the few States in the Union which maintains a separate court of criminal appeals, and that court holds sessions at three places. No provision is made for their traveling or other expenses, and their salaries are not equal to the present salaries of the federal district judges.

Mr. President, I have detained the Senate on this question until, I take it, the sound of my voice is not very agreeable. I intend to consume no further time, but I protest in the name of your State and mine against the proposition to give a trial judge of the Federal Government a higher salary than the judges of our highest state courts receive.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. President, I want to detain the Senate only a moment. I have here a statement sent to me by a district judge. He makes an estimate of his expenses. He says that to one manservant he pays $30 a month. I am sure all will admit that that is very reasonable. To a cook he pays $20, and to one housemaid $10. For horse keeping he pays $10 a month. For rent of house he pays $100 a month. Then for provisions, and so forth. He pays on $20,000 of life insurance $800, and on fire insurance for his library and other household fixtures he pays $400. He says that for four months of the year he is out of his district holding court, from home, his expenses amounting to $6 a day. He says there ought to be some new law, and certainly Senators here who are lawyers will not dispute that. He estimates a total of $5,460, leaving about $500 with which to educate his children.

Mr. BAILEY. He has left out his laundry bill, too. Mr. SCOTT. The Senator will notice that I quoted the fact that he had a maid at $10 a month, who probably attends to that. If that statement is at all accurate, these judges certainly ought to have their salaries increased.

Mr. PILES. Mr. President, no district judge in my State has referred to an increase of his salary. The bar of the State have requested me to support this measure. The salary, as I now recall it, which they petitioned me to support is $10,000 for the circuit judges and $9,000 for the district judges.

The Chamber of Commerce of the City of Seattle, one of the greatest commercial cities of the State has passed resolutions favoring this increase. The Chamber of Commerce of the City of Spokane, which is situated in the eastern part of the State, in the great agricultural part of the State, has petitioned me to support the increase. They contend, as the lawyers have con-tended in different parts of the State, that the increase is nothing more than fair to the federal judges.

I may say that the legislature of the State of Washington two years ago increased the salary of the supreme judges of that State to $6,000, and as we grow and increase in population and wealth it will in all probability increase the salary of the supreme judges of the State.

I feel from the letters and resolutions which I have received that a large portion, at least, of the people of the State of Washington favors the increase now under consideration.

I may say with respect to the district judges in the State of Washington that there is no man on the federal bench there who could not earn from $15,000 to $25,000 a year if he were practicing law. I believe that if the district judge in the city of Seattle were to retire to-day from the bench he could, in view of his well-known ability and the present opportunities in that section of the country, earn the gross sum of $50,000 a year in the practice of the law.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. PILES. Certainly.

Mr. BORAH. I wish to ask the Senator from Washington if that is true why does not the judge retire from the bench and earn $50,000, if it is simply a question of salary?

Mr. PILES. I said at the outset that no judge in my State had requested me to support an increase of his salary.

Mr. BORAH. But that discloses the fact that we can not compensate these men in dollars and cents.

Mr. PILES. I agree with the Senator there thoroughly. am not speaking on the question whether the judge should resign. Will the Senator say that he, himself, can not earn three times the salary he receives from the Government if he would resign from the Senate and resume the practice of the law?

Mr. BORAH. I am not resigning.

Mr. PILES. Is there any lawyer in this body who came from the Pacific coast (and I speak of that simply because it is a new country, and the practice of the law offers greater opportunities than in some sections) who could not earn from two to three times more than the salary he receives as a Member of this body?

Mr. BAILEY. Does the Senator want an answer to that? Mr. PILES. I asked the question. Does anyone deny it?

I say to the Senator that I utterly deny it. I say that Daniel Webster, in the height of his powers, could not have earned $22,500 in many of the communities where great Senators live. It is not merely a man's ability which determines his income at the law, but it is determined almost en-tirely by the character of the practice where the lawyer resides.

Mr. PILES. I spoke of the Pacific coast. Mr. BAILEY. Let me say to the Senator from Washington, I am amazed that any man who can earn $50,000 a year at the bar would accept the office of a district judge, not merely because of the difference in money between the income of the lawyer and the salary of the judge, but it must be a leader of the bar who can earn $50,000 a year, and the leader of any bar occupies a more distinguished position than a district judge.

Mr. PILES. I may say to the Senator from Texas that the district judge in the city of Seattle always was a leader of the bar; and while I do not care to be personal, I may say that he is to-day one of the most distinguished lawyers in this country, and he would adorn the Supreme Bench of the United States.

Mr. BAILEY. That is probably what he is looking to. Mr. PILES. I should be very much gratified to see him appointed to the Supreme Bench.

In view of the resolutions which I have received from the lawyers and the commercial bodies of the State of Washington, I feel that the people of that State favor the increases provided for in this bill in so far as it relates to the judges of the circuit and district courts, and I shall give them my support.

Mr. RAYNER. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The Secretary. A bill (S. 6484) to establish postal savings banks for depositing savings at interest, with the security of the Government for repayment thereof, and for other purposes.

Mr. NELSON. I ask that the bill be temporarily laid aside. The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Minnesota asks that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside. Without objection, it is so ordered. The Senator from Maryland will proceed.

Mr. RAYNER. Mr. President, I am in favor of this increase, and I am in favor of the increase along the whole line of judi cial appointments. Of course, we are getting to be more liberal in our expenditures; I will admit that; and it may be a lamentable condition that we have reached; but we must meet existing Things that were luxuries years ago are necessities now. My own opinion is that the judges upon the federal circuits and the judges on the state courts are about the worst underpaid men in any office, either in the State or in the Nation.

We are increasing things all along the line. It has only been a few weeks ago that the Smithsonian Institution appropriated $25,000 to a great faunal naturalist who is about to proceed to the jungles and forests of a distant continent in search for animals that, so far as I have been able to discover, have never had any existence in all the periods of geologic time. This is not exactly germane to the subject-I will get to the subject in a minute.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President—
The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Gallinger in the chair). Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. RAYNER. Yes; I will yield if it is a pertinent question. Mr. BORAH. I want to know if the Senator is a naturalist? Mr. RAYNER. I am not a game butcher; but I am a sort of zoologist and naturalist both. I know something about zoology, and I know that there never has been any such thing on the face of this earth as a white rhinoceros or an orang-outang with a nose 3 inches long, that the President proposes to en-counter, so far as my research of natural history extends,

Mr. BACON. Does not the Senator think it is very dangerous to express an opinion as to natural history?

Mr. RAYNER. I will ask the Senator from Georgia why? Mr. BACON. I decline to say why. Mr. RAYNER. The Senator from Georgia is one of the directors of the Smithsonian Institution, and I should think the Senator would certainly not be afraid to express an opinion on natural history, even if I am.

Mr. BACON. I do not claim to be an expert. The Senator

Mr. RAYNER. I am an expert on this particular business. I will get to the judges in a minute when I finish this. I want to say that while there might be a doubt about the existence of these animals, there is no earthly doubt but that if they do exist they will be rapidly exterminated and annihilated at the hands of the great naturalist who is about to proceed to the African Continent. I want you to understand that I have no objection at all to his going. I think this donation of $25,000 will be very conducive to the peace and welfare of the Nation, temporarily at least. I have no feeling about the money at all, and I hope that the President will achieve new triumphs in those distant fields of combat and of carnage. When he returns I believe that he will bring back to the museums and menageries of the world animals that have never yet crossed the track of any explorer and have never yet been mentioned among the classifications of zoology.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. RAYNER. If it is a pertinent question.

Mr. BACON. I only want to ask the Senator what $25,000 appropriation he referred to?

Mr. RAYNER. I referred to an appropriation of $25,000 from the Smithsonian Institution.

Mr. BACON. I thought I understood the Senator correctly in that regard, and it is proper that I should correct the statement made by him. It is not true that the Smithsonian Institution devotes a dollar to that expedition. It is true that the expedition is, in compliance with the request of the President, to be under the auspices, as it were, of the institution, but the money is procured from private sources, and not one dollar is appropriated from the funds of the Smithsonian Institution or from any amount appropriated by Congress.

Mr. RAYNER. Of course the publication that we have read in the papers all along is that this money is being appropriated by the Smithsonian Institution. I suppose the Senator

Mr. BACON. I am glad of an opportunity to make correction, because the fact is as I have stated.

Mr. RAYNER. Now to the amendment. I would say this, Mr. President: I do not think, with due respect to the Senator from Texas, that there is a single judge, if he is honest and if he is capable, in any state court or upon any federal circuit or in any federal district who is not underpaid. That is my own judgment, of course.

Mr. BAILEY. Will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. RAYNER. Certainly.
Mr. BAILEY. I ask the Senator from Maryland whether he means, by saying that the judge is underpaid, that he is paid less than his services are worth or whether less than he could earn as a practitioner?

Mr. RAYNER. I mean paid less than what his services are worth. There are men who go upon the bench who have very little practice. There are other men who go upon the bench who sacrifice a very lucrative practice, just as Senators here sacrifice a large practice for the honor of representing their States in the Senate.

Mr. BAILEY. I was about to observe, if the measure is the value of the service, then Senators are underpaid and they are entitled to the benefit of this argument. I take it for granted that the honor of the bench is as much an inducement for men to accept that position as the honor of the Senate is an inducement for us to accept position here; and when a lawyer will abandon a $50,000 practice, as was true in the instance which the Senator from Washington [Mr. Piles] has just recited, then the honor, we must admit, is a great one indeed. And, begging the Senator's pardon, it comes back to my original proposition that the incumbents of these high offices ought to have a salary sufficient to support them in decency and comfort and take the balance of their pay in the honor of the station. We must do it, and all others ought to be willing to do it.

Mr. RAYNER. I regret that I can not agree with the argument of the Senator from Texas at all, that because we are underpaid we ought to underpay the judges. If we are underpaid, that is a question for consideration. Because we receive a salary-admitting it to be so-less than we ought to receive, why should a judge of a United States court, then, receive a salary less than he ought to receive?

Mr. BAILEY. Will the Senator permit me?

Mr. RAYNER. Certainly.

Mr. BAILEY. I did not say we are underpaid.

Mr. BAYNER. Put accompany that

Mr. RAYNER. But assuming that we are?

Mr. BAILEY. I do not think we are underpaid. When Senators have a private fortune, I think it is their right and privilege to spend it; but every Senator here can live in decency and comfort on the salary; and seeing that we take it with no thought of making money out of the salary, it simply increases the honor of the position, and all value the honor infinitely more than we do the salary.

Mr. RAYNER. Honor, Mr. President, does not support large families. Honor is very well for the individual who accepts the honor, but it does not come to his relief when he is surrounded by a number of persons, perhaps outside of his family, who depend upon him for support.

I am not prepared to say how many Senators are here who could make more than their salary or less than their salary. The Senator from Texas has often said on this floor, I have no doubt rightfully, that a position in this body should not preclude anyone from either attending to his proper vocation or following his profession. I know that, as far as I am concerned, I have been in the Senate now about three years, and I had a practice certainly in excess of the salary that is paid me I have not taken a dollar since I have entered this Chamber. I have not been in my office a half dozen times, and

I know very well if I had to depend upon the salary of $7,500 here in Washington it would be a very difficult matter to live properly

Mr. BAILEY. It would not be difficult at all if the Senator would go to his office when Congress is not in session; but, having a fortune outside, it is not necessary for him to practice law

Mr. RAYNER. I made up my mind that I either had to go to my law office or go to the Senate, that I could not do both. So I made up my mind that my duty to my constituents was here, and I practically abandoned my practice. I have entirely abandoned it while I am here. That, however, does not touch the question. We raised our own salaries. I may be wrong, of course, and the Senator from Texas may be right. He has different views from what I have on the subject. I say the larger the salaries, as a rule, the better men you can get for the bench. You can not get proper men upon the bench by paying them the inadequate salaries that a good many States pay. It is all very well to talk about Daniel Webster in his day, and to ask what could Webster do now if Webster were living. What does the Senator from Texas suppose Webster could make now if he were practicing law?

Mr. BAILEY. If he were practicing law at Marshfield, Mass., he would probably make $2,500 a year, but if he practiced law in the city of New York, he would probably make $100,000 a

Mr. RAYNER. I say, therefore, what Webster would make now is an entirely different proposition from what he would have made then. We are talking about our present environ-ment. The Senator talks about the New Jersey decisions. The New Jersey decisions are excellent now, and I do not agree with him upon the New Jersey decisions. I think the New Jersey judges among the best in the country. I want to say that you can not get upon the bench a proper set of men unless you pay them proper salaries. There are very few lawyers who will give up a practice of $25,000 or $50,000 a year for the purpose of getting $8,000 or $9,000 as a salary for the honor of the position. We have not been able to do it in Maryland. We have as fine a bench in Maryland to-day as there is in the country, but it is composed of a class of men who have made sacrifices.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. RAYNER. I do.
Mr. BAILEY. I think when the Senator from Maryland gets the stenographer's transcript of his notes he will want to change what he has said in the last sentence or two. In one breath the Senator says it is impossible to get the right kind of men unless you pay them adequate salaries, and in the next breath he says they have some of the best men in the world on the bench in Maryland, even with inadequate salaries.

Mr. RAYNER. I do; and those two statements entirely comport with each other.

Mr. BAILEY. Those two statements are utterly irreconcilable.

Mr. RAYNER. I do not agree with the Senator.
Mr. BAILEY. If it is impossible—let me state it this

Mr. RAYNER. Let me state it first. I have not yet finished the sentence. I think I am entitled to make a statement, and then I will hear the Senator. I say these are men who make sacrifices. I do not say that every man in his profession is willing to make the sacrifice. I am stating an example. Men have made sacrifices, but it does not follow that every man who has a good practice is willing to abandon his practice for the purpose of getting on the bench. So the two statements which I have made are absolutely consistent, and I shall not correct them in the stenographer's transcript.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, with the Senator's permission, I return to the question. He says you can not get the right kind of men unless you pay them adequate salaries.

Mr. RAYNER. As a rule. Mr. BAILEY. The Senator adds that. But I will take it that way.

Mr. RAYNER. Of course, as a rule.

Mr. BAILEY. I will accept the qualification. The Senator from Maryland says the present salaries are inadequate. Then the Senator must mean, if both of those statements are true, that our present judges are not the right kind of men.

Mr. RAYNER. I do not mean that, and there is no logical connection between those two statements. I say there are plenty of men in the Senate of the United States who have made sacrifices, but the Senator from Texas-Mr. BAILEY rose.

Mr. RAYNER. One moment. I can not yield now. The Senator from Texas knows, and every lawyer upon this floor knows, that men have made these sacrifices. Plenty of them make such sacrifices by taking places upon the bench and leaving their practice. We all admit that. There is no question about that.

And for that reason I contend that you can Mr. BAILEY. get proper men for the present salaries, because we have been able to secure proper men at the present salaries, just as we secure proper men for the Senate, although the majority of the Senators here make a personal sacrifice to come here, so far as dollars and cents are concerned.

Mr. RAYNER. It is the exception to the rule.
Mr. BAILEY. The exceptions are so numerous that we have no vacancies in the Senate. [Laughter.]

Mr. RAYNER. I am not talking about the Senate. I am talking about the judiciary. I do not see any connection between the Senate and the judiciary. We are not discussing, I respectfully submit to the Senator from Texas, the adequacy of our own salaries, and I see not the slightest connection between fixing the salaries of judges and taking up the question as to whether we are adequately paid. The only question here is as to whether the judiciary are adequately paid. I say there are exceptions to the rule where men make these sacrifices. I repeat it; and it has been said over and over again, without contradiction, that it is a difficult thing to get men to go on the bench, because you do not pay them a sufficient salary. I stand on that statement, inconsistent or not.

The difficulty exists in every State. Men say, "We can not afford to go on the bench, because you do not pay us a sufficient If you raise the salaries, you will get a better class of men. Men are bound to support their families; they must look to that. I can not understand the argument that by increasing the salary it will not help us at least to get a better class of men than by lowering salaries or paying inadequate salaries.

I may be wrong about that, but that has been my experience. That has been the experience in every State, where lawyers have said, "I would like to go on the bench, but I can not take the salary; I can not support my family upon it, and I can not leave my practice. I would like to have the honor of being on the bench, but I can not afford it." I have known that to occur over and over again. Mr. BORAH. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. RAYNER. I do. Mr. BORAH. Does the Senator from Maryland know of any State where the bench itself has decreased in standing or integrity or character by reason of that condition of affairs?

Mr. RAYNER. Oh, no; I do not. But that is a statistical observation that really does not affect this argument. The question that we are to decide is whether a district judge ought not to get $9,000 a year, or at least $8,000 a year, as provided for in this bill. I think it is a petty warfare upon the judiclary of the United States to cut the district judges down to six or seven thousand dollars a year.

I want to say one word to the Senate, and that is this: I have an idea about this that the day will come when we shall have a much better bench, perhaps, in certain localities than we now have, when all these appointments will be taken away from the President of the United States. I do not know that it is any discovery of mine. I think I spoke to the Senator from Texas about it some time ago; but I think we have a right to take away from the President of the United States the appointment of either circuit or district judges under the Constitution and place their appointments in some other hands, say, in the Supreme Court of the United States. I refer the Senate to Article II, section 2, and subsection 2 of the Constitution, which gives the President of the United States the right to appoint judges of the Supreme Court, and it stops there. It stops with the judges of the Supreme Court, and it says:

But the Congress may by law vest the appointment of such inferior officers, as they think proper, in the President alone, in the courts of law, or in the heads of departments.

I do not claim any particular credit for this discovery. thought, perhaps, at first that I was wrong, but I have spoken about it to two or three other lawyers and they seem to think I am right. I think we could take every one of these appointments away from the President. I do not think, as a rule, the President of the United States knows what sort of judges to appoint. I know the Senator from Texas will agree with me on that proposition. I think the judges that are appointed are not men, as a rule-

Mr. BAILEY. That is true of some Presidents. [Laughter.]

Mr. RAYNER. Some Presidents; yes. Does not the Senator agree that it is true of some of the present judges?

Mr. BAILEY. I responded to the Senator's suggestion that the President did not know what kind of a man ought to be made a judge, and I said that that statement was entirely true of some Presidents.

Mr. RAYNER. It is true of some, and it is true of a good many of them. I will tell you why I think it is true of a good many of them. When there is a vacancy on the bench, who comes here and asks the President for the appointment?

Suppose a man to-day, for instance, asked me to appoint a medical board here. To whom would I go to find out the principal surgeons and physicians in Washington? I would go to the medical society. I would go to the men high up in the medical profession. In selecting judges, does the President of the United States, as a rule, go to the bar associations of the different States or to the leading lawyers?

Mr. BAILEY. No; he goes altogether too frequently to the corporations.

Mr. RAYNER. Well, then, that answers my question. as a rule, he goes to the corporations, then he goes to the wrong quarter to get proper judges on the bench.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President—
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. RAYNER. Yes. Mr. TILLMAN. If the Senator from Maryland acknowledges-and I think he must acknowledge-that corporations have more influence in appointing judges than anybody else, why is he so anxious to increase their salaries when, possibly, they are already on the pay rolls of the corporations?

Mr. RAYNER. There are a great many judges on the bench who, I apprehend, have not been appointed under the influence of corporations.

Mr. TILLMAN. Undoubtedly.
Mr. RAYNER. I suppose that there are a great many of We have in the State of Maryland a judge who is able, a man of the highest possible honor and integrity, whom no corporation appointed and whom no corporation could influence, and I know he will earn every dollar of $9,000 a year. I know one federal judge after another—I do not want to make any invidious distinctions, however, but the statement of the Senator from South Carolina does not apply to all the judges of the circuit bench.

Mr. TILLMAN. I do not say it applies to all. Mr. RAYNER. If it applies to some of them, why give all of them an inadequate salary because some few of them ought not to have been appointed upon the bench?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. RAYNER. Yes. Mr. BEVERIDGE. I merely call to the attention of the Senator from Maryland the statement he made as being in approval of some portion of the statement made by the Senator from South Carolina, the latter part of which statement was that the judges may be on the pay rolls of corporations. I take it the Senator did not mean to agree with that.

Mr. RAYNER. Well, in discussions of this sort I do not desire to individualize. I have my opinion. I doubt very much whether any judge upon the federal bench is upon the pay roll of a corporation. He might be, but I doubt it, and I would hate

Mr. BAILEY. Inasmuch as I first suggested that the President did consult corporations in making judicial appointments, I want to say that I do not believe that any judges are on the pay roll of a corporation, and I think my friend from South Carolina ought to withdraw that statement.

Mr. TILLMAN. I did not assert it. I stated that I had such a suspicion, and I will not withdraw it.

Mr. BAILEY. Well, Mr. President, the Senator from South Carolina is sometimes more suspicious than he ought to be. I think it is a bad statement to make; but I stand by the statement-and I think neither the Senator from Maryland nor the Senator from Indiana will controvert it-that the corporations have for twenty years been extremely and especially active about the appointments of federal judges.

Mr. RAYNER. I agree entirely with the Senator from Texas, and that is what I said just now when the Senator interrupted me. He said, as I understood him, that there have been few Presidents—there have been a little more than a few who did not consult the corporations in judicial appoint-

Mr. TILLMAN rose.

Mr. RAYNER. Does the Senator from South Carolina want to ask me a question?

Mr. TILLMAN. No; I was not undertaking to ask the Senator any questions. I simply want to make my own position clear.

Mr. RAYNER. It is perfectly clear, I think.

Mr. TILLMAN. I have known of instances, when I was governor of South Carolina, in which a federal court was apparently so much the tool of corporations with which I was battling for taxes that if the judges were not on their pay rolls they accepted special coaches in which they went about. To every intent and purpose they were as much the tools of the railroads as if they were still on their pay rolls.

Mr. RAYNER. Mr. President, I know and can give instances, when a federal judge was to be appointed, of corporations coming here-I will not say in person, because that is not properly applicable to a corporation-but through their attorneys, and using all the influence they could. The Senator from Texas knows that. I know it, and we know exactly how long it has been going on.

There is one other thing that it is proper for me to state, and that is that I have known instances where lawyers who have been attorneys for corporations during the whole of their professional career have been put upon the bench, and they have turned out to be as just and honorable judges, without any regard or favor for corporation influence, as any men you could put upon the bench. I have known that to take place. You can give instances and I can give instances of attorneys for corporations who, the moment they were on the bench, whenever there was any doubt about a case would throw the case against the very corporations they had represented before they went on the bench. You can not individualize in these cases.

But let us get back to the question. Now, why not pay a fair salary to a district judge or any other judge who has devoted his whole life to his profession? He is a man of honor, of learning, and of capacity, who gives the whole of his time to his judicial duties regardless of what his practice has been before, regardless of whether he makes a sacrifice or not. Is he not worth $9,000 a year to the Government of the United States?

I may be wrong, and the Senator from Texas may be right. We are, of course, all entitled to our judgment upon this ques-I am only speaking from my experience, but I believe that if you will give them better salaries you will have better judges. I believe it is the inadequacy of the salaries that keep a large number of the profession from accepting the honor that they would otherwise be willing to take.

I think, Mr. President, that it is the duty of the American bar to send to the bench the very best men there are in the profession in the United States. The time will come, then, when we can boast of good judges-not in sections, for we ought not to have good judges only in sections. There ought not to be a good judge here and a bad judge there.

The Senator from Texas has stated frequentlywith him-that there are judges upon the federal bench who ought not to be there. I know that to be a fact. I hope the day will come when they will go off the bench, and I hope the day will come when we will give men a salary that they can do a little more than live on. Of course, I do not go into details, as the Senator from West Virginia did. But take this proposition: A man ought to be able to save a few thousand dollars, and if we pay the judge at the rate of $9,000 a year, ought he not be able to save a few thousand dollars a year to insure his life for the benefit of his family? Is it asking too much of the Government of the United States to permit a federal judge to save $2,000 a year to effect an insurance that would go to the benefit of his family after his death? He should not be compelled to receive a salary that he is merely able to live upon and not be able to save a dollar beyond the actual salary that is paid him.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President-The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. RAYNER. Yes.

I was going to suggest to the Senator from Mr. TILLMAN. Maryland that if he can devise any scheme by which we can get high and incorruptible men on the bench, such as we ought to have there, I would gladly pay them $100,000 a year, and I believe the people of the United States would save millions by Mr. RAYNER. I can devise a scheme in one moment. When the President of the United States has the appointment of a judge, let him do what the Supreme Court perhaps would do under the section of the Constitution to which I have referred let him bring in, not corporation lawyers or lawyers who have an I we ought to have done.

interest in forwarding the appointment of a particular judge; but let him call upon the honor, the integrity, and the intelligence of the American bar to give him a judge, and he will get judges that will be an honor to the Nation and well qualified to sit in judgment upon all the great and complicated questions that now come before the federal judiciary in the performance of their duties. There is no trouble about that at all. The President of the United States can always appoint a good judge if he wants to do so. If he does not, it is simply because he does not want to do so.

There have been men appointed judges who knew nothing about the law. The Senator from Texas and I know what a difficult problem it is to argue questions of elementary and rudimentary law before a judge who never studied his profession before he got upon the bench and never studied it while on the bench. You want the highest and the best order of material that you can get. Make no mistake, Mr. President, you can hardly put these salaries too high.

This is the result of my own experience. It may be an experience different from that of other Senators here upon the floor, but my belief is that the higher we make the salaries the better judges we will get upon the bench, provided we couple with that a requirement adverted to both by the Senator from Texas and the Senator from South Carolina, that when the President has the appointment of a judge, let him consult the bar associa-tions of the different States. When he has the appointment of a judge in Maryland, let him go to the bar association of Maryland, and I will guarantee that they will give him a judge who can not be influenced in the performance of his public functions.

Mr. McLAURIN. Mr. President-The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. RAYNER. I do. Mr. McLAURIN. Does the Senator know of any lawyers who have been tendered positions on the federal bench who have declined them?

Mr. RAYNER. Well, I will say to the Senator from Mississippi that I have not had a very large experience with the federal bench. Our federal practice in Maryland is rather limited; but I know man after man who has been tendered a position upon the state bench who has declined it because he was unable to accept it at the salary provided.

Mr. McLAURIN. My question was directed to the federal

Mr. RAYNER. I do not know enough about the federal bench, personally.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President-The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. RAYNER. Yes. Mr. BAILEY. I am willing to take his State as a test, and I will ask the Senator from Maryland if, notwithstanding the declinations of some who could not afford the position, the State of Maryland was not still able to secure upright and excellent judges for her courts?

Mr. RAYNER. As good as any in the country. Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, that illustrates that what might be a salary sufficient to induce one man may not be a salary sufficient to induce another man. That would be just as true if you doubled the salaries as if you left them where they are.

Mr. RAYNER. That illustrates the exception, and not the rule. I must insist upon the proposition that it does not illustrate the rule; it illustrates the exception. We have had men in Maryland who have sacrificed their private practice in the State for the honor of being on the bench. I know one of the greatest judges who ever sat in a Maryland court, who died and left his family in poverty, and I could name several others. I have always thought it a great shame and an outrage that such things should happen.

Mr. BAILEY. But he left his family the inheritance that an upright judge bequeaths, of an unsullied name. That is worth all the money that misers ever gathered in the history of the world.

Mr. RAYNER. But families can not live upon honor. Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, that is the curse of this day, that a man does not think he has done his duty unless he leaves his children a fortune. Now, that is precisely the tendency which I so much fear. It used to be that if we could educate our boys and give them a good name to start with in the world, we felt we had done our duty. But now, unless we can give our boys fortunes with which they may establish banks or organize factories, or unless we can give our girls a dower which may attract some brainless nobleman from the other side of the ocean, we feel that we have not done by them all that I believe that American citizen who can educate his children and start them in the world with that advantage which so many great Americans were denied, and then can give them the name that a judge, however poor he may be, leaves them, or the name that a great Senator will leave them, has done more for them than if he left them a great fortune to tempt them into a thousand dissipations, destroying health, character, and standing. I am sure the Senator from Maryland does not disagree with me when I say that a judge who serves a lifetime on the bench, helping to form the jurisprudence of his State and immortalizing his name, has done more for his family than he could have hoped to do in the way of a bequest to be measured in dollars and cents. I do not think it a misfortune that the Maryland judge, of whom the Senator spoke, died poor if he left his family the inheritance of a great name.

Mr. RAYNER. It is very difficult though, I apprehend, Mr. President, with all the inherited honor that they may receive to feed and clothe themselves on honor. [Laughter.] That is to feed and clothe themselves on honor. [Laughter.] my trouble about it. I agree with every word the Senator from Texas has said, and while I should like to inherit the honor of my ancestors, I should like them to leave me a little money so that I could enjoy the honor. [Laughter.] I would take, perhaps, a little honor and a little more money.

I do not believe in the accumulation of large fortunes. The Senator from Texas and myself entirely agree upon that propo-No judge who gets $9,000 a year, and has nothing else, could leave a large fortune to his family. I think it is a man's duty to leave something to those who survive him. I think a man's duty to his children is just as great as is the duty of the children to the father, and I think that a man ought to strain every purpose in life to accumulate a sufficient sum of money so as not to leave his family in abject poverty and destitution. Take a man who goes upon the federal bench without any means, without any resources, without any fortune, and gets $9,000 a year. How much can he save? How much can he leave to his family? Why draw the line on him? Why not let him be comfortable while he is a judge and not be pressed from morning to night to pay the expenses of his family? That is my idea; and I think, Mr. President, that is the proper idea.
Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, if the Senator from Maryland will permit me-The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Maryland yield further to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. RAYNER. Yes. Mr. BAILEY. If a judge when appointed to the bench has saved nothing, then he does not make any great sacrifice to take the place at the present salary; and if he has been able to save something, all he needs to do is to invest it and let his children inherit that.

Mr. RAYNER. Let me say to the Senator that I know plenty of men who are making large fortunes out of their practice who are not only spending every dollar they earn, but going into debt besides. The profession, as a rule, knows very little about finance.

Mr. BAILEY. If the American Congress is to legislate for men who need guardians, then I confess I am not advised about what kind of a law we ought to pass.

Mr. RAYNER. A great many men, Mr. President, require financial guardians, but do not require legal guardians. I have known men of the highest ability in their profession to spend every dollar of money they made, but they did not require to be put in the custody of a guardian by any means.

Mr. BAILEY. They had a right to do that if they earned it, though I do not really think they had a right to go into debt. I think that a man who is earning enough to support himself and family ought not to go into debt. But waiving that, I go back to the very kernel of the argument, which the Senator from Maryland has stated when he said he wanted less honor and more money. That is the curse of the American Nation to-day.

Mr. RAYNER. Mr. President, there is no one in this world who wants more honor than I do. I want all the honor that a man can have and give; but what I say is that a man's family would prefer that their ancestors should have less position and honor and bequeath them something to live on, than to have the highest positions of honor and be left in absolute starvation and destitution perhaps. That is my proposition. The Senator is mistaken, and has misconstrued the phrase that

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I wonder, if he could choose, whether the Senator from Maryland would choose the honor of Jefferson's name, coupled with the insolvency of that great statesman, or would take the name of a Vanderbilt, coupled with the patrimony. The Senator from Maryland is mistaken. He does not himself really know what he does think about that question. I do him the honor to say that he believes a good name worth more than all the riches of the world; and he has exemplified that both in public and in private life.

Mr. RAYNER. I was not speaking of a good name. speaking of honors, and not honor. I was speaking of the mere empty honor of a judge. Everybody, of course, wants to preserve a good name and leave a good name.

Mr. BAILEY. I will say "a great name."

Mr. RAYNER. There can be no difference of opinion, I apprehend, on that point between the Senator from Texas and myself.

Mr. BAILEY. I will say "a great name," for there is a difference between the two. I have known men never heard of beyond the corporate limits of the villages where they lived who left good names, but of course not great names. So I will change the word "good," to meet the argument, and say "great." I deny that the Senator from Maryland would prefer great riches as against a great name. I deny that he would give even a part of a great reputation to gain a great fortune; but if he would, then I can understand the temper of the American people as manifested in this body. I can understand why it is that men are no longer content with the honor, but they want more salary. But that reverses all of my opinions about the American people. I have always been taught to believe that when a man, at the end of a long public service, comes to lay down his office and is preparing to be gathered to his fathers, it was enough for him and that it was enough for his children and his children's children that he left them a stainless reputation, although he bequeathed to them no dollar of gold.

Perhaps we are to change all this now. Perhaps we have de-termined to pay men in dollars instead of in honor. If that be the measure, Mr. President, it ought to be twice nine or even three times that much, because, if we are to compensate in money instead of in honor and glory, then I believe the salary of Senators should be $30,000 rather than $7,500. But if men love money more than they do glory, then there is great danger that they will betray their country in order to line their pockets.

I refuse to believe that the American Republic has reached that point yet; I know it is not as it once was, wedded to glorious traditions and high ideals; I know it is not now as it was in the days of our fathers, when the honor was everything and the salary was nothing; but I had not believed that we had passed so far beyond those days that a man would stand up in the Senate and say he was willing to take less honor if he could have more money.

Mr. FORAKER. Will the Senator from Texas allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. RAYNER. If the Senator from Ohio will excuse me for a moment, I do not want that to go to the RECORD. I never said that, and what I said can bear no such construction. If I said it, it does not at all bear the meaning the Senator from Texas has put upon it.

Mr. BAILEY. The Senator— Mr. RAYNER. I was speaking of the honors that a man held, which is quite different from the honor and integrity of his public or private life.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. BAILEY. I will yield in a moment.

The Senator from Maryland said exactly what I quoted him as saying, and I was commenting upon it as an evidence of the decay of what I believe to be a wholesome public sentiment. I did not indicate that the Senator from Maryland meant to say that he weighed the personal integrity of the man against the dollar, and I have not said anything susceptible of that construction. Now, I will hear the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. FORAKER. I do not imagine the Senator from Maryland lacks appreciation of honor more than the rest of us; but the question I want to ask the Senator from Texas is whether he thinks a judge will leave for his family any less honor working on a salary of $9,000 than if working on a salary of $9,000?

Mr. BAILEY. Yes, Mr. President. I believe the highest honor is with the man who serves his country most unselfishly and with the least regard for the salary he receives. [Applause.] And I believe that in just the same proportion that you increase his pay in money you decrease his pay in honor and in glory. That is my opinion, and I believe that events justify it. Year after year we have been increasing these salaries; and every time we hear the same argument, that men can not live upon the salary. There was made, only a year or so ago, an increase of the salary of all these judges, including the judges of the Supreme Court.

Mr. President, what salary was paid to the greatest judge that ever adorned that bench, or any other, in the history of the world? I do not subscribe to the political doctrines of John Marshall; my opinion is that he did more to change the form and structure of this Government than any twenty men who ever lived under it, and yet, dissenting utterly from the political opinions of Marshall, I yet can pay him the just tribute of saying that he was the greatest legal mind that ever illustrated the jurisprudence of this country, or any other country, in the history of the world. Was it the salary that induced John Marshall to become the Chief Justice of the United States? No thought of the salary inspired him to take that exalted station. Historians say it was a political consideration. But I believe that, even though moved by a political consideration, John Marshall still believed that there, and perhaps there alone, he could render to his country the service for which his great intellect qualified him. Senators will recall that in the election of 1800 the Federalist party was driven from power in every department of the Government.

Jefferson or Burr was to be chosen President, because, having received the highest number of votes, the House of Representatives was required to choose between them. Whichever it might be, Jefferson or Burr, it could not be a Federalist. The election returned a majority, then called Republicans, now called Democrats, to the House of Representatives, and made it certain that the political complexion of the Senate was to change with the incoming Congress and administration. Thus, driven from every other department of the Government, the Federalist party took refuge in the judiciary, and John Adams appointed John Marshall to be the Chief Justice of that great tribunal.

It is immaterial to me whether he sought it because he loved the work or whether he accepted it because he could do the work of a patriot and a Federalist. It is still certain that he did not accept it for the sake of the salary.

Call the roll of that tribunal, Mr. President, and it will be found that no man ever accepted a commission to sit there who inquired about the size of its salary; and I do not believe any man who will ever be fit to sit there will care about the size of the salary, except only to know that it is enough to support him in decency and in comfort; and when Senators like the Senator from Maryland say we must pay our judges what they can earn at the bar, or approximating it, or whenever they make the salary a consideration for the acceptance of the office, they degrade the judiciary of this Republic.

Mr. President, I hope that time will never come; but if we persist in thrusting these increases on the judges they will fall into the habit of saving money, which is not the great lawyer's habit—as the Senator from Maryland has said—or else they will fall into the habit of spending it upon these gorgeous entertainments about which we hear so much, and when they do that what time will they have to study their cases or to write their opinions? But worse still, give them more money to spend, and it takes more of their time to spend it, and as you increase their scale of living you intensify the extravagance of all who watch them and who feel like following their example.

So it is that this deadly taint of extravagance and greed permeates every artery of our national life. That is what I protest against. I would prefer to see the men who hold the great commissions of the American people in executive, judicial, and legislative station unable to indulge extravagance, because, Mr. President, the simple life of a great man is a perpetual blessing to the people, while a life of extravagant indulgence is a perpetual curse to a Government like ours. We have nothing to do with individual extravagance and individual follies, provided they keep away from the criminal statutes of the country. I leave them to go their way, but I protest against the notion that men shall seek or accept the great offices of this Republic with any view either to the greed that wants more money or to the extravagance that needs more money.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, we seem to have drifted somewhat from this bill, and I want to say a few words about the salaries of judges. I shall not attempt to answer the Senator from Texas [Mr. Balley]. I agree with very much of what he said about the extravagance of the age. I think it can hardly be said, at least in the western country, where the price of living is somewhat higher than it is in the East, that we are encouraging any extravagance or tendency toward undue display.

The committee of which I happen to be a member received from the Judiciary Committee a list of amendments that they proposed to this bill, and, I believe, so far as the circuit judges are concerned we have accepted the proposition that the committee made to us.

Mr. BACON. Will the Senator permit me for a moment? Mr. TELLER. Certainly,

Mr. BACON. I wish, as a member of the Judiciary Committee, to say to the Senator from Colorado that that recommendation was accompanied by another which excluded from the enjoyment of the judges hereafter the right to payment of their expenses when away from their homes to the amount of $10 a day.

I desire to say that, as far as I am concerned, my support of these amendments in the Judiciary Committee was based on that consideration and that alone. I thought that if we would cut off the $10 per day we could afford to raise the salaries. Whether others were influenced by any such consideration, it is not for me to say; but it is due to myself, as a member of the Judiciary Committee, who agreed to that report, to say this much.

Mr. TELLER. I do not think it worth while to consider that proposition here, because we are now discussing the question of district judges and not circuit judges. We have already passed on the circuit judges.

Mr. BACON. If the Senator will again pardon me, while it is true in a greater degree in the case of circuit judges than of district judges, the district judges also have the benefit of that provision when out of their districts; and the list which the Senator from Wyoming has been furnished by the Secretary of the Treasury shows that it is generally availed of.

Mr. TELLER. I have no doubt the district judges when they perform duties which come within the statutory provision by which they can be specially compensated take advantage of that statute and get their pay. There is not much coming to the district judges under this provision of the law which has been mentioned. They are not called upon to go much out of the State. When they are, the Congress has in its wisdom provided that they shall be paid, and I suppose nobody will doubt the propriety of that course.

I will say one word about the federal judges in the West who have come within my knowledge. I have had the fortune to live in the eighth circuit for pretty nearly fifty years. I was there before the circuit was formed, and I have been familiar with the judges on that bench from the time we were incorporated into the eighth circuit, which is thirty-odd years ago now, until the present time. I think I can say without any question that it costs the judges west of the Mississippi River and in the eighth and ninth circuits at least 25 or 30 per cent more to live than it does the judges in other parts of the country; and in some sections even more than that.

As a member of the legal profession I have been brought in contact for many years—nearly fifty years—with the occupants of the bench, and I want to enter my protest here against the suggestion that it is a possible thing that any federal judge is on a corporation roll. I am too well acquainted with the judges of my section of the country to believe that it is possible. I am too much impressed with the federal judiciary of this country to believe it possible in other sections of the country. I know there are individual cases where it has been said they have fallen under the domination of corporations, just as it has been said a hundred times that the Senate, as a body, has fallen under the control of corporations.

I have seen articles written about Members of this body, pub-

I have seen articles written about Members of this body, published in the public press, published in the magazines, that I knew were as false as they could possibly be, with reference to their connection with corporations.

Mr. President, the Senator from Mississippi asked the Senator from Maryland, "Have you ever known anybody to decline a federal position because of the salary?" I have known more than one case where a federal judgeship has been refused, not the district judgeship alone, but the circuit judgeship in the eighth circuit, by men who were competent to fill the place and would have filled it with great credit. I do not mean to say that we did not get just as good a judge after the refusal as we would have got if the first offer had been accepted.

Mr. McLAURIN. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. TELLER. Certainly.

Mr. McLAURIN. The Senator from Maryland was making the argument—that is what I understood to be his argument—that because of the small salaries we were not getting as good judges as if the salaries were raised. Pertinent to that, as I thought and think now, I propounded the question to him whether he had known of any lawyer who had refused an appointment as federal judge on account of the salary. I think it is a very pertinent question, and I do not think it is overturned by the statement made by the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. TELLER. I will not have any controversy with the Senator from Mississippi on the subject. I simply state what I know, and I know that in the West to-day you can not get on the bench of many of the States the best legal talent of the country because of the paucity of pay.

Mr. McLAURIN. I did not mean to say that what the Senator from Colorado said was not true, but I say, taking that as true-and I know it is true, else he would not have made the statement-it does not overturn the argument that is drawn from the fact that lawyers, as a rule, do not refuse federal appointments because of the salary. I say it does not overturn it for the very reason that the Senator from Colorado has just stated, that in the instances to which he has referred, where he has known lawyers to refuse the office because of the inadequacy of the salary, he does not pretend that just as good lawyers and just as good jurists were not gotten in place of those who had refused to accept the appointments.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I do say that in the West you can not get on either the federal or the state bench the most prominent lawyers in the section of country. Perhaps you could not do it if you raised the salary to the enormous sum of $9,000 a year. I am not contending that we should put up the salary so that the leader of the bar in a State will want to go on the bench. A man who is offered a judgeship, who has due respect for the profession to which he belongs, might have to inquire whether he could live on the salary, and would act to inquire whether he could live on the salary, and would act according to his ideas of what he ought to do; whether he would leave for his family something at his death, if there should happen to be minor children and a widow. I think he has a right to consider those things. If the Government of the United States, wasting millions and millions of dollars a year in things of no value to us, should as a nation undertake to say it will not pay federal judges sufficient, at least, to give them a support such as they may think they are entitled to according support such as they may think they are entitled to, according to the way in which they have been brought up and educated, I think it is pretty small business.

Mr. President, the whole amount that we shall appropriate in this bill if we give them every dollar that the committee suggests that we do give them in this bill is a mere bagatelle compared to what we waste every month in the year on appropriations of money that are of no benefit, but an absolute injury to the country. A country that can spend a hundred and some odd million dollars on its navy and a hundred and some odd million dollars on its army and not go into bankruptcy, and put $100,000,000, without winking, into the Philippine Islands thousand million dollars in ten years—ought not to haggle a great while about the salaries of the judges.

Mr. President, I shall support the report of the committee as it came from the Judiciary Committee. The Judiciary Committee put it at $9,000. The Appropriations Committee put it down to $8,000. The Senator from Ohio proposes to return it to what the Judiciary Committee reported it. If we can not get $9,000, I shall be glad to get $8,000; but I do think it unjust to say that the federal judges of this country shall serve for $6,000 a year. In the West $6,000 would not pay the cheapest kind of a lawyer who had any practice. We have had good federal judges in the West. I regard it as important to the public service that we should give them a compensation adequate to the service they render the country. I do not think we do that in this bill, not even now.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. President, I had hoped that the considera-tion of this measure would be concluded long before this, as I have been very anxious to have considered a bill of which I have charge, commonly known as the "omnibus claims bill." But I see we are not going to reach it to-night. I suppose I might as well contribute my portion of the delay.

I think the discussion has not been without profit. I believe I have as high a respect and veneration for the courts of this country as any living man. I believe there has been no better judiciary in the history of the country than we have to-day. I believe it has never been presided over by men of higher character and stricter virtue than are they who compose our judiciary to-day. I have neither sympathy nor have I patience with the insinuations that are constantly being made in public speeches and in the public press against the character of our federal

I confess I was shocked and grieved to-day when the insinuation was made on this floor that there are members of the federal judiciary who are under the pay of corporations or of interests other than that of the public. I can not believe that the Senator who made that remark considered it well. I hope he did not. In any case, I denounce it as a base slander on the judiciary of this Nation.

Mr. President, I deplore that such remarks should be made, and I am sure there is neither foundation nor justification for them. In no branch of the public service is there higher character than in the federal judiciary. At the same time, Mr.

President, I fully indorse the sentiment expressed by the Senator from Colorado-and it has been uttered by others-that we can not compensate these men in money or in dollars for the work they do. They do not expect to be compensated in The greatest compensation that they derive is from the consciousness of the honorable and efficient performance of duty. The value of the services the Government gets from an honest judge or an honest official is always greater than that which it pays in the salary.

We can not escape knowledge of the fact that the greatest inducement for men to enter into public life, to accept positions on the bench, in Congress, or elsewhere, is the distinction and the honor which a faithful discharge of the duties of office brings to him and to his family; and we all realize and know that he can give his family no greater inheritance than the knowledge that he has acquitted himself honestly, capably, and efficiently and has been a good, faithful public servant.

Mr. President, patriotism, fidelity to duty, can neither be compensated nor measured in dollars. Why do Senators talk of the value of the services of these officials? Is it a question of values? No. Honesty, efficiency, capability, and patriotism in the public service have their rewards, but they are not in riches, except in so far as a consciousness of duty faithfully performed on the one hand and a just appreciation of fidelity to a sacred trust on the other constitute riches. In my judgment these things constitute at once the greatest earning that one may accomplish for himself, and the most splendid heritage he may transmit to his posterity. The value of the service that Washington or Marshall or Lincoln rendered this Nation could not be computed in dollars, but who would not prefer to inherit the estate of one of them than to succeed to the wealth of the greatest Napoleon of finance that modern times have produced?

Nevertheless, Mr. President, I have believed that we are going too far in the increase of salaries all along the line. lieve that we went too far in the increase of the President's salary. I voted to insert the amendment reported by the committee, placing the salary at $100,000 for the President. Unfortunately I was called out at the time when the vote was taken on the amendment reducing it to $75,000, which was lost, and therefore I did not have an opportunity to vote as I would have voted, to substitute that sum for $100,000. I felt that some increase was due, and rather than that there should be none I voted for $100,000, while I believed it was too much.

I believe that the increase proposed for the judges is too great. I wish most frankly to confess that I do not agree with many of my colleagues in the statements they have made about the earning capacity of lawyers. I know something about what lawyers earn, and I know that two-thirds of the men who are now on the bench to-day are receiving more in salary than they ever actually cleared in their law practice before they went on the bench.

I speak about what they cleared. They may have earned in fees considerably more than that, but out of that they had to pay their office expenses, their clerk hire, their assistants, and all that. I think most lawyers will agree with me that the average lawyer, and I mean the average good lawyer, is doing very well and has a very excellent practice when he is clearing above his office expenses, clerk hire, and all that sort of thing $10,000 a year. Those gentlemen who are earning $50,000 a year, or who could earn $50,000 a year, have been mighty scarce in the parts of the country where I have lived.

Mr. PILES. The Senator lives in Astoria.

Mr. FULTON. My friend to the right says that I live in Astoria.

Mr. WARREN. Where is that? Mr. FULTON. It is not in Wyoming. [Laughter.] Mr. WARREN. Thank you.

Mr. FULITON. And I thank God for it. [Laughter.]
Mr. WARREN. I agree with the Senator.
Mr. FULITON. It is not in Seattle, although Seattle, as everybody knows, is the very center of the universe. one particular place, no doubt, Tom Marshall had in mind when he said that "the sky came down evenly all around;" hence it conclusively followed that it was the center of the universe. [Laughter.]

They have good lawyers in Seattle, and one of the most dis-tinguished of them is my good friend here on my right. Of course he does not pay me anything for saying that. I say it because I know it to be a fact. But I say, in Seattle the lawbecause I know it to be a fact. But I say, in Seattle the law-yers who are earning $50,000 a year are very few. I know the gentlemen who are federal judges on the Pacific coast, and I know that none of them ever earned $50,000, or anything ap-proaching $50,000, before they went on the bench, and they would not be earning it to-day if they were off the bench, and yet they are the equal in ability, integrity, and all that goes to make a splendid judiciary of any like number in any district in this country.

Mr. PILES. Fifty thousand dollars altogether?

Mr. FULTON. No; clear.

Mr. President, I was willing to make a reasonable advance, because I realize that the cost of living has advanced of late years. I was willing to make an advance to $8,000. I think it is a reasonable one. I voted for it on the other proposition just submitted. I agree with the Senator from Ohio [Mr. Foraker], that there is no reason for any considerable distinction between the salary of the district judges and the salary of the circuit judges. I would make a slight difference, perhaps of $500 a year, simply because of the position. I do think that the higher the position the greater the dignity, and it should be recognized by some difference in salary, but not much.

The district judge to-day does more work as a rule than the

He is doing all the nisi prius business, trying all the cases in the first instance. I do not suppose there is a circuit in which the circuit judge does any of that business to-day. Besides the district judge may be called to the court of appeals.

I have been embarrassed to know just what vote I should cast on the amendment of the Senator from Ohio. I should like to see the salary of the circuit judges fixed at $9,000. I think that would be nearer right. Then I would put the salary of the district judges at $8,500. That would be my idea. I think we are really going further than we should go in the way of increase of salary

Mr. President, I do not like to use the word here, but it does seem to me that there is abroad a spirit of extravagance in the way of increase of salaries. We are told to-day that we can not have a river and harbor bill because of the depleted condition of the Treasury; yet all over this country, in every commercial community, the cry is going up for appropriations for the improvement of our rivers and harbors and our highways. We can not accord them. Those who are in charge of the appropriation bills tell us we must not yield, because we have not the money with which to do it.

Then, Mr. President, if we must study economy in matters of so grave concern to the people as that I have mentioned, ought we not to apply a little of the doctrine of economy to the mat-ter of salaries? Let us make some increase, but let us make a reasonable one.

Mr. SCOTT. Will the Senator yield to me for a minute? Mr. FULTON. Certainly.

I wish to ask the Senator from Oregon a ques-The salary of a district attorney is forty-five hundred dollars in my State. I do not know whether it differs in dif-

Mr. FULTON. I think that is what it is; at least it is in my

Mr. SCOTT. I understand that a district judge, of course, can not take any business in the court. Consequently we are paying the district attorney a great deal more in proportion than we are paying the judge, because he can go out and take other cases than those in the United States court.

Mr. FULTON. The Senator should take into consideration, in the first place, that United States district attorneys really do very little work outside of that office.

Mr. SCOTT. But they may do it.
Mr. FULTON. If they have time, yes; but as a matter of fact, they can do little else than attend to their official duties. But a district attorney is appointed for a term of four years only. He is not allowed to retire on a pension at the end of his A district judge and a circuit judge are appointed for life, and after reaching a certain age they are allowed to retire on pay for the remainder of their lives. That is a very great consideration, and there is very marked difference between their situation and the situation of district attorneys

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, the Senator from Oregon has made the remark I wanted to make; that is to say, I wanted to call attention, and with that I am content-

Mr. FULTON. I hope the Senator will allow me to apologize to him. I wish he might have made the remarks, because he would have made them so much better.

Mr. FORAKER. That would have been impossible.

What I wanted to call attention to is simply this, that we have fixed the salary of the circuit judges at $10,000. In addition to that, they are to be allowed the per diem when they are absent from home in the discharge of their duties. Every lawyer here and every Senator who is familiar with the business transacted in the courts knows that the district judges do quite as much work as the circuit judges do. There has always been a distinction in the salaries paid to the circuit and district judges, respectively; largely, as the Senator suggested, because of the rank of the judges. That distinction heretofore has been, I believe, measured by $1,000 per annum. We have increased the salary of the circuit judges from $7,000 a year to $10,000 a year, and have left to them the per diem.

Now, it is proposed to increase the salary of the district judges only $2,000, making the distinction $2,000 in salary, and allowing the district judges, as the law stands to-day, no per diem and nothing on account of expenses when they are called away from home. That, I think, is unfair, and it is more because of the manifest unfairness of it that I have offered this amendment than with a view to fixing the salary at what will be an adequate compensation.

It will be remembered that the district court has exclusive jurisdiction of all criminal cases, exclusive jurisdiction in admiralty, and exclusive jurisdiction in bankruptcy, and that the district judges constantly sit as circuit judges to transact all the nisi prius business of the circuit. The circuit judges sit almost exclusively in our part of the country in the court of appeals.

Mr. FULTON. They do everywhere. Mr. FORAKER. I think they do everywhere, as the Senator from Oregon suggests.

If it be right for the circuit judges to have $10,000 a year, taking that as a standard which we have already adopted, it seems to me we ought not to make this distinction, cutting the district judges down, or leaving the district judges at $8,000 a year, as proposed by the Appropriations Committee. It is too much of a distinction, and it is because of the injustice manifest in it that I want to correct it if possible. We considered this very carefully in the Judiciary Committee, and when it was decided that the circuit judges should have $10,000, I think every member of the committee felt that if the circuit judges should have $10,000 the district judges should have $9,000, the figure at which we finally fixed their salary.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. FORAKER: Certainly.

Mr. FULTON. Before the Senator takes his seat, I wish to ask him if he agrees with me that the wiser plan would be to give the circuit judges $9,000 and the district judges $8,000, and if he would make a motion to reconsider the vote by which $10,000 was given to the circuit judges?

Mr. FORAKER. I understand the committee felt that $10,000 for circuit judges was none too much. I do not think $9,000 is too much, and if the salary of the district judges be fixed at $8,000, I will feel like it was an unjust discrimination against the district judges to fix the circuit judges' salaries at $10,000.

Mr. FULTON. I call the attention of the Senator to the fact that when the question was agreed to in the Judiciary Committee the Senator, I think, took the position that $10,000 was not too much. At that time the proposition was to cut off all other allowances. As it stands in the bill it is $10,000 with allowances.

Mr. FORAKER. I understand. Mr. FULTON. Should we not reduce the salary to $9,000 and leave the allowances?

Mr. FORAKER. In other words, here in the Senate, acting upon the report made by the Appropriations Committee, we are increasing the salary of the circuit judges beyond what the Judiciary Committee thought they ought to have by allowing them their per diem, which in some instances amounts, perhaps, to more than $1,000 a year, and we are diminishing the salaries of the district judges. I think they ought to be practically the same. In other words, the distinction between the salaries ought to be only that which indicates the difference in the rank of the judges. I hope the day is not far distant when Congress will abolish one court or the other and give all jurisdiction to either a district court or to a circuit court. There is no necessity and no propriety in having two classes of judges. district judges and circuit judges.

Mr. CLAY. Mr. President, I want to occupy merely one minute to explain my vote.

I have been voting in favor of these reductions, but I am now going to vote to sustain the Committee on Appropriations in fixing the salary in regard to the district judges. I believe we ought to reduce the salary of the circuit judges at least to $9,000, and that motion can be made after the bill goes into the Senate. When the report came to us from the Judiciary Committee, that report, we understood, unanimously fixed the salary of the circuit judges at $10,000 and of the district judges at $9,000 per year. The Committee on Appropriations reduced the salary of the district judges to $8,000 per year and let the salary of the circuit judges stand.

Heretofore, as was said by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. Foraker], the district judges in this country have been drawing a salary of $6,000 per annum and the circuit judges $7,000 per annum. The difference between the two was only $1,000. It is manifestly, to my judgment, wrong to fix the salary of the circuit judges at $10,000 and then fix the district judges' salaries at $7,000 or $8,000. Heretofore the margin between the two has been only $1,000 per annum. I find that in many of the States it is as in the State represented by my colleague and myself. Since I have been in the Senate we have provided for courts to be held at four or five different places in the northern district, causing the district judge to travel sometimes 100 miles or 150 miles for the purpose of holding court. I have been informed as to his expenses, but not by him. I have no letter from a judge to read on this occasion, and I am glad that he has not written me any to read. I have understood that his expenses amount to at least from $1,700 to $2,000 per annum.

What do you do? You simply fix the salary of the circuit judges at $10,000 per annum and allow them railroad fare and traveling expenses, and you fix the salary of your district judges at $8,000 and compel them in many instances to go over the different sections of their district and hold court without a single dollar appropriated for the purpose of paying their expenses.

I do not believe we can justify fixing the salary of the circuit judges at $10,000 and of the district judges at $7,000 or $8,000. I hope that the Senate will vote to reduce the salaries of the circuit judges to $9,000 and give the district judges at least $8,000.

Mr. President, just a word further and I am through. I do not believe myself in insinuations. It is a most serious charge, if it be true, that any of the district judges or circuit judges are on the pay roll of any corporation while they are holding the office of judge. If a Senator or anybody else knows of any such judge, he ought to be specified and named, and the charges should be made against him and not made against the judiciary throughout the length and breadth of the country. I believe that the hope and future safety of this Nation to a large extent depends upon an upright, pure, honest, and fearless judiciary; and under no circumstances ought we to reflect upon our federal or state judiciary unless we specify the charge and name the judges, with the proof to sustain the charge.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, in considering my vote on this question I am not governed at all in any instance by the individual merit of any judge. I am not disposed to inquire as to the relative ability of the officer. The salary is directed to the office and not to the particular man occupying it. If we were to adopt a different rule, we would have a scale of salaries that would be based upon the record of the efficiency, real or otherwise, of each of these judges. We must bear that in mind in approaching this subject.

Some comment has been made as what judges could earn if they were practicing at the bar. In my judgment, that is not a proper consideration in determining this question, because judges come and go, as other men in position, and it might be that there would be an incumbent upon the district bench who, in point of ability or of earning capacity, would rank far ahead of any other judge upon the bench in the United States. I think that emphasizes my suggestion that the consideration is the office and not the particular incumbent of the office.

The compensation paid to judges is not based upon the law of barter or exchange of position. We do not select men in appointing judges because of the extent of their practice as attornews or the extent of their income. We select them because of the fitness which they possess for the performance of those duties. It is the office itself that we are to consider in deter-mining the question of salaries.

It is a coordinate branch of the Government, comparatively few in numbers, and yet far from being the least important of the coordinate branches of the Government. They control the action of the President of the United States when occasion re-They stand between the people and the Constitution of the United States, against encroachment upon the rights of the people under the Constitution.

We have never in the history of this country treated the judiciary with the dignity and respect to which it was entitled. The Chief Justice of the United States is the single head of a coordinate branch of the Government, as the President is the single head of a coordinate branch of the Government. Compare the compensation which these offices command. The Chief Justice of the United States is his official title. He performs functions under the Constitution other than those of presiding over the Supreme Court. In the presumption of law he is, by direct provision of the Constitution, the single head. Yet we compare his salary upon the basis of what duties he has to perform, how many hours a day he must work, what his expenses of living may be. That is not a fair basis of comparison. The dignity of the office and its relation to the Government are the only considerations that should guide us in determining the compensation that shall be commensurate with the rank and dignity of the head of one of the coordinate branches of

Mr. President, as to the district judges, I would not consider the amount of labor that they perform or the number of days they may be occupied in the performance of their duties. Neither would I do that with the circuit judges. Our circuit judges to-day in every part of the country sit almost exclusively in the circuit court of appeals, only occasionally sitting in the circuit and performing the functions which but a quarter of a century ago was their every-day performance of duty

I think I may say confidently that within the very near future the Congress of the United States will be called on to pass upon the question of the consolidation of the circuit and district courts. A commission that was appointed by Congress to report upon the revision of the laws has recommended that the duties now performed under the provisions regulating the circuit courts shall all be performed by the district courts; that there shall be but one court for the trial, consideration, and determination of all causes of a federal character primarily, and that it shall be called the "district court," carrying with it the jurisdiction that now rests in the district and circuit courts; that the circuit courts of appeal shall be abolished; that the circuit court shall be an appellate court from the district court, and that an appeal shall lie from the circuit court, within certain limitations, to the Supreme Court of the United States. I think I may safely say that there is a very strong sentiment in favor of this change. When that time comes we shall of necessity have more district judges than we have at the present time, because their duties will be largely increased. The circuit judges will be less in number, because they will constitute only an appellate court for each circuit.

Now, in view of this fact, in view of this position that it is the office and not the individual judge, why should we hesitate to make the compensation, if we may term it such, of these judges commensurate with the dignity of their office as well as with the duties which they perform?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Idaho what exigency there is which forces this increase of salary upon us now. Certainly there is no constitutional barrier against increasing these salaries as these bills are reported from time to time. The same argument does not apply in this case that applies to the presidential office. Then why should we not wait until the income of the Government is sufficiently well assured to justify us in the expectation that we shall be dealing with a surplus and not with a deficit?

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, the Senator from Michigan asks what exigency exists. It is the accumulated exigency of asks what eargency exists. It is the accumulated exigency of fair treatment of a coordinate branch of the Government. That is all. The fact that we have erred in the past, or failed in the performance of our duty, should not deter us from the performance of our duty at this hour. I have not taken into consideration the condition of the Treasury of the United States. There has not been, and there never will be, a time when we shall be justified There has not in failing to do justice because we can not afford to do it. The Government of the United States is not in danger of becoming insolvent any more than the farmer is in danger of becoming insolvent because one branch of his industry fails to be profitable and other branches become profitable. So I will drop out of consideration the question of the condition of the Treasury of the United States. We will attend to the condition of the Treasury of the United States when we come to provide for the revenues of the Government. That is the time to consider the Treasury of the United States.

I am not in favor of extravagance in government, but I am in favor of a fair and impartial recognition of the separate branches of this Government in determining the compensation that shall represent not what they could earn to-day, because there is no equality in the amount of duty which each performs, but what the office should represent in the determina-tion of the question of the compensation going with the office.

There is not an officer of the Government that could not live on less than the salary which he gets. If we were to under-take to determine or to weigh the question in the balance of absolute necessity, we would cut all salaries down, but we weigh them rather with reference to the question of a proper and dignified provision to those who, sacrificing personal interest, give all their services to the country.

What class of officers gives so large a proportion of their time to the public service as do the judges of the courts? no holiday for them; their session does not begin or end, as ours does, with a long interval between. A judge is either sitting to hear the cause or sitting in judgment upon it. His mind is charged with the performance of his duty as judge as much when he is in vacation as when he is on the bench. Men who know how the mind of a competent lawyer is constituted know that he is trying his case from the time he wakes until he sleeps, so long as he lives; and if he has the instinct of the lawyer in him, with the judge, actuated by that sense of duty that controls him, it is the same.

Mr. President, I have felt humiliated when I have seen justices of the Supreme Court, from financial necessity, perhaps, walking from their homes to the place of their performance of duty-men who, as I say, stand for the Government itself, who can reach out their hands and stay our action or determine its scope and effect; men who are called upon to weigh the action of every other man who stands to represent the people in the functions of government. What higher duty is there? What duty that carries with it more of the dignity of the Government?

Their mouths are closed by propriety; they can not appeal to our committees and present their ideas. They can not go out among the people and ask them what they think they are entitled to. They are sitting there waiting for our voluntary action to relieve them, and are not even permitted by the rules of propriety to suggest a reason or argument or an occasion for the consideration of their rights. They are separated like anchorites from the great body of their fellow-citizens by the rules of propriety; are withdrawn from public participation in public affairs, because, forsooth, they would be charged with violating the proprieties of their office. We set them off there upon the cold and silent throne of justice, where our rights as citizens of this country are adjudicated. So when, therefore, we stand here and quibble as to whether their pay should be $7,000 or $8,000 or $9,000 or $10,000 it is trivial and petty. It is the office for which we speak, the dignity of the Government, and behind it all the question of fairness in the consideration of the rights of these public officers.

Mr. DIXON. Mr. President, I sincerely dislike to weary the Senate with any observations of my own at this time; but, in view of the statement of the acting chairman of the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations that the governmental revenues would fall short $150,000,000 for the present fiscal year, it seems to me it is at least inopportune to now propose the increase of salaries for the federal judiciary. For that reason, no matter what may be the argument for or against, this particular time, to say the least of it, is inopportune for increasing salaries, except in the case of the President.

I do not believe in this discrimination that the real yardstick of measurement of the federal judge's salary has really been used. In the first place, the salary is for life. I apprehend that the average federal judge when he goes on the bench is probably 55 years of age. I doubt whether the average federal judge serves over fifteen years, and when reaching the age of 70 he retires with a salary for life, which, I think, would average at least one-half the length of time he serves upon the bench.

If that be true, instead of a United States district judge at this time really receiving $6,000 per annum, in actual results we give him $6,000 a year for the net salary and 50 per cent in his retired pay; and I think it is not too much of an estimate to say that that would give him $3,000 more, or $9,000 a year. I think the average office expenses of the lawyer in practice, counting his rent, stenographer, and office expenses generally, would easily reach $2,500 a year. If you take these figures the district judge, now receiving on the face of the law annually $6,000 a year, is drawing a salary equivalent to $11,500 as compared with the lawyer in average practice. Under the bill as reported by the committee, taking the basis of pay at $8,000 a year, with this same yardstick of measurement it will make the federal district judge's salary $14,500 a year for the actual time he serves. If you adopt the amendment offered by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. Foraker] to make the salary $9,000 a year, using this same yardstick of comparison, in reality you will pay your district judges $16,000 per annum.

A few minutes ago, while this debate was going on, I sent up to the library to get some tables which would show the highest salaries paid the chief justices of the different States in this Union; and, to my surprise, I find from the list that only six States in the United States at this time pay to the chief justices of their highest appellate courts a salary equal to what the district federal judges receive under the present law, which was passed three years ago. Taking the amendment of the committee at $8,000 per annum, only six States at this time pay their chief justices the same salary, and that does not take into consideration the fact that the federal judges draw their salaries for the entire period of their lives. Taking the amendment offered by the Senator from Ohio, only four States in the Union pay their chief justices the same salary as it is proposed to pay the eighty or ninety district judges of the United States. If you take the real scale of pay, represented by the salary earned while actually in office, plus the average pension paid after retirement from the bench, there is not a single State in the Union to-day that pays its chief justice a salary equal to the present salary of the federal district judges except the great Empire State of New York.

Let us call the roll of States and see. The great State of Alabama pays its chief justice a salary of $5,000 a year. He is elected for a period of not over six years, I apprehend, has to pay campaign expenses, and retires at the end of his term with no pension for life. He receives, as I have said, a salary of $5,000. California pays its chief justice $8,000; Arkansas,

$3,000; Colorado, $5,000; Connecticut, $4,500-Mr. FLINT. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the yield to the Senator from California? Does the Senator from Montana

Mr. DIXON. With pleasure.
Mr. FLINT. I want to call the attention of the Senator from Montana to the fact, which has been brought out in the discussion here to-day with reference to whether the people desire to be taxed to pay their judiciary, that in the State of California the question was determined by a constitutional amendment, fixing the salary of our chief justice at $8,000 a

Mr. DIXON. That was fixed by a constitutional amendment? Mr. FLINT. Yes, sir. Mr. BULKELEY. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. DIXON. Certainly.
Mr. BULKELEY. The statement the Senator has read in regard to the salary of the chief justice of Connecticut puts the amount as it was fixed some years ago. It has been since changed and increased to $6,000 or $6,500, instead of $4,500.

Mr. DIXON. I am reading from the December issue of Law Notes. But even if Connecticut gives her chief justice a salary of $6,500, we are paying the federal district judges in reality at this time 50 per cent—yes, 75 per cent—more than the State of Connecticut pays its chief justice.

Mr. WARREN. May I ask the Senator a question?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. DIXON. With pleasure.

Mr. WARREN. Perhaps I did not pay close attention at the time the Senator amplified his statement. If I remember correctly, he said that by using some kind of a yardstick the district judges would receive some fourteen or fifteen thousand Will he state how he makes that out? dollars.

Mr. DIXON. I make it out in this way: I said a while ago that I think the average federal judge does not serve over fifteen years in actual time on the bench. I took an arbitrary statement that the average federal judge is probably 55 years

Mr. WARREN. Right at that point, I think that might hold true as to the Supreme Court of the United States, but I hardly think it would hold true as to the district judges, because, so far as my observation has gone, they are usually under 55, the age the Senator named, when they enter upon their service.

Mr. DIXON. The statement I made was that if a district judge served fifteen years on the bench and retired at an average period of life and lived on an average seven and a half age period of the and river on an average seven and a narryears after retirement, it would in reality make the present salary of $6,000 a year equal to $9,000 per annum while he was serving actually on the bench. To that I added $2,500 as the general office expenses of a lawyer in active practice, who was fitted under ordinary conditions to be made a federal judge.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator can hardly add that to the salary, because that provides simply what he pays out to others for doing his work. That would hardly be part of the salary.

Mr. DIXON. But the thing I wanted to bring out was that the present salary of $6,000 per annum, now paid for life, was actually equivalent to a lawyer in actual practice earning under these conditions $11,500 per year; that is, if the salary as fixed by the bill as reported is adopted it would be equal to an actual gross earning capacity for a lawyer in active practice of $14,500; and, if fixed under the amendment of the Senator from Ohio, of $16,000 per annum.

But, for the benefit of the Senate, I want to read the list But, for the benefit of the Senate, I want to read the list as to the salaries of the chief justices in some other States. The State of Delaware pays its chief justice $3,000; Florida, $3,000; Georgia, $3,000; Idaho, $3,000; Illinois, $10,000; Indiana, $6,000; Iowa, $4,000; Kansas, $3,000; Kentucky, $5,000; Louisiana, $5,000; Maine, $5,000—

Mr. BACON. I want to say to the Senator, in order that he may be correct, that while I can not now state the figure, I am quite sure the amount of salary paid to the chief justice in Georgia has been raised, though not to the figure that is now paid to the federal district judges. I have forgotten the amount, but I say it is not as much as we pay to the district

Mr. DIXON. It is still not so much as we pay United States district judges.

Mr. BACON. I am quite sure it is below the salary of the United States district judge, but what the exact figure is I

Mr. DIXON. Maryland pays her chief justice $4,500; Massachusetts, $8,500; Michigan, $8,000; Minnesota, $5,000; Missouri, $4,500; Montana, $6,000; Nebraska, $2,500—
Mr. BROWN. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. DIXON. With pleasure.
Mr. BROWN. I desire to call the Senator's attention to the fact that the people of Nebraska, by constitutional amendment, have increased the salaries of the judges this year to $4,500.

Mr. DIXON. But still that is 50 per cent less than the actual amount paid the federal district judges.

I have now a later number of the Law Notes, giving three or four corrections as stated by Senators during the reading. New Hampshire pays her chief justice $3,500; New Jersey, $10,000; North Carolina, $3,000—

Mr. OVERMAN. I will say that we have increased the salary $500, making it $3,500.

Mr. DIXON. The great State of North Carolina, under the statement of the Senator from that State, now pays its chief justice $3,500, only a little more than one-third of the actual figures that are in the bill, and, as a matter of fact and coldblooded financiering, not over 20 per cent of the real amount that a district judge of the United States draws at this time, taking into consideration his life pension.

To continue the list, North Dakota pays her chief justice $4,000; the great State of Ohio pays her chief justice

$6,500-

Mr. FORAKER. How much?

Mr. DIXON. Six thousand five hundred dollars.
Mr. FORAKER. That is correct. I want to say, if the Senator will allow me, that when I was on the floor a few moments ago some one asked me that question. I was unable to answer; so I sent to the library, or had my clerk go there, and he reported to me that the salary was increased a year or two ago and the supreme court judges now get $6,500.

Mr. DIXON. That is the amount the Law Notes give.

Mr. FORAKER. I think that is less than they ought to have. Mr. DIXON. Pennsylvania pays her chief justice $8,500, only 50 per cent of what a federal district judge really will get under the proposed amendment now pending. Rhode Island pays her chief justice $5,500; South Carolina, $2,800—but the footnote says that that has been increased to $3,000—South Dakota, Says that that has been increased to $5,000—South Dakota, $3,000; Tennessee, $3,500; the great State of Texas, $3,500—
Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. DIXON. Certainly.
Mr. CULBERSON. I am satisfied that the amount stated by the Senator from Montana as to the salary of the chief justice of Texas is incorrect. He is paid $4,000 by the constitution which was adopted in 1876.

Mr. DIXON. All that I know is from the table printed in the Law Notes. Of course, I know nothing about it personally.

Mr. WARREN. I suggest to the Senator from Montana that the table seems to be very imperfect. Judging from the interruptions of various Senators, it does not seem to be reliable.

Mr. DIXON. Including all the corrections, still the salaries paid to the chief justices of the States are not within 60 per cent of the amount we are going to pay the federal district judges under the bill.

Vermont pays her chief justice $3,000—
Mr. PAGE. Mr. President—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Vermont?

Mr. PAGE. Vermont raised the salaries of her judges this year to $4,000.

Mr. DIXON. Four thousand dollars-about 331 per cent of the amount to be paid federal district judges, as provided in the bill.

Mr. DEPEW. Mr. President—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. DIXON. With pleasure. Mr. DEPEW. I should like to ask the Senator from Montana, if he is reckoning that the federal district judge gets $15,000, how much of that is available for his expenses, to pay his bills? As I understand, he now receives $6,000 a year salary. By a computation, something like a life-insurance computation, the Senator figures out that, with his office rent, with the pension he will receive after his retirement, and other considerations, the judge is actually receiving $15,000 a year. has got to support his family, and he actually gets $6,000. How does he get the other $9,000?

Mr. DIXON. I beg pardon of the Senator from New York. I did not say that the judge got that much money. I said that was the equivalent of what a lawyer made in actual practice. I had stated that the judge gets at least 50 per cent more than appears on the face of the salary itself, considering his life pension at full pay on retirement. I am merely reading from this list; but I believe that what I am now reading is as interesting as anything in the debate; and I will read the rest of it.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. DIXON. With pleasure.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I desire to ask for information as to the Senator's computation. For what length of time does he consider the pension?

Mr. DIXON. For half of the service on the bench. Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Then, if a judge has served upon the bench for forty years and retires at the age of 70, the Senator considers the pension up to the age of ninety.

Mr. DIXON. Oh, no. No district judge in the United States, I think, in the whole record of our judicial history, has served that long.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I am trying to get at the basis of the Senator's calculation, not at a particular case.

Mr. DIXON. I say the "average." I think I stated that very fairly.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Is the Senator prepared to say what the average age at retirement has been?

Mr. DIXON. I do not know.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Or is the Senator prepared to say, having figured out this computation carefully, what has been the average length of service of the federal judges upon the bench?

Mr. DIXON. I will take, without knowing what the tables show, the expectancy tables of any of the great life insurance

A federal judge is not an unusual man. companies.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I am simply asking for my own information. If the Senator has made a computation that is exceedingly accurate as to the mathematical part of it in figuring out percentages, I want to know if he is accurate as to the basis of his percentages.

Mr. DIXON. I will say in reply that I know nothing whatever, individually, as to this matter, but I will take the tables of the life insurance companies for the kind of a life a judge lives, and, whatever it may be, submit that to the Senator from Wyoming for his information; but I think I have not missed it very far.

Virginia pays her chief justice $4,200; Washington, $4,000;

West Virginia, $4,500; Wisconsin, $5,000; and Wyoming, $3,000. I think, Mr. President, applying a homely maxim, that charity ought to begin at home. If the legislatures of 46 States in this Union in their combined wisdom have fixed the salaries of their chief judicial officers 50 per cent less than that now paid the federal judges at this particular time, with $150,000,000 deficit facing us for this year, we will agree that, at least, this proposed increase is not opportune.

I have another table in my hand, and I think it might prove of interest. I will not weary the Senate. It is a list of salaries paid to the chief executive officers of 45 States of the Federal Union.

Mr. WARREN. Will the Senator allow me?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. DIXON. With pleasure.
Mr. WARREN. I am going to differ very seriously with the computation the Senator has made of the length of service of the judges and the length of their retirement. In the first place, we have had judges on the Supreme Bench who have served thirty-five to forty years. I think one-third or one-half of the present members of the Supreme Bench are now beyond 70 years of age. They serve long after the age others usually tire of work or until they are incapacitated. So, taking those who commenced earlier than the age the Senator gives and those who served later, I believe he should divide it by about three, and that about one-third of the amount he has estimated for retirement would come nearer the true amount than the figures he has given us.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. President-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. DIXON. Certainly.
Mr. FULTON. I wish to ask the Senator if he read from the list on his desk the salary paid to the supreme judges of

I read it.

Mr. FULTON. I was out of the Chamber for just a moment. I saw the list the Senator has now, which quotes the salary at $2,000, and if the Senator so read it, it is inaccurate. Probably it was compiled from the provision in the constitution of Oregon, which fixes the salary at $2,000. But the legislature has since increased it. I am not quite certain myself whether the judges get $4,500 or $5,000, but it is either one or the other.

Mr. DIXON. The Senator from Oregon is correct. I find in the January number of Law Notes a letter from W. A. Robbins, of Portland, Oreg., who says:

In Volume No. XII of your Law Notes, I notice on page 168 thereof, under the title "Underpaid judiciary," you state that the chief justice of the State of Oregon gets a salary of $2,000 per annum. I beg to call your attention to the fact that this is an error, as the chief justice of this State receives a salary of $2,000, together with an additional salary of $2,500 annually as a full compensation for the additional labor in holding court away from the capital, to wit, at Pendleton, Oreg. (See Session Laws, 1903, p. 182.)

W. A. Robbins.

W. A. ROBBINS.

Mr. FULTON. Yes.
Mr. RAYNER. What did you give as the salary of the appellate judges of Maryland?

Mr. DIXON. The Law Notes for December gives it at $4,500. Mr. RAYNER. You will have to add $1,300 to that. My colleague, who has definite information on the subject, says we pay them $5,800 for salary and expenses.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. Thirteen hundred dollars was added last year for expenses.

Mr. DIXON. I wish the Senator from Maryland would repeat his statement.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. The court of appeal judges of Maryland now get $5,800. The compensation was raised at the last session of the legislature by $1,300 for expenses. The associate judges of the State get $3,600.

Mr. DIXON. The associate justices $3,600?

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. The circuit judges, $3,600.

Mr. DIXON. And the chief justice gets $4,500, with $1,300 for expenses; $5,800 in all?

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. Yes.

Mr. RAYNER. All the appellate judges get $5,800-every one

Mr. DIXON. That includes salary and expenses?

Mr. RAYNER. Salary and expenses.

Mr. DIXON. As against $10 a day for a district judge when holding court outside of his own district?

For the further information of the Senate I want to read what the 45 States of the Union pay their chief executive officers; and I find that only 7 of the 45 States pay their chief executive officers a salary equal to that now paid the federal district judges. Alabama pays her governor $5,000. He is elected for four years, after a somewhat strenuous and ex-tensive campaign, and can not succeed himself. Arkansas pays tensive campaigh, and can not steeled misself. Arkansas pays her governor $3,000 a year; California, $6,000; Colorado, $5,000; Connecticut, $4,000; Delaware, $2,000; Florida, $5,000; Georgia, $5,000; Idaho, $5,000; Illinois, $12,000; Indiana, $8,000; Iowa, $5,000; Kansas, $5,000; Kentucky, $6,500; Louisiana, $5,000; Maine, $3,000; Maryland, $4,500; Massachusetts, $8,000; Michi-

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. DIXON. Certainly.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Michigan has been a little more liberal toward her chief executive since that book was pub-It is $5,000 now.

Mr. DIXON. Still a thousand dollars less than the federal judges get, and $4,000 less than is proposed under this pending amendment.

Minnesota, $7,000; Mississippi, $4,500; Missouri, $5,000; Montana, $5,000; Nebraska, $2,500; Nevada, $4,000; New Hampshire, $2,000; New Jersey, $10,000—

Mr. GALLINGER. I will state that New Hampshire has grown a little more liberal, and pays $3,000 now.

Mr. DIXON. The latest return from New Hampshire is $3,000 per annum.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is right.

Mr. DIXON. One-half of the present salary of a district judge and just one-third of the salary proposed by the pending amendment.

Mr. KEAN. Did the Senator read New Jersey?
Mr. DIXON. The great State of New Jersey stands within one of the top of the list—$10,000 per annum.
Mr. KEAN. That is correct. I suppose the Senator, when he finishes this comparison, will also compare the compensation of the members of the legislatures of the States with the compensation of the Members of the House of Representatives and the Senate.

Mr. DIXON. If Senators desire to hear it, I shall be pleased to entertain them.

Mr. du PONT. Mr. President—
The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Delaware?

Mr. DIXON. Certainly.

Mr. du PONT. I should like to ask the Senator from Montana what salary he stated that the governor of Delaware receives?

Mr. DIXON. As given in the New York World Almanac for 1908, from which I read—
Mr. RAYNER. I should like to inform the Senator from

Montana-

Mr. DIXON. It is $2,000. Mr. du PONT. I should like to say that the salary of the governor of Delaware is $4,000.

Mr. DIXON. Two-thirds of the salary at present paid to district judges, and about 40 per cent of that proposed to be paid to them annually under the pending amendment.

Mr. RAYNER. I suppose the Senator is going down the line, and will presently get to justices of the peace and constables. We pay our members of the state assembly $450 per He might cite that as a good reason-

Mr. DIXON. That is probably the measure of their worth Maryland. I know nothing about that. New York pays her in Maryland.

governor $10,000.

Mr. RAYNER. I am glad to say that their work is very much better than the work of the general assembly in the Senator's State, from all the evidences we have had.

Mr. DIXON. I will say to the Senator from Maryland we have had some that I do not think we could get up an argument about.

Mr. RAYNER. We have had some of the best men in our State in the assembly. I myself was in the state assembly. [Laughter.] Let me finish the sentence. I was in the general assembly with two ex-Cabinet officers—Philip Francis Thomas, who was Secretary of the Treasury and was elected United States Senator, and Montgomery Blair, who was Postmaster-General in Lincoln's Cabinet—and a dozen other distinguished men in my State, and they came there for $450 a year. So if you are citing those cases, I think you might go down the line.

Mr. DIXON. I am merely citing this to show the wisdom of the average representatives of the people in all of the States of the Union with respect to the offices named.

North Carolina pays her governor $4,000, and he can not succeed himself, as the junior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. Overman] remarks. North Dakota, $3,000; Ohio, $10,000; Oklahoma, $4,500; Oregon, $5,000; Pennsylvania, $10,000; Rhode Island, $3,000; South Carolina, $3,000; South Dakota, $3,000; Tennessee, $4,000; Texas, $4,000; Utah, $4,000; Vermont, $1,500—Mr. PAGE. I should like to say to the Senator that we have raised the salary to $2,500.

Mr. DIXON. Twenty-five hundred dollars, or about onequarter of that fixed for a federal district judge under this amendment.

Virginia, $5,000; Washington, $4,000; West Virginia, $5,000; Wisconsin, $5,000; Wyoming, $2,500.
